Mr. SCOTT. I ask unanimous consent to occupy one minute more.

There was no objection.

Mr. SCOTT. So I say to you gentlemen who have felt yourselves committed to the Grout bill that according to the declaration of the author of that measure the adoption of the pending amendment will change it to such an extent that you will not be bound by that pledge; because in voting for this bill thus amended you will be voting for a bill which is entirely different from the Grout bill—a bill which the author of the measure declares he would not give a rush for, and which would not accomplish what he sought to accomplish when he introduced the bill.

THE BILL AS PASSED.

The following is a copy in full of H. R. 9206 in the form in which it passed the House, changes from the original Grout bill being indicated by italics:

An act to make oleomargarine and other imitation dairy products subject to the laws of any State or Territory or the District of Columbia into which they are transported, and to change the tax on oleomargarine, and to amend an act entitled "An act defining butter, also imposing a tax upon and regulating the manufacture, sale, importation, and exportation of oleomargarine," approved August 2, 1886.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That all articles known as oleomargarine, butterine, imitation butter, or imitation cheese, or any substance in the semblance of butter or cheese not the usual product of the dairy and not made exclusively of pure and unadulterated milk or cream, transported into any State or Territory or the District of Columbia, and remaining therein for use, consumption, sale, or storage therein, shall, upon the arrival within the limits of such State or Territory or the District of Columbia, be subject to the operation and effect of the laws of such State or Territory or the District of Columbia, enacted in the exercise of its police powers to the same extent and in the same manner as though such articles or substances had been produced in such State or Territory or the District of Columbia, and shall not be exempt therefrom by reason of being introduced therein in original packages or otherwise: Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed to forbid any State to permit the manufacture or sale of oleomargarine in any manner consistent with the laws of said State, provided that it is manufactured and sold entirely within the State.

Sec. 2. That the first clause of section 3 of an act entitled "An act defining butter, also imposing a tax upon and regulating the manufacture, sale, importation, and exportation of oleomargarine," approved August 2, 1886, be amended by adding thereto after the word "oleomargarine," at the end of said clause, the following words:

"And any person that sells, vends, or furnishes oleomargarine for the use and consumption of others, except to his own family and guests thereof without compensation, who shall add to or mix with such oleomargarine any ingredient or coloration that causes it to look like butter of any shade of yellow shall also be held to be a manufacturer of oleomargarine within the meaning of said act, and subject to the provisions thereof."

SEC. 3. That section 8 of an act entitled "An act defining butter, also imposing a tax upon and regulating the manufacture, sale, importation, and exportation of oleomargarine," approved August 2, 1886, be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 8. That upon oleomargarine which shall be manufactured and sold, or removed for consumption and use, there shall be assessed and collected a tax of 10 cents per pound, to be paid by the manufacturer thereof; and any fractional part of a pound in a package shall be taxed as a pound: Provided, When oleomargarine is free from coloration or ingredient that causes it to look like butter of any shade of yellow said tax shall be one-fourth of 1 cent per pound. The tax levied by this section shall be represented by coupon stamps; and the provisions of existing laws governing the engraving, issue, sale, accountability, effacement, and destruction of stamps relating to tobacco and snuff, as far as applicable, are hereby made to apply to stamps provided for by this section."

Sec. 4. That the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized and required to cause a rigid sanitary inspection to be made from time to time, and at such times as he may deem necessary, of all factories and storehouses where butter is renovated; and all butter renovated at such places shall be carefully inspected in the same manner and to the same extent and purpose that meat products are now inspected. The quantity and quality of butter renovated shall be reported monthly. All renovated butter shall be designated as such by marks, brands, and labels, and the words "Renovated Butter" shall be printed on all packages thereof, in such manner as may be prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture, and shall be sold only as renovated butter. Any person violating the provisions of this section shall, on conviction thereof, be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall be fined not less than $50 nor more than $500, and imprisoned not less than one month nor more than six months.

The Secretary of Agriculture shall make all needful sanitary and other rules and regulations for carrying this section into effect. And no renovated butter shall be shipped or transported from one State to another or to foreign countries, unless inspected as provided in this section.

Sec. 5. That wholesale dealers in oleomargarine shall keep such books and render such returns in relation thereto as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may, by regulation, require; and such books shall be open at all times to the inspection of any internal-revenue officer or agent. And any person who willfully violates any of the provisions of this section shall for each such offense be fined not less than $50 and not exceeding $500, and imprisoned not less than thirty days nor more than six months.

SEC. 6. This act shall take effect on the 1st day of July, 1902.

Passed by the House of Representatives February 12, 1902.

Attest:

A. McDOWELL, Clerk.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, this is an amendment that has received a great deal of care and consideration from the committee. It has followed the language that is approved, I believe, by the entire committee, both the majority and the minority of members. It was a change that was asked for by the dairy commissioners of several States, and also a change that was also desired by the oleo manufacturers. And at least one manufacturer said at the committee hearings—I quote from Mr. Tillinghast—"If you put in the word yellow, making it read ingredients that caused it to look like yellow butter, that would be satisfactory." So we insert the words "butter of any shade of yellow," and in doing so believe that we have satisfied all parties at interest.

Allow me to further say that this section is substantially the same as in the Grout bill. The attempt has been made to indicate that there was a radical change in the measure. It is not so. This is the Grout bill with the same provisions that the Grout bill contained, only with the limitation that the butter shall not be made in any shade of yellow. This amendment has been asked for by gentlemen on both sides of the House, as I have explained.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. I will.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Can the gentleman state how many different shades of yellow there are?

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. Oh, a great many.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I make the inquiry because I have been informed that there are 40,000 different shades of red and about 30,000 different shades of brown. Is the gentleman able to state how many different shades of yellow this amendment is undertaking to cover?

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. It covers all shades of yellow. The gentleman can make his own estimate.

Mr. OVERSTREET. It covers about 30,000 different shades.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. I would like to ask the gentleman upon what theory does your committee conclude that it ought to be an offense against the law to imitate butter of some shade of yellow and not an offense against the law to imitate butter of any other color?

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. Butter does not have any other color than yellow.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Suppose it was pure white butter?

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. Then it would imitate pure white butter, if you can find such.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Would it not be an offense against the law to make oleomargarine to imitate white butter?

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. Oh, no.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Why should it not be an offense to imitate one as much as to imitate the other?

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. That is a matter for the gentleman to decide for himself.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Why do you discriminate in favor of yellow butter against white butter or any other color?

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. Because yellow is the natural color of butter.

Mr. ALLEN of Kentucky. I would like to ask the gentleman if he regards orange color as synonymous with yellow?

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. I do not. Orange is another color.

Mr. ALLEN of Kentucky. Will that prohibit oleomargarine being colored an orange color?

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. Oh, I do not know as to that, but I have here an expression of opinion from the dairy commissioner of Massachusetts, Mr. Whittaker. I read from a personal letter:

> The oleo people tried to evade our law by making some stuff a much deeper color, so that it could hardly be called an imitation of dairy butter. The trouble with the scheme was that the consumers would not buy such looking stuff, so dark and repulsive.

The color referred to was orange-yellow or a darker shade.

Mr. ALLEN of Kentucky. I will ask the gentleman if it is not the opinion of Mr. Grout, a gentleman who is very earnest in the advocacy of this bill, that the amendment now being offered would not have the effect that the promoters of the bill propose?

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. Mr. Grout is not in issue at this time.

Mr. ALLEN of Kentucky. Is not that his opinion?

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. I do not care to answer. The question is personal to Mr. Grout.

Mr. STEELE (to Mr. ALLEN of Kentucky). You must not ask embarrassing questions.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. It is no embarrassment to me. The committee, not Mr. Grout, are responsible for the terms of this bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, the majority of the Committee on Agriculture brought in the bill with an agreement to strike out the word "yellow," as it appeared in the printed bill before the House. The impression was that would leave the language as follows, "that this tax on this commodity, except when it was free from color or ingredient that made it look like butter." If there was an ingredient in it that made it look like butter in consistency without looking like butter in color, it would leave it subject to this 10-cent tax. During the argument of the case in the House of Representatives the majority of the Committee on Agriculture discovered their error.

They now come in and agree to say in the bill that in order to be held to "look like butter it must be some shade of color." Now, I shall vote for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Connecticut, representing the majority of the committee, because it will leave behind it, if adopted, a less iniquitous bill than the bill would be if the amendment were not adopted, for the simple reason, as I fear, that if the amendment is not adopted then, in my opinion, the question will arise and be adjudicated in favor of the proposition that uncolored oleomargarine might be subjected to tax of this bill, whereas, if it is adopted, it will have to have some color in order to be subject to tax.

Mr. TAWNEY. Let me ask the gentleman if he means to say that this would subject uncolored margarin to taxation? He means to say that it would subject uncolored oleomargarine to the laws of the State.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. In this particular section it would. Subsequently there is another amendment to cure the same defect in the taxation clause, and that is the main thing to be considered.

Mr. SIMS. May I ask the gentleman, a member of the committee, a question? Is it not a fact that there is no such thing as white butter; that it is always some shade of yellow?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I have seen butter as white as my shirt front fresh from the laundry, and every man, I suppose, that lives south of the butter-making blue-grass country and south of the red-clover and timothy country, who has ever seen butter made in the winter time, sees it every year.

Mr. SIMS. I know it is white compared with other butter, but is it white in legal terms?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. It is as white as your shirt front, and whiter than oleomargarine.

Mr. SIMS. Is oleomargarine a pure white?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Almost a pure white; it is the color of white butter, and neither one of them has any shade of yellow at all. Some butter has, and most butter has. Some butter has no shade of yellow at all. The oleo fresh from the factory has no shade of yellow.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted on this amendment.

Mr. HENRY of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. Much has been said on this bill, and what I say now may not change the result of the vote, but I feel I would not be true to the people whom I represent, nor to my own conscience, if I failed to say something on this occasion. If there was not a pound of cotton seed from which the oil is made, one of the ingredients in oleomargarine; if there was not a hoof of beef or of hog raised in my State, and, on the contrary, there was a dairy on every 10 acres of land in my district, I would oppose this bill. Indeed, I will oppose any measure that tends to strike down one product to help another, both equally wholesome. I would oppose any measure which strikes at one enterprise to the upbuilding of another industry.

It might be well for us to consider who the parties are who come to Congress to ask for the passage of such a stringent measure. Taking the report of the committee and the hearings relating to oleomargarine legislation, I find that only those who are directly interested either in the manufacture of butter or the manufacture of oleomargarine have presented anything to your committee tending to enlighten this House. We find by a review of the hearings that the manufacturers of butter urge this measure, and we are willing, therefore, in our desire to arrive at a just conclusion, to leave it to the record in this case and see if they have produced such evidence as would warrant the passage of a bill which will, in my opinion, take away from the States the rights of the States, and which will at once become dangerous and pernicious legislation.

The gentleman from Vermont the other day, in discussing this measure, insists that the objection to it is a mercenary one, and appeals, therefore, to the sense of justice of those who oppose it. I answer him and say that in most of the matters which we have to discuss money in some way or other necessarily figures, that is to say, that in the end all things are determinable by aiding or assisting one in the undoing of another. And while perhaps there may be two interests, as there are, I claim still that it should not be urged that our opposition to this bill is purely mercenary.

I feel that we of the American Congress should raise ourselves above any feeling of interest that we may have in the outcome of any measure that is presented to us for final settlement. We should, as far as possible, be governed by the Constitution of the United States, and never depart from that Constitution so long as it in any way teaches us or leads us to a just, honest, and upright conclusion. Is this measure such a one that follows the Constitution of the United States? We find in section 8 of the said Constitution the declaration "that all tax must be uniform." Can it possibly be urged that the tax on oleomargarine, in the absence of any similar tax upon butter, is uniform? Was such taxation possibly contemplated by the makers of this great law? No one, I take it, will insist that such was the fact. We all know and we all believe that the Constitution was made for all of the people, and that when we attempt by any legislation whatever to so change that Constitution as to put a tax upon one product and not be willing to apply that to a similar one we are departing from the laws laid down to us by our forefathers and are doing that which is assuredly wrong.

All business is legitimate if it does not come within conflict of law, order, and good government, and the very report upon which this bill is based admits that the making of oleomargarine is a legitimate business done in conformity with the law. So the making of butter is a legitimate business. It only differs from the making of oleomargarine in that the ingredients are not identically the same. The oleomargarine, it is true, contains most of the ingredients contained in butter. Indeed, so true is this that even the greatest experts have been unable, and are now unable, to designate the one from the other when the two are presented to them.

I read from page 30 of the hearing in regard to oleomargarine legislation, where a scientist says: "It contains essentially the same ingredients as natural butter from the cow's milk. It is perfectly wholesome and will have as high a nutritious value." Mr. Hoard, when asked the question, "What do you say to that?" answered that he had nothing to say to that; that he had heard that statement made, but still doubted the truthfulness of it.

The chairman of the Agricultural Committee then stated: "We have here the opinions of the following scientists," and named the professor of chemistry at Columbia College, New York; the professors of the University of Virginia and the University of Pennsylvania; of Stevens Institute of Technology, New Jersey; director of agricultural experiment station and ex-professor of agricultural chemistry in Yale College; Professor Caldwell, of Cornell University; the professor of Amherst Agricultural College; Professor Williams, of Missouri State University; Professor Alvord, formerly of Massachusetts Agricultural College and president of the Maryland College of Agriculture, now chief of the Dairy Division of the United States Department of Agriculture, and a number of other professors of chemistry. "The opinion of all of these men is that oleomargarine is wholesome. Would you have your judgment stand, then, against them, or are we to infer they are all prejudiced and among the scientific prostitutes of the age?"

Mr. Hoard answers: "No, sir; I did not say that." "Then I ask you do you consider oleomargarine wholesome or unwholesome?" "I consider it unwholesome."

Now, Mr. Chairman, we are here confronted by a great dairy man, the Hon. W. D. Hoard, chairman of the National Dairy Union, who is willing to put his own personal opinion up against the great scientists of this age and say that oleomargarine is unwholesome, in face of what the different gentlemen I have named, professors from the different institutions, say in regard to it. Does it not then occur to you that the distinguished gentleman, Mr. Hoard, is himself so biased and prejudiced against the manufacture of oleomargarine that he does not apply to it his usual good judgment, but is led off by a feeling that should not affect our minds, and he, therefore, becomes a prejudiced judge, and not one capable of giving a fair opinion? I make this excuse for Mr. Hoard, because no one could question Mr. Hoard's honesty or integrity. Your committee, I am glad to see, has abandoned the very ground taken by Mr. Hoard, and I, possibly, should not have made the reference that I have to Mr. Hoard's testimony but that I desire to show to this House the nature of the testimony given by those who have come here and sought this relief for butter and ask that this curse be put upon oleomargarine.

No man would stand here and say that he would dare ask to put a tax upon one of the great industries so numerous in our country that they might be protected against like industries in some other portions of the country. You certainly would not ask to tax any of the great mills that turn out textile fabrics or cloth of any sort to preserve or protect the old-fashioned spinning wheel or loom, and yet I say to you in all honesty that such taxation would be just as honest and as righteous as the taxation which you here propose to pass. This, I say, would be a piece of rank protectionism and be indefensible.

Much has been said here about the protection of the small farmer who makes a few pounds of butter weekly and takes it to town on Saturday and sells it, and gets in exchange for it something that his family desires. It is urged that the passage of this measure is a protection to that farmer. I deny that such is the case. The small farmer or the large who has a surplus of cream not used in the living of his family may put up a few pounds of butter each week, and is given in exchange for it something from the store.

But that is a small matter when you take into consideration the fact that that same farmer makes his living for his family and educates his children, not from the little butter that he sells, but from that which he raises in his fields. Generally the products that come from his fields are those which go to produce oleomargarine. Several of the chief ingredients in oleomargarine are the beef, the hog, the cotton seed, butter cream, and butter oil. The farmer may not raise beef cattle, but he raises the commodities which feed beef and sustain them and fatten them for market. So in the case of the hog, and the milk, butter, and cream; if any he raises or produces can be sold it is sold in large quantities to the oleomargarine dealer. The sale therefore of a few pounds of butter could not compare with the sale of the different cereals that are mentioned, and also of the sale of the hogs and the cattle, or the food stuff that he makes for them.

The defenders of this measure say that it will not hurt oleomargarine and it will not help butter. Those who say that, though, are members of this House, and not those who have gone before the committee and given their testimony.

I read now, from page 215, from a statement of Mr. H. C. Adams, dairy and food commissioner of Wisconsin, in which he says:

I said that there was no use in beating the devil about the stump, and our purpose in going to Congress with this bill providing for the 10-cent tax on butterine or oleomargarine was to practically prohibit the business of the manufacturing of oleomargarine colored in imitation of butter. Some gentlemen on the committee insist that they understood me to say that it was our deliberate purpose to crush this business of manufacturing oleomargarine.

On page 217, among other things, Mr. Adams said:

We come here to Congress and ask for what we regard as substantially prohibitory tax upon the colored article.

Now, how can any gentleman stand on the floor of this House in the face of that statement and deny the fact that this measure is for the support of dairy butter and for the undoing of oleomargarine? If they urge it in their conclusion, they do so not from the record in this case, not from the statements of the witnesses before this committee, but from their own desire to misstate the facts as they exist. The idea of "not hurting oleomargarine," when from the very lips of the witness (Mr. Adams) he tells you that such is their intention! And that is not all. Governor Hoard says, on page 8:

We do not pretend to be endeavoring to protect the health of the people primarily. We are endeavoring to protect our own pockets and those of consumers who desire to purchase our product.

Nor is that all. Hon. W. W. Grout says, on page 252, in urging the passage of this legislation, and as a witness before the committee, that—

With these two provisions, the States taking up the matter after their own fashion on the anticolor laws, the Government being sure to have their 10-cent tax, there will be a remedy. It is a little like the darky fixing the trap for the coon so that he would get the coon whether he was going or coming. With these two provisions it is likely that oleomargarine will be a thing of the past.

There again, to my mind, there can be no doubt of the intended purpose of this measure as taken from the words of the witnesses who were presented before the committee to urge its presentation here in the House by the committee and its final passage.

Aside from the constitutional wrong which would be committed by the passage of this bill, I would call the attention, Mr. Chairman, of the House to the fact that butter is known to be a disease carrier. It carries germs of certain diseases. This is certain of milk, and it can hardly be doubted that butter may act in the same way; and this is most strongly urged, since in ordinary creaming of milk all but small portions of the bacteria rise with the cream. That has been shown to be true by the report of the health commissioner of the District of Columbia made in 1895, where tuberculosis has been spread through the milk supply; and numerous instances have been observed in which outbreaks of typhoid fever, scarlet fever, and diphtheria have affected those families living in the localities supplied by certain milkmen. The cause of sickness in those families is laid to the milk supply; and it has been found out definitely that the milk supply might serve as a medium of spreading these fevers if it came from the dairy where disease prevailed.

These suggestions of mine are not merely my opinion based upon supposition, but they are my opinion as taken from the statements made by scientific gentlemen who have given this matter study. And I would have the House to understand that I do not make these statements except upon the authority of men who are absolutely unprejudiced and unbiased, and have no reason on earth to make any other than a true statement of the conditions.

So much then for butter. What do we find in regard to oleomargarine? In the first place, the statements of those who have investigated the manufacture of this product are that the manufacture of oleomargarine or butterine in properly constructed factories is much cleaner than the manufacture of butter, and that the larger factories are as nearly perfect in all respects as it is possible to make them.

It is made from the richest and choicest fat of the beef. That fat is taken before the animal is skinned, thoroughly washed, thrown into a vat of ice water, to stand until the following day. Then it is cut up fine and cooked. After being cooked it is placed in linen cloths and the oil is extracted in a hydraulic press. The residue left in the cloths after pressing is commercially known as sterin. The tallow element is therefore effectually removed. The lard, neutral lard, is obtained from the leaf lard of the pig. The leaf is taken out as soon as the animal is killed, thoroughly washed, and put in a freezer for twenty-four hours. It is then cut into shreds and cooked, and after straining presents a snowy white color. But this is not all. Both the pig and the cattle are examined by Government inspectors before and after killing to see that diseased animals are excluded. Oleo oil and neutral lard, therefore, are the basis of the so-called oleomargarine. These are churned with cream or milk, salted, and colored with annotto, run through cold water, worked in a butter-worker, and placed in suitable packages, and labeled, according to the United States laws, "Oleomargarine."

It is apparent, therefore, that nothing but the most wholesome butter fats are used and that the most scrupulous precautions as regards cleanliness are observed in the manipulations. And this extends not only to the materials used, but also to the utensils, workrooms, and the persons and clothing of the employees.

Dr. Ames, of the United States Navy, said before the Senate committee that "the manufacture of butterine in properly constructed factories is much cleaner than the manufacture of butter."

Comparison, therefore, when drawn between butter of the dairy and oleomargarine, finds everything in favor of oleomargarine. Several gentlemen in this House have given utterance to language only calculated, as I take it, for home consumption. The protection of the poor, they say—the protection of those who want to buy butter and are unable to do so because none is offered. In all seriousness I ask these gentlemen, Have they read the evidence here, or do they represent a district where butter is made and where they must look to the votes of the dairymen for their return to Congress? Have they examined the record and seen where fraud is perpetrated in the making of butter? I dare say they have not, or if they have, they have not given the question the honest consideration it deserves, but have tried to frame their language to suit those whom they wish to help or receive help from.

No, Mr. Chairman, the fraud is not all on one side, and while we who support the amendment to this bill would not for one moment be understood as abetting a fraud in the sale of oleomargarine, we do urge that it be given fair treatment, for we find abundance of fraud in the manufacture of butter, as I will show.

I read now from page 229 of the hearing relating to oleomargarine legislation:

In regard to what is known as renovated butter or process butter. That butter, which is known to be picked up at hotels and other places and sent into cities where they have those creameries for putting butter through what is known as a renovated process, where they boil it, and add a little cream, and churn it up, and send it out upon the market.

Mr. Adams states, on page 229:

We have a renovated-butter factory in our State, Illinois. We do not sell it in our State, however, because we require it to be branded; but it is shipped out of the State.

The question was then asked Mr. Adams how this renovated butter was made. He says:

They take the cheap butters, some of them are rancid, some of them tolerably good, but they are lacking in grade and not merchantable. They take them and mix them together and melt them, then chill the melted butter in cold water. Of course, when they are melted they become of the same consistency and of the same color; the product becomes uniform; then it is chilled and churned in milk and resalted.

Mr. Adams states further:

There is no particular objection to the process. The trouble with renovated butter is that, although when it is first made it is pretty good, it goes off rapidly in flavor, and it is a fraud to sell it for creamery butter, which it is not. That fraud is often perpetrated, and there is no defense for it.

Now, then, Mr. Chairman, we also find fraud in the making of butter. We also have the statement of the distinguished gentleman, Mr. Adams, that this fraud is perpetrated upon the people; that the cheap butters, the rancid butters, and the tolerably good butters and that lacking in grade and not merchantable are all taken together and mixed.

And while his own State, that of Illinois, has placed a ban upon the sale of such butter, yet he admits that that butter is sent outside of the State and sold for creamery butter. And yet he says that this bill is to prevent fraud, when we have his own statement that fraud is being perpetrated in the making of butter such as I have described, which is, as the testimony shows, one of the greatest industries of the butter trade. The very butter that we are told comes from the farmer is, as we are also told, of a low grade, and does not keep and becomes rancid; that very butter is the butter that is worked up, renovated, put through this process, and distributed to the people.

Some gentlemen here might suggest, however, that oleomargarine is made of refuse fats; in fact, that has been stated by Mr. Hoard; but the proof is not with these gentlemen, as is shown from the testimony of Prof. George M. Kober, who has recently qualified himself as expert of hygiene and bacteriological studies. He says on page 50 of the hearing:

Oleomargarine can not be made from rancid fat, and in its manufacture great care must be exercised to exclude any material however slightly tainted. It can not be made from fats having a marked or distinctive taste, and its flavor is derived wholly from the milk or genuine butter employed in its manufacture. It contains, as a rule, less water than does genuine butter, and consequently any difference in food value is in its favor. It undergoes decomposition much more slowly and may be kept many months without becoming rancid. Many comparative studies have been made on this point and results generally have shown what I have said.

We have, therefore, Mr. Chairman, the admission of fraud by the butter people in the making of butter, and the charges of fraud by the butter people against oleomargarine, not from the manner in which it is made, but from the manner in which it is disposed. To quote Governor Hoard once again, we find that he insists, on page 9 and page 15, on the large use of refuse matter in the making of oleomargarine. He says:

It has been frequently charged that the fat from horse butcheries is made up into oleo oil, and also that fats taken from animals which have died a natural death from disease have also been so utilized. While we have spent time and money seeking evidence of these things, I desire to lay before you for your mature consideration the fact that in no other way can we account for the production of the amount of oleo oil that is consumed and exported in this country. During the fiscal year of 1899-1900 there were, according to the Treasury Department reports, 142,000,000 pounds of oleo oil exported from this country. The same Department shows that in the same year 24,000,000 pounds were used in the manufacture of oleomargarine in this country. This is a total supply of 166,000,000 pounds for the year. Now, where did this come from? How much oleo oil do cattle make per head?

The statement made before the Senate Committee on Agriculture in 1886 by Elmer E. Washburn, a live-stock dealer in Chicago, showed that from 148,893 head of cattle slaughtered in that city by one of the largest packing concerns there was an average of 61.5 pounds of fat in those animals used in oleo oil, and that those 61.5 pounds made 28.1 pounds of oleo oil, which goes to prove that there is less than 1 pound of oleo oil to 2 pounds of fat. If there were 28.1 pounds of oleo in each of the 5,000,000 head of cattle slaughtered in this country during the same year, this would account for only 140,000,000 of the 166,000,000 pounds in sight. This leaves 24,000,000 pounds to be accounted for. But the oleo people, in all their declarations to Congress and manifestoes to the public, claim that only the finest caul fat of the steer is used in the manufacture of oleomargarine.

Experiments made by our present Secretary of Agriculture while dean of agriculture of the Iowa College showed that in 30 steers, averaging in weight 1,508 pounds in weight, there was an average of but 37.66 pounds of caul fat. As it is well known that 1,200 pounds would be a heavy average for the general run of animals marketed there would not be found more than an average of 30 pounds of caul fat in each. As Mr. Washburn's testimony is that it takes more than 2 pounds of raw fat to make 1 pound of oleo oil, it is plain that the average animal will not produce more than 15 pounds of oleo oil from its caul fat. At this rate we can account for but 75,000,000 of the 166,000,000 pounds of oleo oil that makes its appearance upon the market.

These figures have been placed before the oleomargarine makers, and they challenged to show the origin of this extra oleo oil. They have never made any attempt to show us how they get 166,000,000 pounds of oleo oil out of 5,000,000 head of cattle. We are bound to presume, therefore, that they have recourse to some source of supply regarding which they do not care to take the public into their confidence.

On page 15 Mr. Hoard says, in answer to question by Mr. Allen:

Mr. ALLEN. Then how do you account for the balance of oleomargarine in the country?

Mr. HOARD. In my opinion it is made from the refuse fats, as stated.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. WADSWORTH). How many millions of oleo oil used in a year?

Mr. HOARD. Let me go over that again.

Mr. Hoard reread a part of his prepared paper covering this subject.

The CHAIRMAN. That is what I insisted, that 75,000,000 of the 166,000,000 pounds are those accounted for.

Mr. HOARD. This is so, provided that the statement of the oleomargarine manufacturer is true, that they make it only from caul fat.

Mr. MOODY. Now, if they make it from caul fat you leave it to inference where the other comes from: whether it is from the garbage wagon or where?

Mr. HOARD. Yes; I leave it to inference.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I invite your attention and the House to pages 201 and 202 of the hearing, which contains a statement of the Hon. William M. Springer, representing the National Live Stock Association of the United States, which is a voluntary association, and its membership represents nearly every State in the Union and in all of those where live stock is raised to any extent, and many where only a little is done. Mr. Springer, among other things, said:

There is one other point to which I want to call your attention before I close—that is as to the amount of oleo oil produced in this country.

That argument of Governor Hoard was very ingenious, and it left the impression upon this committee, if you believed his statements, that it would be impossible to have that amount of production of oleo oil in this country unless resort was made to the questionable places to which he called attention, and therefore it was intimated that the manufacturers of oleomargarine must use impure materials in order to make their products. Gentlemen, it seems to me that that is a slander upon the manufacturers of oleomargarine which has all the elements of a criminal libel—to pass upon an honest industry such an imputation as to their goods as that contained in the extract which I have quoted.

If such an imputation was cast upon the dairymen of the country there would be suits for slander all along the line, because it would tend to injure their business, and the person making such statements would be criminally and civilly responsible for the words. What are the facts? The 5,000,000 head of cattle slaughtered in this country, to which he referred, and the statement as to how much oleo oil was made from each steer, do not represent the actual facts. I have a statement here from Mr. Charles F. Martin, secretary of the National Live Stock Association, in an address he delivered at Topeka, Kans., day before yesterday, in which he was referring to the live-stock industry in this country.

Right here, gentlemen, I might say that there is nobody in the United States more competent to speak upon this subject than Mr. Martin. He has been secretary of the association since its organization, giving his entire time to the business of the cattlemen. He states in a public meeting of the Kansas Stock Breeders' Improvement Association then in session that the amount of cattle slaughtered in this country last year was 7,000,000 head. Now mark this: Twenty-eight pounds of oleo oil per steer, which was Governor Hoard's statement, and you would have 196,000,000 pounds of oleo oil produced in the United States. We have a surplus, therefore, of 30,000,000 pounds after you have supplied the amount required for export and home consumption in the manufacture of oleomargarine. It is easy enough to distort facts. It is easy enough to take statistics of one time and make them apply to some other statistics of another time. If you wish to deal fairly, take the statistics as they are. I hold that Mr. Martin is perfectly competent to state the facts upon this subject, and that is what he states.

This statement as to 5,000,000 head was based upon figures concerning the cattle slaughtered at Chicago, Kansas City, and other large cities. It took no account of the vast amount of business done elsewhere throughout the country, at all of which places all the by-products are preserved just as carefully as at the slaughtering houses of the great cities. Hence we have 7,000,000 head of slaughtered cattle to draw from to get the oleo oil necessary to supply the foreign demands and the amount which is required in the production of oleomargarine in this country, and we still have a large surplus of 30,000,000.

That part of Governor Hoard's statement which endeavors to show that the average animal will produce only 15 pounds of oleo oil has no foundation in fact. Mr. Washburn's statement was that there were 61.5 pounds of caul fat to the steer, and not 30 pounds, and that there would be produced 1 pound of oleo oil out of the caul fat. But Governor Hoard said:

"The oleo people, in all their declarations to Congress and manifestos to the public, claim that only the finest caul fat of the steer is used in the manufacture of oleomargarine."

That is true. And if only 15 pounds of oleo oil of the finest quality can be produced from each steer that is slaughtered, and if only 5,000,000 head of cattle are slaughtered each year, the manufacturers would still have 75,000,000 of oleo oil of the finest quality to draw from in order to obtain the 24,000,000 required in the annual production of oleomargarine in the United States.

The statistics for the year ending June 30, 1901, show that there were exported during that year oleo oil to the amount of 161,651,413 pounds. The oleo oil used in the manufacture of oleomargarine for that year was about 28,000,000 pounds. These two items would aggregate 194,651,413 pounds of oleo oil produced in the United States during that year. The product of 7,000,000 cattle, at 28 pounds of oleo each, would amount to 196,000,000 pounds. This amount would furnish our exports for that year and the 28,000,000 required in the manufacture of oleomargarine and still leave a surplus of 1,350,000 of oleo oil unaccounted for in this country.

Gentlemen of the committee, in view of these facts, do you not regard it as unfair for Governor Hoard to parade before this committee and the country such slanderous charges in reference to the manufacturers of a product which all the scientists in the world have stated is a wholesome and healthful article of food for the people? I ask fair dealings at the hands of this committee in behalf of the people that I have the honor to represent here. They are not only the producers of the raw materials out of which oleomargarine is made, but they are consumers, to some extent, of the finished product. On the ranches of the cattlemen of the country butter is not generally produced. On one ranch I know of, where 12,000 head of calves were branded in one year, there was not a pound of butter made. Those people desire to purchase butterine and oleomargarine for their ranches, because they can keep butterine for an indefinite length of time, whereas it would be impossible to supply their employees with butter at all by reason of its susceptibility to rancidity. They want it, therefore, for their employees.

You will observe that Mr. Springer characterizes the charges made by Governor Hoard as slanderous. I say that certainly from the testimony adduced it is unfair, and no honest man should be led off by a statement which has been so conclusively shown to be false. I turn now to page 60 of the hearing and see what Professor Kober says on the proposition of making oleo out of refuse:

Mr. SCOTT. I would like to ask you whether, in your opinion, oleomargarine suitable for the market can be made from refuse-fat grease?

Mr. KOBER. While it is not absolutely impossible, I think it highly improbable.

Mr. SCOTT. You are not inclined to believe, then, the reports which have been circulated to the effect that in many butterine factories the cast-off refuse, from animals which have died natural deaths, or from the hotels and restaurants, is used in the manufacture of oleomargarine?

Mr. KOBER. I certainly do not believe it, and I do not believe there is a professor of hygiene in the United States who believes it.

Mr. SCOTT. Would you mind giving the reasons why you do not believe it? Do you think it chemically possible?

Mr. KOBER. As has been stated, oleomargarine can not be made from fats that have either the slightest degree of rancidity or have a marked distinctive taste—that is, a pronounced taste—that would indicate its having been made of old or rancid fats. The taste would at once indicate that. The object is to get the most palatable product possible, and therefore the interests of the manufacturers are subserved by selecting only the purest fats. If they did not, the product would not sell.

Surely it can not be said that the gentleman who studies science for the purpose of helping the world, for the purpose of science itself, and for the purpose of leaving his name to the people of all ages as a great and learned man, would come here and make a false statement to the Congress of the American people about a matter of this sort. No, gentlemen, your honesty must speak out, and you must be able to say to your people when you return to them to defend your vote if you vote in favor of this measure, or if you are criticised when you vote against it, that you did what your conscience dictated; that you voted from a sense of of right; that in your vote was a principle of justice, and that you were not swayed by the statements made by gentlemen who were biased and prejudiced.

The gentlemen who urge this measure before this Congress say that they object to oleomargarine being colored, and yet we find the statements of Mr. Adams and of Mr. Hoard, and of everyone who has been before this committee and has given testimony, that they all color their butter and that the coloring of their butter makes it worth from 5 to 10 cents per pound more; in other words, butter is not always yellow, but the tastes of people are such that they desire butter to look yellow, and in conformity to their desire these honest gentlemen who come here asking for legislation which would strike oleomargarine admit that their butter is not yellow at first, but is made so to suit the fastidious taste of the consumer. Why can not those who are unable to buy this fine butter, who are compelled by circumstances to eat a cheaper product, be allowed to have their product colored to suit their taste? It is a false argument; it is one that will not stand before the people, who, in the end, are the honest judges and determine all things.

There is another question, Mr. Chairman. There is, according to the testimony, a certain amount of butter made in the United States, to wit, 1,500,000,000 pounds, of which amount only 800,000,000 pounds is put upon the market. Figuring, in round numbers, the population at this time at 80,000,000 of people living in the United States, we find that each person in the United States would be allowed 10 pounds of butter per capita a year. In other words, each day we would have only two one-hundredths of a pound of butter per capita in the United States. This is an awful deficit, and one that must be overcome in some way. Then why, in heaven's name, would you strike down a product which takes the place of butter, which goes hand in hand with butter, which satisfies the rich and the poor, which is acceptable, when without it there would be such a small allowance of butter or its equal to the people of this country? That all this is an argument based upon reason and common sense should be sufficient to kill this bill.

Mr. Chairman, it is not my purpose to make a hero of any man. A man owes a common duty to his people, and simply because he stands up and dares to do that which is right is no reason for any unusual applause. But since my coming to Congress I have observed that all men do not vote upon a proposition as they think they should, and, as the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] said a few days ago, that doubtless a great many votes would be cast upon this proposition by members in which ulterior motives would prevail, and that their votes would not voice their sentiments or their idea of what was just and right. It is a sad commentary indeed upon the honesty and integrity of the American people that they should have representatives here who fear to do their duty according to their convictions.

There stands to-day, though, one in this Hall who certainly portrays all the characteristics of an honest man, a man who has large interests in the dairy product, a man whom I am told is interested in the making of butter from more than a thousand cows, and yet that man is chairman of this great Committee of Agriculture, and although he is opposed by members of his own party on that committee, yet dares to come here and say to this Congress that this bill should not pass; that it is legislation that should not be adopted; that it is legislation that is not for the good of all the people; that it is legislation for the good of a select few; that it is class legislation, and is therefore wrong. Certainly the suggestion of the gentleman from Iowa would not reach Mr. WADSWORTH, of New York, Mr. WADSWORTH'S people should be proud of their Representative, and future years of his return to Congress would but prove the value of a man who votes even against his own pecuniary interests in order that he may best truly and honestly serve the people of the entire country. [Loud applause.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, in conclusion I would say that this measure is undemocratic, it is un-American, it is unrighteous, it is as pernicious legislation as it is dangerous, it is unworthy of a great people, of a great Government, of free institutions, and unconstitutional of the Constitution made for all the people with "special privileges to none and with equal rights to all." [Loud applause.]

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. I ask for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GREEN] is recognized.

Mr. GREEN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, the gentlemen of the opposition, wanting substantial and convincing arguments, have grown eloquent in their addresses. They seem to have forgotten that they were not addressing their confiding constituents on the stump but the House of Representatives of a great nation.

They have sought to introduce and discuss irrelevant propositions. They have resorted to quibbles and that favorite resort of the pleader of a weak case, arguments "ad hominem." They have unblushingly loudly proclaimed and used for their premises statements which have no existence in fact. They have by false premises and false logic tried to make the worse appear the better reason.

Not satisfied, they have sought to bully the friends of this bill; hurl denunciation and opprobrious epithets at them; impute wrong and selfish and mercenary motives for their defense, and roundly abuse them in every conceivable way. They may consider it argument to call us Constitution breakers, industry wreckers, enemies of the poor, false friends of labor, creatures of the corrupt butter trust, oppressors of the poor, weak, struggling oleomargarine manufacturer.

Those of us who will vote for this measure and who occupy seats on the Democratic side of this body, who represent Democratic constituencies—men who are steadfast and loyal to the Democratic party and Democratic principles—come in for a still greater share of their abuse.

Many of their speeches ring with the arrogant old plantation strains.

We are called timid and misguided Democrats, and, to cap the climax, are read out of the party. Right here let me say, by way of an aside, that but a few weeks ago this arrogant Representative from the Lone Star State undertook to read out of the party all but about half a dozen of the Democratic members of this House, and seemed to be outraged because we protested and looked upon him as a Jonah instead of a Moses.

My friend's ideas of Democracy are either unique or confused, and we will fling the broad mantle of charity around him. Yet it is but fair to tell him that there is a little spot in Pennsylvania where the seed of Democracy was planted long before his State had any existence as a State and was but a wilderness where the ancient savage roamed.

That that seed grew up and flourished in the days of the fathers of this Republic; that from that time to this it has ever maintained its pristine strength and glory and its unswerving fidelity to the Democratic party.

In the heart of this section lies the district I have the proud honor to represent, with its quarter of a million people. These people bid me cast their vote for this bill. There are 20,000 farmers dwelling there, all of whom keep milch cows and produce milk and butter. One-fourth of them are extensively interested in the products of the dairy, and ask an honest market for their products. In the two great cities in that district, where dwell one-half the population, they too ask that the imposition and fraud practiced upon them by making them pay butter prices for oleomargarine shall be stopped and they be given what they pay for—honest butter.

Does it not seem strange that some men should insist upon denying to others rights which they vociferously demand for themselves—that of having an opinion?

Such men have the colossal impudence to set up their opinions against those of a vast majority and against the justices of the Supreme Court without ever entertaining a suspicion that there is a possibility of their being wrong. This is noticeable in some of the speeches made against this bill. Its advocates have one consolation, that whenever one of these intemperate and dyspeptic orators addresses this body he makes votes for the measure and increases the already large majority.

Who originated this bill? None other than the representatives of the dairy interests of the United States. Who are back of it, actively pressing the enactment into law of its provisions? Every farmer who keeps cows—every owner of a cow is interested. Every man interested in manufacturing the 1,500,000,000 pounds of honest butter is watching our action. This is the selfish and offensive trust which these gentlemen so loudly denounce.

We may expect them before long to refer to organized labor as the gigantic labor trust, and for the same reasons call them bad names.

The vast army of honest men constituting this so-called butter trust are to be granted no consideration, their rights and interests our opponents say are not to be protected, nor their injuries redressed.

Is it reasonable that this vast multitude would besiege the doors of Congress if they had no real grievance and only sought legislation to raise the price of their products?

I say never. They have a grievance—a great wrong has been done them—a gigantic and extensive fraud has been practiced upon them, and they ask its discontinuance, and invoke to that end the strong arm of their National Government.

Who oppose their demand, and why?

Chiefly those who represent districts where beef and pork and cotton-seed oil are extensively raised and who find a market for an insignificant part of their product at the oleomargarine manufactory.

Many of these advocates of imitation butter start their song with high moral and religious sentiments and urge its defeat on legal, equitable, and even constitutional grounds, but whenever a stanza is finished their chorus is—

"Rally around the beeves, the hogs, and the cotton-seed oil."

Very few gentlemen are really candid enough to give this as the real reason for their intense opposition to this bill; but no one is really deceived by their pretenses. Long ago they have thoroughly convinced their listeners that to them this is a "local issue."

There is no doubt that on that theory, and that alone, can their attitude be explained, and if they would plainly say so and not beat around the bush, we would at least admire their frankness and condone even their bad temper.

An oleomargarine diet seems sure to produce bad temper, and in that respect is very like dyspepsia and a disordered liver.

But what propositions do they advance for arguments?

First. That oleomargarine, colored or uncolored, is nutritious and wholesome.

We answer: True, but the fraud practiced in marketing it is corrupt.

Second. That the enactment into law of the provisions of this bill will decrease and not increase the revenue the United States now derives from taxing oleo.

We reply: In all probability it will, but the bill is not entirely, only incidentally, a revenue measure.

Third. That it is wrong to use the taxing power of the Government to crush out one industry to increase the profit from another.

We say: In the abstract you are right; but this measure will not crush the legitimate industry, but we hope will wipe out the fraud practiced in its sale when colored and sold for butter.

That the 10 cent a pound tax is punitive and to prevent extensive and notorious fraudulent practices, and we have a perfect right to use this great power in suppressing it, especially as the effects of these frauds are so serious to honest interests, and it is practiced for the sole purpose of giving excessive profits to the maker and seller.

Fourth. They claim that this imitation butter is not sold for dairy butter.

We answer: The statutes passed by the legislatures of 32 States of this Union must prove beyond controversy that the fraud is practiced very extensively, and the States have taken every means to prevent and punish it, with but partial success.

Further, that it is recognized as being practiced even in the States of Georgia, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, and Texas—the homes of many of the bill's most violent opponents.

If any additional evidence on this subject should be asked for, hundreds of instances have been furnished; mountains have been piled on mountains, and many of the opposition admit the fact.

Fifth. It is claimed that the manufacturers do not commit the frauds, and the handlers, and not they, should be punished.

That they are the active parties in the conspiracy—procure, aid, and abet it, and to a large extent profit by it—can not be doubted.

That they pocket enormous profits from the practice of the fraud is apparent and has not been gainsaid. Anyone reading the evidence in the prosecutions in Pennsylvania is overwhelmed by the fact clearly established that the direct agents of these manufacturers are often the instigators of the fraud. They pay large salaries and offer the most tempting inducements to procure subagents; they openly advertise that this butter can be sold for honest butter; they offer to protect their employees from prosecution, and, when prosecuted, from punishment, and to this end agree to pay all fines and legal expenses. They guarantee immunity from prosecution by bribing local and State officials whose duty is to ferret out, furnish evidence, and prosecute the fraud.

I know personally of one instance where a member of my company immediately after muster out from the United States service in the war with Spain only three years ago was offered large pay, indemnity from prosecution, if possible, and the payment of his fine and legal expenses in case of conviction.

One of the purposes of this 10-cent tax levy is to so decrease these enormous profits that the manufacturer obliged to depend upon an ordinary profit can not afford to offer these inducements and shoulder these heavy expenses.

The theory is based upon a knowledge of human nature, that if sufficiently large inducements are not offered men can not be procured to be parties to the practice of these frauds, and I believe that will very generally be the case.

We further answer to the manufacturers' plaint that this bill reduces the tax from 2 cents to one-quarter of a cent a pound on the uncolored product, so that if he sells as much as he does now his profit will be 1¾ cents greater than at present if sold at the same price, making the margin of profit very high, higher than in most industries.

Sixth. The assistance of the poor workingman is invoked by these rogues, and it is claimed that he will be prevented from buying oleomargarine when he wants it, and we are assured he does want it. As long as there is a market it will be manufactured to meet the demand and he can get it. He will be a very large gainer by this law, for he can buy very much cheaper. He will get 2 and even 3 pounds for the same money he pays for 1 now.

If it will be more inviting or more palatable to have it colored like butter, the provisions of the bill permit the consumer to color it. One of the stock arguments of the opposition is that the passage of the measure will not produce the results the dairymen seek, as a few drops of coloring matter, a paddle, and a little elbow grease will produce the imitation, even when the uncolored only is manufactured. This I regard as not only the strongest but the only real argument which has been brought against the bill.

The fact remains that the man who wishes to buy oleo will get it very much cheaper and will not be made to pay butter prices for it, and when he wants butter he will get exactly what he buys and pays for.

I am satisfied that last year 80,000,000 pounds of oleo was sold for butter and about $8,000,000 was taken by fraud from the pockets of the consumers.

It is no wonder that these oleo manufacturers are so clamorous against this proposed law and so anxious to continue the practice of this fraud, for a very large percentage of this reaches their pockets.

Seventh. It is claimed the price of butter will increase and the butter consumer will have to pay more; that this is the only purpose for the enactment of this legislation. As far as its raising the price is concerned, I believe that there is great doubt whether it will, and, if it will, this raise will be temporary.

Dairy products are governed by the natural laws of supply and demand. When profits raise, more people go into the business, and the result is that the price quickly comes down to that which constitutes the cost and the ordinary profit. So it will be with butter when an honest market is given it and it has fair competition with the products of the factory.

One thing is certain, if the provisions of this bill are effective in suppressing the sale of the imitation, when a man wants butter he will get it, even if he does pay a cent or two more, and when he wants oleo he will get it much cheaper.

Controlled by natural laws, when there is a general rise in commodities butter will share in the rise with hay and grain which is fed and labor which is employed.

Eighth. Some claim that the payment of a 10-cent tax by the manufacturer under the provisions of this bill will legalize the sale of oleo for real butter, and the Government thereby is licensing a fraud. Nothing can be farther from the truth. The payment of a 10-cent tax will only allow the manufacturer to sell the colored imitation butter for imitation butter, and the same penalties set forth in this bill and in the statutes of the various States will be enforced and the fraud punished.

Ninth. A very pertinent inquiry has been made and the argument is advanced by the opponents that the enactment of this legislation will not cure the evil, as the oleo may go uncolored from the manufactory, but as it is easily colored this will be done by those who handle and sell the product and by the keepers of hotels, restaurants, and boarding houses.

It is useless to deny that this can be done and it is in all probability absolutely impossible to draft legislation to secure absolute honesty in handling this product from the manufacturer to the consumer, but still this has been corrected as much as possible.

First. The person coloring oleomargarine for sale at wholesale or retail, or who supplies guests in hotels and places of public entertainment, under the provisions of this bill becomes a manufacturer and must have a license and be subject to all the penalties imposed on the manufacturer for infractions of the law, and he must pay the 10 cents to the United States.

These infractions are crimes against the United States and punishable by its officials. We all know how carefully they collect United States revenue, and the 10 cents a pound due the Government by the storekeeper or boarding-house keeper will be collected or he will be punished expeditiously. A double force of officials will be at work to suppress the fraud, those of the State and those of the nation. Both State and national courts will be open to punish infractions. The increased chance of discovery, the severity of the punishment, the small profit to be derived in proportion to the risk run will soon stop the abuse, especially when the manufacturer has ceased to spend large sums of money to procure men to engage in this nefarious business.

The friends of this bill at least ask to try this plan, and have confidence in succeeding in enforcing the law and stopping the abuse.

Tenth. The argument that this is class legislation and protection run mad, we say, has no merit.

By protective tariff the law, by limiting or cutting off entirely foreign competition, forces the consumer in the domestic market to pay a greater price than he would be obliged to pay if there were honest competitive markets. This addition, or a large part of it, goes into the pockets of the manufacturer, forcibly taken as it is by law from the consumer.

But the case before us has no parallel in the cases arising under the protective tariff policy. The butter interests seek no restrictions to be placed on fair or honest competition, and are perfectly satisfied to have all imitations of dairy products in the competition, and are ready and willing to meet them in the open market; but they do claim that that market must be an honest one and that it is not fair that oleo shall be sold for butter and be an honest butter competitor, just as if 100,000,000 pounds of additional butter was forced on the market and, more than that, by every art of the merchant forced on the unsuspecting consumer. Such competition is made greater than that of an equal amount of butter.

As far as the consumer is concerned, no money is forced from his pockets by taxation; by protecting him from the cheat his money is saved and he is protected from being cheated.

So that this is only class legislation, inasmuch as it does with two classes—those who are honest and imposed upon, and the classes represented by the impostors and rogues.

Such class legislation as upholds and protects honest men in their dealings I will by vote and voice always uphold, and the criminal class will always be punished, especially when their wrongs become crying evils in the land and affect large business interests in particular and the public in general.

They are in reality pro bono publico, as are the provisions of this measure.

Eleventh. Finally, the argument is advanced that the bill is unconstitutional; but these arguments have been ably argued and the pertinent authorities cited. These show that the Supreme Court have ruled as constitutional cases which embody the same principle and are practically on all fours with this.

The opposition, unable to refute the strength of these arguments, meet them by declaring that the Supreme Court are all wrong and do not construe the provisions of the Constitution correctly.

We answer, in framing legislation we can not follow the individual opinion of members, but must be guided by the decisions and declarations of the court of last resort, who have the only authoritative right to pass upon the constitutionality of a national law, and when they once say it is constitutional it thereby becomes so and can be put into practical operation. That is what the advocates of oleo legislation seek and must be pardoned if they believe with the court in the constitutionality of this measure.

My vote will not be cast for this bill because I think it will be a revenue producer, but an honesty compeller.

It will be cast in the affirmative for the very reason that it is repressive taxation—repressive of fraud.

And when I cast my vote for this bill I am satisfied that it will be the fair expression of the people of the district I have the honor to represent—it will be a benefit and protection of our large dairy interests as well as the protection of every purchaser or consumer of butter.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. I ask for a vote on the amendment.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. I ask the gentleman to yield to me.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. I will give the gentleman some time later. I must insist now upon the debate being closed upon this amendment. I move that the debate on this amendment be closed.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Connecticut that all debate on this amendment be now closed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. Now, Mr. Chairman, I ask for a vote on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will again report the amendment.

The amendment was again read, as follows:

Amend section 1 by adding thereto after the word "butter" in the twelfth line, on page 2 of the bill, the words "of any shade of yellow."

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. I move to strike out the last word of the amendment.

Mr. CHAIRMAN. Debate on this amendment is now closed.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. I offer another amendment, then.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on the amendment is closed. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HENRY].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

In the five minutes allowed me I will not be able to give but an imperfect outline of the views that I entertain in opposition to this bill which has been so ably and exhaustively discussed on either side of this Chamber.

The bill is not of that character calculated to invite or appeal to political partisanship, but it appears to be the product of local interests, for it is sumptuary in its nature. It is a noticeable fact developed in this discussion that in whatever section of the country—North, South, East, or West—the dairy interests were strong and well established, there we find the most earnest advocates of this measure.

I am opposed to the bill, Mr. Chairman, for a great many reasons, which I would gladly elaborate if I had the time. My chief objection to it is that on its face it violates flagrantly and defiantly one of the best-established and most universally-accepted precepts and principles of equity—that as a measure it comes before us "with unclean hands." It proposes to ask equity, but refuses to do equity. I say, Mr. Chairman, apply that cardinal principle to this bill, and what is the result of it? Why, the supporters and friends of the bill in the defense they make for it, in my opinion, are put in the attitude of entering a plea of "confession and avoidance."

They admit that they have imposed a tax of 10 cents per pound, out of which they do not expect to realize any revenue at all. Why, then, the tax? How do they propose to avoid this plea of confession? They frankly admit that the bill is not intended to create revenue. They, by the logic of their own arguments, admit that they are deliberately undertaking by this bill, which bears on its face a misrepresentation, a deceit and a fraud. To do what? Why, to strike down a rival competing industry—the coloring of oleomargarine so as to make it look like butter—the grandest and the most colossal fraud, they charge, that was ever born on the American continent. Why, I ask, this drastic, this paralyzing effort against so innocent and wholesome commodity as oleomargarine? I pretermit, Mr. Chairman, all my views upon the constitutional question involved in this bill. My time will not permit me. Suffice it for me to say that this character of legislation invites the American Congress into a domain of legislation which seems to me would appeal to the fears and apprehensions of all patriotic and thoughtful men on either side of this Chamber.

I am aware that the highest courts of our country and our most distinguished and leading law writers have frequently said in past years that the jurisdiction of Congress could be invoked and the taxing power resorted to in order to destroy certain "noxious articles of consumption." That proposition can not be safely denied by anyone. Has anyone on either side of the Chamber contended that oleomargarine falls with "the family" of that kind of article? Is it a "noxious article?" Its ingredients are cotton-seed oil, the fat of the hog and the beef cattle, and milk. No man has contended that it was "a noxious article." Stripped, Mr. Chairman, of all the guise, drapery, and false pretenses that able and ingenious gentlemen have thrown around this bill, it stands out "in bold relief" that by and through this bill, yea, by a solemn act of Congress, which falsely pretends to be for "revenue only," we are undertaking to strike down and destroy one industry to promote the interests of another. The bill proposes to say to the farmers who sell their cotton-seed oil and hog and beef-cattle fat to be used as ingredients in making oleomargarine that you shall not make such sale because it interferes with the profits of the sale of butter. The advocates pretend that what they object to is that we color our oleomargarine and make it yellow, like butter. But this can not be true, for the sixth section of the substitute of the minority makes ample and careful provisions against oleomargarine being sold for butter. We are just as much opposed to fraudulently selling oleomargarine for butter as the advocates of this bill are, but we do believe that a man has the right to buy and eat oleomargarine if he wishes to do so, and especially if it is marked "Oleomargarine" and he knows what he is buying.

I know, Mr. Chairman, of no analogy in law, in the experience I have had at the bar, to this kind of legislation save that where men—and you and I have seen them as lawyers—loudly protest that they are seeking to advance the morality, good order, and law-abiding spirit of the community in resorting by prosecution to the arm of the criminal law when in fact and in truth they are seeking to enforce the collection of a private debt. The enactment, Mr. Chairman, of such legislation will establish a dangerous precedent—harmful and vicious in all its tendencies.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WANGER was recognized.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. I suppose that, under the general rule, I have the right to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. You have that right.

Mr. BARTLETT. I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Alabama be extended five minutes.

A MEMBER. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania was recognized. Does he yield to the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. WANGER. I yield for a submission of the request.

Mr. BARTLETT. I make the request that the gentleman from Alabama be allowed five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Alabama may be extended five minutes more. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Now, Mr. Chairman, in connection with what I have just been saying, as evidencing the line of reasoning resorted to to maintain this bill, I point out one instance which my attention has been called to in the speech in the RECORD made in support of this measure by the distinguished gentleman from Vermont [Mr. HASKINS]. I contend that what I now refer to is that specious character of reasoning and argument by which it is sought to sustain the bill. The gentleman from Vermont was attempting to make an explanation, Mr. Chairman, of what Mr. Adams, the pure-food commissioner of Wisconsin, had said before the committee, and the gentleman quotes an explanation of Mr. Adams in regard to what he said before the committee. What did Mr. Adams say? I read from the RECORD.

Mr. Adams said:

I said on that occasion there was no use in beating the devil around the stump, and our purpose in coming to Congress for this bill providing for a 10-cent tax on butterine was to try to practically prohibit the business of the manufacture of oleomargarine colored in imitation of butter.

The gentleman from Vermont [Mr. HASKINS] complained that the minority report did Mr. Adams an injustice, because Mr. Adams had explained that statement. What is the explanation?

This is how Mr. Adams explains it:

They understood me to say [said Mr. Adams] that it was our deliberate purpose to crush this business of manufacturing oleomargarine.

I ask any fair-minded man what is the difference between a deliberate purpose to crush out oleomargarine and a determination on Mr. Adams's part, by use of the 10 cents tax, "to practically prohibit the business of manufacturing oleomargarine colored in imitation of butter?" Why, Mr. Chairman, I have heard, in the course of my professional life, some of the ablest judges upon the Federal and State bench undertake to explain the difference between a "reasonable doubt as to the guilt of the defendant" and the "probability of his innocence." I say I have heard learned discussions on that question, but if the gentleman from Vermont would give us the benefit of his explanatory abilities he could doubtless render valuable assistance to our able courts in the great legal struggle they have made for years in drawing the lines of legal demarcation when a reasonable doubt commences, when it stops, and where it goes. I am opposed to this bill, Mr. Chairman, because it is unjust, unfair, unpatriotic, and un-American. If there is one characteristic of the masses of the American people that stands out boldly all the time it is their love of "fair play." It prevails with them in public and private matters. They despise an effort to take an underhold or a blow "below the belt." They want fair play in all things. Does this bill give it? It uses the strong arm of the law to break down an honest and proper enterprise to put money in the pockets of the dairymen. There is simply no end to such legislation when it once gets a fair start. It simply depends on power, not right. This bill is a skillfully organized appetite of greed and selfishness.

Now, Mr. Chairman, one word more. I have heard with regret a great deal said on our side about making this bill a political test of a man's fealty to the Democratic party. During the short time I have been in Congress I do not hesitate to say that I have seen but few political questions arise that drew strict party lines. It ought to be the desire and the wish of all of us on both sides of this Chamber to keep politics, as far as possible, out of the general legislation of the country. I do not believe that the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. LAMB], who spoke so earnestly in favor of this bill, is any less a Democrat than those Democrats who oppose the bill. I do not apply such tests to my party associates. It does not accord with my idea that on all occasions, large and small, we must make each one a political test. Why, my distinguished friend from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] said that we had read out the Bryanites, we had read out the Goldbugs and those who voted for the Philippine bill, and soon, he said, we would not have anybody left in our party.

Ah, I say to my distinguished friend from Iowa, be patient and wait. The Democratic party is all right. We are following the wise advice once given by General Grant. We think we can interpret the signs of the times. We are carefully keeping our own council. We are sitting up straight in the boat. We hear the mutterings afar off, yet very near. We know what perplexing questions are burdening to-day the shoulders and consciences of the Republican party. We know upon whose shoulders is thrown the great responsibility of settling the great and portentious question of whether this country will deal honestly and fairly with Cuba. On this question the eager eyes of the country are on you. We are watching and waiting to see how you are to meet the earnest demand that comes up from all sections of our country and from all classes of the people for tariff reform. Of course, we know that the great trusts are watching you too. We know that the question of selecting the route and constructing the Nicaragua Canal devolves upon the Republican party. When all these great questions are settled, and settled as the Republican party proposes to settle them, the Democracy, with the Bryanites and the Goldbugs and those that voted for the Philippine bill, faithful to their party principles, will stand in solid phalanx, backed by an indignant people, and in next November elect to the House for the Fifty-eighth Congress a majority of Democrats, a hopeful forerunner of the great national contest of 1904. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. WANGER. Mr. Chairman, as a friend of pure food, I have been delighted at the many expressions in favor of legislation which will produce the much-desired result of having articles of food sold to the public for exactly what they are. In the meantime, as one step in that direction, I cordially favor the measure proposed by the majority of the Committee on Agriculture. And in doing that it seems to me I am the friend of the farmer not only who is engaged in the dairy business, but as well of the farmer who raises cotton, cattle, or any other product which enters into the composition of oleomargarine or any other form of imitation of or substitute for butter.

Now, it seems to me that the friends of agriculture, and especially those engaged in it, and the consumers of the country have a right to arraign the manufacturers and dealers in oleomargarine because they either have not, on the one hand, paid to the producers a fair measure of value of the articles which enter into the manufacture of oleomargarine, or, on the other hand, they have asked an unjust and unreasonable price for their article. If they had devoted but a tithe of the money which they have applied for protection and corruption, and which they have seized in the shape of unreasonable profits, to the purpose of education of the public with respect to the merits of oleomargarine, if it is the healthful, digestible, satisfactory compound that they have claimed it is, it would not have been necessary for them to have masqueraded under a cloak and to have deceived the public as to what they were buying.

I believe that this measure is one step in the direction of having this product exploited before the country upon its merits and everybody informed as to what it really is and getting it at a fair price. And every man who supplies anything which goes into its manufacture is interested in that condition being brought about, if it is a useful, healthful article. Of course, if it is unhealthful, if the pretense that it is as good as butter is false, then let that be known, and let that pretense be taken away from its exploitation in American markets.

Now, this matter of color is a very important thing. I agree that it is a deception as to all articles in degree and in kind, but in a very material kind. Whether you are coloring butter or oleomargarine the color is introduced for the purpose of deception, in the one case as to quality and in the other case as to the nature of the article itself. Nobody will pretend that color in an way deteriorates the quality of butter, and the practice with respect to it began anterior to the manufacture of oleomargarine. Many people—a very large part of the American people—believe that color introduced into oleomargarine induces them unconsciously to take as a substitute for what they intend to get an unhealthful article, one which its makers recognize can not be justified and profitably produced and sold upon its merits, thus cheating the consumer by deceiving him. In this way, as they contend, the health of the consumer is impaired, while at the same time the producers lose a fair share of the returns to which they are entitled for the article which they supply, whether that be butter or the ingredients of oleomargarine.

Therefore it seems to me that in so legislating that oleomargarine must come out from under the mask, must throw off the disguise which has been thrown around it heretofore, and devote some part of the funds now annually extorted by deception from the innocent and defrauded consumers of the country to advertising and the other legitimate methods to introduce a substitute food, we benefit all the farmers, cotton growers, and cattle raisers of the country, and protect consumers in getting the article they desire and not being innocent and defrauded contributors toward their own robbery and that of the agricultural producers of the nation.

Mr. BOUTELL. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out in line 8, page 1, the words "use and consumption" after the word "for."

Mr. BOUTELL. Mr. Chairman, the worst and most startling feature of this bill, the evil spirit animating the measure, the approval of which by this House marks a most dangerous tendency in our national legislation, is to my mind the invasion of the rights of the States and the usurpation by the National Legislature of those governmental functions which the founders of our institutions thought it best for the protection of the people to leave to the local authorities. The plea that this kind of national legislation is necessary to prevent fraud is a sad and most lamentable commentary on the results of the one hundred and thirteen years of our federative system.

We are all equally opposed to fraud and in favor of the proper punishment to suppress it, especially in the matter of food products. When I pay for olive oil, for example, I want to get the product of the olive and not the extract of cotton seed or corn or hogs. When I pay for maple sirup I want to get, and I am entitled under the laws to get, a product of the sap of the maple tree and not a combination of corncobs and glucose. When I pay for honey I am entitled to get bee-made honey and not man-made honey. When I pay for sardines I am entitled to get a Mediterranean fish preserved in olive oil and not a New England menhaden preserved in its own fat. And when I pay for butter I am entitled to get a product of cream and not a product of suet.

But, Mr. Chairman, there is no fraud in the manufacture of oil that looks like olive oil; no fraud in putting up the fish that imitate sardines; no fraud in the bottling of sirup that looks like maple sirup; no fraud in the manufacture of a substance that looks like butter. Neither is there any fraud in the consumption of these imitations. Neither is there any fraud in giving away one substance that looks like another. The legal fraud,

Mr. Chairman, is in obtaining money by false pretenses—by selling something in imitation of another thing.

The prevention of that fraud, Mr. Chairman, comes within the criminal jurisprudence of each one of the separate States. This is a matter that was left by the founders of our institutions to the States; and when gentlemen come in here and plead for this measure as necessary to accomplish the desired result, they must do it evasively. Who ever heard of oleomargarine being taxed by a State? Who ever heard of taxing any imitation product by any State? It is only by the imposition of a national tax—by evasion—that the National Government assumes control, usurps the authority which our fathers left—wisely and rightly left—with the States.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the retention of these three words, "use and consumption," in line 8, page 1, says in effect: "Where a State forbids the use and consumption of an article made in the State, but allows the use and consumption of the same article imported from abroad or brought in from another State, the Federal legislature can come in and say the law of the State permitting the use and consumption of this article is of no effect."

Mr. Chairman, has it come to pass that all of the legislatures of our 45 States have been so shorn of authority that they can not carry out the principles of the common law and their own statutory enactments, but that we must come in here and by evasion, through the subterfuge of a revenue bill which is not a revenue bill, undertake in each State to subvert the laws of the State and inject into their legislative codes matter not passed upon by the legislatures? [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. I ask that the gentleman's time be extended five minutes.

Mr. BOUTELL. I do not want five minutes. I only want thirty seconds.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to extending the gentleman's time one minute?

There was no objection.

Mr. BOUTELL. And in closing, let me say, Mr. Chairman, that I do not believe there is any man in this assembly who may vote for this measure who, in future years, will not look back upon his action, in strengthening the few weak precedents that already exist, with consternation and regret.

It is no answer to this character of legislation to say that some precedents have already been established. Mr. Chairman, if, in moments of weakness, of prejudice, of panic, we have strayed aside from the paths of wise legislation, let us hasten to retrace our steps and regain the path which alone leads to national safety and honor. [Applause.] And if we pass this measure, let us pass it with these two words stricken out.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, no bill that will be considered or passed by this Congress will benefit directly so many people or injure so few, if the claims of those opposed to its passage are well founded, as the bill now under consideration. On the one hand, it is intended to protect 70,000,000 consumers and at least 5,000,000 producers of butter from fraud and deception in the sale of an article intended for human consumption. On the other hand, it can affect adversely only 30 manufacturers of oleomargarine, the success of whose business depends upon their ability to evade and break down the laws of the States that prohibit the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine colored in imitation of butter.

Gentlemen on the other side declaim vociferously against its passage because, they say, it will destroy and is intended to destroy the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine, and that this is done solely for the benefit of the dairymen of this country. If this were true, it would not be a serious calamity. This conclusion can only be reached, however, by admitting that oleomargarine when made and sold in its natural color and for that which it is will not be purchased; therefore the manufacture of the product will cease. In other words, they can only sustain their claim as to the destruction of this industry by admitting that oleomargarine can not be sold for what it is, but must be sold for that which it is not—sold as butter—and sold, too, in violation of law and the right of the consumer to know what he is purchasing. If this is so, then, gentlemen, you are right in claiming that this bill will destroy the oleomargarine industry. And in that case the industry should be destroyed, for no industry should exist or be permitted to be carried on whose success depends entirely upon fraud and the doing of those things prohibited by law, which by the logic of your own claim you admit the oleomargarine manufacturers and dealers must do in order to succeed and successfully carry on their business.

A great deal has been said, Mr. Chairman, about the right of the manufacturer of oleomargarine to dispose of his product free from legislative restriction, because it is a healthful food product and entitled to the same freedom in the open market as butter. This, sir, I deny. That it is healthful is not proven. That it may contain ingredients deleterious to health is proven, and as long as it masquerades in the butter market in the stolen garments of butter it is an outlaw and not entitled to any favor.

We manufacture, in round numbers, annually about 1,500,000,000 pounds of butter. About 700,000,000 pounds of this is consumed by the producers and their families, leaving between eight and nine hundred million pounds to be disposed of in the open market. This market is a butter market, not an oleomargarine market, and belongs to the farmer. There is to-day no established market for the sale of oleomargarine, as there would be if oleo was all its friends claim for it. The butter market should be supplied by butter producers, not by oleo manufacturers. But, according to the statistics of the Treasury Department, at least one-eighth of that market is literally stolen annually from the farmer by the sale of 104,000,000 pounds of oleomargarine as butter.

The testimony before the committee shows that at least 90 per cent of oleomargarine is colored and goes to the consumer as butter at very nearly butter prices. To that extent, therefore, it displaces the genuine product of the farm and to that extent it is a fraud and should be stamped out. If there is a demand for oleomargarine as such, the manufacturer has the undoubted right to supply that demand, but he has no right to counterfeit the product of butter and with his counterfeit take the farmers' market for genuine butter. If there is a demand for oleomargarine as a butter substitute and the manufacturer can show the consumer that this substitute is equal, or almost so, to genuine butter and is cheaper, it would be his right to offer his product in competition with butter, but in that case it could only be offered for that which it is, or as a butter substitute, and the consumer would then know what he is getting and would be protected against the fraud now practiced upon him.

As long, therefore, as the manufacturer of oleomargarine seeks to displace genuine butter in the open market by offering or selling his product to the consumer for butter and at butter prices, so long will the agitation against this spurious product, against this fraud, against this secret violation of State laws be continued, and the farmers fully protected against fraudulent competition, and protected in their right to supply the legitimate butter market of this country.

There is not a manufacturer of oleomargarine, there is not a dealer in oleomargarine, who advertises his product as such in any newspaper of the country. It would be fatal to their business if he did. You can pick up the market reports published in the various commercial centers throughout the United States, and in none of them will you find quotations on the price of oleomargarine. This is so because oleomargarine is not sold for what it is and there is no market for its sale.. They sneak into the butter market, as it were, in the darkness of the night, and by fraud and counterfeiting supply the demand for butter, and, being counterfeiters, should be dealt with as such. In so far as they do a legitimate business this bill will not interfere with them or their business.

The laws of 32 States of the Union prohibit the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine in the semblance of butter, and, Mr. Chairman, it is very evident from the amendment just offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BOUTELL] that the opponents of this bill propose, either directly or indirectly, to break down the laws of these States by permitting the shipment of oleomargarine made in one State into States where its sale in the semblance of butter is expressly prohibited. That is the purpose of this amendment. It will authorize the sale of oleomargarine to the consumer in the original package under the protection of the interstate-commerce law and the original-package decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States, and thus defeat the purpose of State legislation. For that reason the amendment should be defeated.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Minnesota yield to the gentleman from Mississippi?

Mr. TAWNEY. I decline to yield. I have had no opportunity to speak on this bill during the general debate, having given my time to members of the committee, and I can not yield now.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, upon yesterday in the general debate those on our side had ten minutes more time than those on the other side, and I agreed with the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HENRY] to ask unanimous consent that that ten minutes overplus may be given to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] in addition to the five minutes he is now using.

Mr. TAWNEY. I thank the gentleman for his kindness, but I think I can say in the few minutes allowed me all that I care to say upon this amendment. Later, when we come to the discussion of the substitute offered by the chairman of the committee [Mr. WADSWORTH], it is possible I may desire more time.

As I was saying, Mr. Chairman, it is evident that the purpose of the opponents of this measure is either directly or indirectly to break down the laws of the 32 States of the Union that have been passed for the purpose of preventing the manufacture or sale of oleomargarine colored as butter within these States.

Now, it is admitted by the gentleman who has just addressed the committee that if these words are stricken out it will destroy the jurisdiction of the State over the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine as long as it remains within that State in the original or commercial package. The purpose of this section is to give force and effect to the laws of these States. It is not for the purpose of breaking down those laws that this section is proposed. Under the decisions of the State courts to-day, under a decision rendered about the middle of January last by the supreme court of the State of Maryland—and I cite this only as an example—State legislation is ineffective as against an original package of oleomargarine.

That State enacted a law prohibiting the sale of oleomargarine colored in imitation of butter. Oleomargarine was shipped into the State from another State, and the supreme court of the State of Maryland held that as long as oleomargarine remained a subject of commerce, as long as it remained in the original package, the law of the State had no effect whatever, and in so far as it attempted to prohibit its sale, it was in violation of the Constitution and laws of the United States.

Mr. BARTLETT. Is it not true that the Supreme Court of the United States in at least three cases have decided just to the contrary?

Mr. TAWNEY. The supreme court of the State of Maryland, in the decision referred to just now, went into that question and discussed the apparent conflict between the cases decided in the Supreme Court of the United States, to which the gentleman refers, and held that in the Shellaberger case the Supreme Court of the United States has declared that a State can not prohibit the sale of oleomargarine within the jurisdiction of the State so long as it remains in the original package; and the proposed amendment, I say, is only another attempt to absolutely protect oleomargarine in the original package, or as long as it remains an article of commerce.

For that reason I trust that the amendment will be voted down, for there is no other way whereby you can make effective the laws of the 32 States that have been enacted for the purpose of restricting the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine colored in imitation of butter.

Mr. CLAYTON. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. TAWNEY. I have no time to devote to a colloquy with the gentleman.

Mr. CLAYTON. The gentleman is discussing the law, and I desire to ask him a question.

Mr. TAWNEY. I will answer the gentleman's question, if I can.

Mr. CLAYTON. Section 1 of the bill invokes the commerce power of Congress, does it not?

Mr. TAWNEY. The first section of this bill is simply to meet the original-package decision of the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. CLAYTON. Exactly, and it is done under the commerce clause of the Constitution.

Mr. TAWNEY. It is not done under the commerce clause of the Constitution, but it will take away from oleomargarine colored in imitation of butter within a State that has prohibited its sale the protection of the interstate-commerce laws of the United States.

Mr. CLAYTON. I am not asking the effect of it. Now, I desire to know where the power to enact the first section of this bill is derived, if it is not derived from the commerce clause.

Mr. TAWNEY. It is derived from the same source from which Congress derived its power to pass the Wilson bill, making the prohibition laws of the State of Iowa and other States effective.

Mr. CLAYTON. Not at all. The Wilson bill was a tax measure.

Mr. TAWNEY. I beg the gentlemen's pardon. The Wilson bill was not a tax measure. It did not relate to any tax at all. I am speaking of the Wilson law that was passed by Congress after the decision in the original-package case by the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Chairman, I thought the gentleman had reference to the Wilson tariff bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. CLAYTON. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be allowed five minutes additional. I want to ask the gentleman a question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota has yielded the floor.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. I move to close debate on this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HENRY] is recognized, and he moves that debate be now closed on the pending amendment.

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. HENRY of Connecticut) there were—ayes 76, noes 3.

Accordingly the motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BOUTELL].

Mr. COWHERD. May we have it reported?

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment will be again reported.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out "use, consumption," in line 8, page 1, after the word "for."

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. BOUTELL) there were—ayes 53, noes 66.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Strike out all the proviso in section 1, line 7, page 2, after the word "otherwise," and substitute the following:

"Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed to forbid any State to permit the manufacture or sale of oleomargarine in any manner consistent with the laws of said State, provided that it is manufactured and sold entirely within the State."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, before addressing myself to the amendment I wish to state that I am paired on this general proposition with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAFF]; that if he were here he would vote with the majority of the committee, while I would vote with the minority.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I offered this amendment by authority of the minority of the Agricultural Committee, regarding it as one of very great importance. As a Republican I do not bow down to any fetich of States' rights. I believe with all my intelligence and with all my heart that in everything pertaining to the national sovereignty the Federal Government of the United States is, and should be and must be, supreme. Nevertheless I believe in an orderly distribution of the functions of government. I believe that it is not only proper but necessary that matters pertaining to the local government of the various States of this Union should be remitted to the legislatures of those various States. In the commonwealth which I have the honor in part to represent upon this floor no State law has been passed regulating in any way the manufacture or sale of oleomargarine.

There has been no agitation for any such law. We have great oleomargarine factories in that State, and we have great dairy interests there, but they seem to have been able to get along peaceably together; and it does seem to me that so long as the people of Kansas are satisfied with the situation out there the people of the other States of this Union have no right to interfere. It seems to me that if it is satisfactory to us to manufacture oleomargarine in any color, and sell it without any limitation, it is no concern to the inhabitants of the other States of this Union. Therefore, I protest against the insertion of a provision in this bill which shall reach out the arm of the Federal Government into my State and dictate how we shall control and govern ourselves.

I appeal especially to gentlemen on the other side who have been brought up in the atmosphere of State sovereignty. I regret that my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Virginia, who was so very much in favor of the majority report of this bill, is not now in his seat. I see that he now is. I call his attention directly and particularly to this amendment, for I do not see how, with the associations which have surrounded him from his youth up, he can by any stretch of his conscience vote against this proposition; and I appeal to members representing the majority bill on this floor to accept the amendment, because I can not conceive how any argument can be made against it which will be justified by a proper consideration of what is due to the various functions of government as divided between State legislation and national legislation.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Why do you want the proviso?

Mr. SCOTT. We want the proviso to take the place of the proviso put in the other bill?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Why do you want the proviso in the original bill? Why do you not get rid of it?

Mr. SCOTT. We do not want it really. We would much rather have the bill without it, but inasmuch as such a provision is made in the original bill we propose to change it as my amendment suggests, to shape the bill in such a way that it may be consistent with our ideas of what such legislation should be.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I am opposed to dictating to the States what the States have a right to say and do without the proviso. That is why I object to that provision.

Mr. SCOTT. I am glad to hear the gentleman say so.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. What I say is, I object to dictating to the States as to what they shall do when it refers to matters over which the States have exclusive control and about which the Federal Government has no power to dictate, which is this case.

Mr. SCOTT. If the gentleman occupies that position he will have an opportunity to vindicate it by voting for this amendment.

Mr. BARTLETT. I desire to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. SCOTT. I yield to the gentleman for a question.

Mr. BARTLETT. I desire the gentleman to state what power or what authority Congress has to say that any State within its borders shall not manufacture and sell to its citizens any product that it may determine to be wholesome and not injurious?

Mr. SCOTT. I deny that it has any power whatever.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BELLAMY. Mr. Chairman, if the object of the oleomargarine bill is to protect the citizen from being defrauded, I am in hearty sympathy with its purpose. But if it is merely to protect one legitimate industry from the competition of another, I am very strongly opposed to the bill.

What its object is can only be ascertained by a close perusal and study of the measure and of the testimony of the various witnesses who have appeared before the Committee on Agriculture, published in the pamphlet which has been laid upon the desks of the members of this House.

The first section of this bill reads as follows:

That all articles known as oleomargarine, butter, imitation butter or imitation cheese, or any substance in the semblance of butter or cheese not the usual product of the dairy and not made exclusively of pure and unadulterated milk or cream, transported into any State or Territory or the District of Columbia and remaining therein for use, consumption, sale, or storage therein, shall, upon the arrival within the limits of such State or Territory or the District of Columbia, be subject to the operation and effect of the laws of such State or Territory or the District of Columbia enacted in the exercise of its police powers to the same extent and in the same manner as though such articles or substances had been produced in such State or Territory or the District of Columbia, and shall not be exempt therefrom by reason of being introduced therein in original packages or otherwise: Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed to permit any State to forbid the manufacture or sale of oleomargarine in a separate and distinct form and in such manner as will advise the consumer of its real character, free from coloration or ingredient that cause it to look like butter.

If this section were enacted into law, and if all the other provisions of the bill were eliminated and all other restrictions on the statute book on this subject were wiped out, then the whole matter of the sale of oleomargarine would be left to the States, and each State could protect its citizens from being defrauded, by causing all oleomargarine to be marked as such before being sold in the State, and any person selling it for and as butter to be guilty of obtaining money under false pretenses and punished in a degree commensurate with the crime. Every person interested in good government believes in protecting his fellow-citizen from being defrauded, and every State should have a law making a person who willfully and knowingly sold or caused to be sold any article in imitation of another, as the genuine article, guilty of a felony.

There are many intermixtures which are not injurious or hurtful in their ingredients, but cheap in character, which are sold as a genuine article and the purchaser thereby deceived and made to pay a higher price than he would have paid if he had been informed of the true character of the article. This is immoral, a deceit, and a fraud, and punishable as such at the common law and in many States by statute.

But, Mr. Chairman, is the purpose of this bill to protect the innocent consumer of the article? I think not, as is manifest from a perusal of the third section of the bill.

This section says:

That on and after July 1, 1902, the tax on oleomargarine shall be one-fourth of 1 cent per pound when the same is not made as butter, but when made in imitation of butter the tax shall be 10 cents per pound.

Now, I ask any sensible man if that section does not permit any person to defraud his neighbor and sell him imitation butter if he is willing to pay a tax to the Government of 10 cents a pound? This, Mr. Chairman, makes the Government guilty of a flagrant fraud on its own citizens, a particeps criminis with the manufacturer who makes it. This is a most detestable business, and I will never give my vote to a measure which puts a premium on rascality and not only authorizes but encourages the Government to go into the fraud business, as it is revolting to every instinct of honesty, philanthrophy, and patriotism.

But, Mr. Chairman, that section discloses that the true purpose of the bill is to protect the butter maker from the competition of the oleomargarine maker.

If oleomargarine were an injurious article, deleterious to health, every legislator should take pleasure in suppressing its sale.

But all chemists—in fact, I believe that it is the consensus of opinion of scientific experts, chemists, and bacteriologists alike that oleomargarine is both a healthful and wholesome food product, and specially a cheap article of food which is in the power of every man, however poor, to procure; that it is healthful has been admitted by the advocates of this measure on this floor. According to the best authority the product is made from oleo oil, neutral lard, butter, cream, milk, salt, and cotton-seed oil.

The process of manufacture, I gather from the testimony before the committee, is as follows:

Oleo oil is made from caul fat, the richest and choicest fat of the beef. This fat amounts to about 40 pounds to the animal. It it taken out before the animal is skinned, thoroughly washed, and thrown into a vat of ice water to stand until the following day; then it is cut up fine and cooked. The fat is cooked and placed in linen cloths, and the oil is extracted in a hydraulic press. The residue in the cloths after pressing it is commercially known as stearin. The tallow element is therefore effectually removed. Neutral lard is obtained from the leaf lard of the pig. The leaf, amounting to about 5 or 6 pounds to the pig, is taken out as soon as the animal is killed, thoroughly washed, and put into a freezer for twenty-four hours. It is then cut into shreds and cooked, and after straining presents a snowy white color. Both pigs and cattle are examined by Government inspectors before and after killing, so that diseased animals are excluded.

Oleo and neutral lard, therefore, are the basis of the so-called oleomargarine or butterine. These are churned with cream or milk, salted and colored with annotto or butter color, run through cold water, worked in a butter worker, and placed in suitable packages and labeled, according to United States laws, "Oleomargarine."

Those who are familiar with the manufacture of oleo oil, neutral lard, and the process of making oleomargarine—and I may say here, in passing, that the establishments visited by me appear to court a most rigid inspection—can not fail to have been impressed with the fact that nothing but the most wholesome and pure fats are used, and that the most scrupulous precautions as regards cleanliness are observed in the manipulations.

This extends not only to the material, the utensils, and the workrooms, but also to the person and clothing of the employees, and I can cheerfully corroborate the testimony of Dr. Ames, of the United States Navy, when he declared before the Senate Committee (pp. 348-350)—

"That the manufacture of butterine in properly constructed factories is much cleaner than the manufacture of butter, and that he has found the factories of Kansas City nearly perfect in that respect."

He says—

"It should be more generally used and not looked upon as an inferior article and makeshift for butter, when it is really superior."

Oleomargarine	84.76	.74	.....	5.49	9.01

The great distinction between butter fat and margarine fat lies in the fact that butter fat contains nearly 8 per cent of the volatile fats, while the margarine has about one-half per cent. In the analysis of these substances this difference is made use of.

As to the wholesomeness and healthfulness of the article, I quote from the same source:

Wholesomeness and digestibility of oleomargarine.—Uffelmann, professor of hygiene, as early as 1890, reported that butterine is nearly as digestible as butter, fully 96 per cent being utilized, and after quoting the experiments on this point of Sell, a food expert of the German health office, declared that no objections should be urged against its use as long as it is properly prepared from wholesome fats and sold under its real name.

Prof. H. W. Wiley, chief chemist of the United States Department of Agriculture, testified before the Senate Committee on Manufactures on adulteration of food products (pp. 14-16) that, from a nutritive point of view, all the fats and oils used as food have nearly the same value as heat producers. Butter fat has a heat value of a little more than 9,000 calories per gram, while the beef fat of oleomargarine has a slightly less heat value, but the butter fat is a little more easy of digestion, so that there is practically no difference in the value of the two fats in the human economy. Cotton-seed oil has practically the same heat value as oleomargarine, and is probably a little easier of digestion. Dr. Wiley considers mixtures of animal fats and vegetable oils to be perfectly wholesome, but objects to the payment of fancy prices by persons in straitened circumstances, who suppose they are getting butter when they are not.

Comparative digestibility of butter and oleomargarine.—The most valuable experiments as to the relative digestibility of butter and oleomargarine were made by Adolph Mayer in 1883 (Landwirth, Versuchs-Anstalt, pp. 215-232), N. Kienzel in 1898 (Oest. Chem. Zeitung, 1, pp. 198-202, and 2, p. 145), and H. Lühring (Zeitschrift für Untersuch, der Nahr- und Genussmittel, June, 1899, p. 484), with the following results:

	A. Mayer.	N. Kienzel.	H. Lühring.	Average of all experiments.
Digestibility of—	Per cent.	Per cent.	Per cent.	Per cent.
Oleomargarine	96.40-95.80	95.64-95.72	96.68-96.70-96.93	96.27

From these feeding experiments it would appear that, while 97 per cent of the natural butter is digested, the digestibility of the artificial product is only about 0.7 per cent less; in other words, the two are practically alike in point of digestibility.

Professor Jolles, in a report to the Imperial Academy of Sciences, in Vienna, March, 1894, arrived at a similar conclusion. Hultgren and Lundergren, the Swedish physiologists, and Wibbens and Huizenga, from the Physiological Institute of Berlin, offer similar testimony. The last-named authors conclude their article in Archiv für die gesammte Physiologie LXXXIII, February, 1901, page 609, by saying:

"Everybody has to cut his coat according to the cloth, and it is therefore a great blessing for all mankind that those who have to deny themselves the regular use of natural butter will find in artificial butter a wholesome and cheap substitute."

As a teacher of hygiene, I have urged upon my students for years to bring the merits and nutritive value of this food stuff to the attention of the public, and in the interest of the wage-earners of this country to correct, as far as possible, the prejudice which has been created against the use of this product, provided always it is sold under its true name and at its real value. In this opinion I am glad to be supported by the highest scientific authorities in this country and abroad. Professor Schweitzer, of the Missouri State University, in his testimony before the Senate committee, states—

"That careful physiological experiments reveal no difference whatever in palatability and digestibility between butter and the brand of butterine which I have examined."

Professor Barker, of the University of Pennsylvania, considers butterine quite as valuable a nutritive agent as butter. Professor Johnson, of Yale University, says that for all the ordinary and culinary purposes it is the full equivalent of good butter made from cream, and regards the manufacture of oleomargarine as a legitimate and beneficent industry. Prof. J. S. W. Arnold, of the medical department, University of New York, characterizes it as "a blessing for the public and in every way a perfectly pure, wholesome, and palatable article of food." Henry Morton Stevens, Institute of Technology, New Jersey; S. C. Caldwell, of the chemical laboratory, Cornell University; Henry A. Mott, of New York; W. O. Atwater, Wesleyan University, Connecticut, all offered similar testimony.

Now, Mr. Chairman, we are told by eminent scientists that milk from which cream and butter is derived is frequently the cause of epidemics of typhoid fever, scarlatina, diphtheria, sore throat, and erysipelas. I here quote from Dr. George M. Kober, professor of hygiene, Georgetown University, in a statement on butter and butter substitutes, pages 89, 90, and 91, which was made before the Committee on Agriculture on the 14th of January, 1902:

EPIDEMICS OF MILK TYPHOID, SCARLATINA AND DIPHTHERIA, SORE THROAT, AND ERYSIPELAS.

We know now that disease germs may not only survive, but in many instances actually proliferate in the milk, and it is not a difficult matter to point out the many ways by which they may gain access, especially when some of the employees connected with the dairy or farm are also engaged in nursing the sick (as in examples marked †) or are suffering themselves from some mild infection while continuing their usual duties, or are convalescents from the disease. (See examples marked ‡.)

It is quite conceivable how animals wading in filth and sewage-polluted water or meadows may infect the udder or teats with the germs of typhoid fever, and through it the milk. (See instances marked !.) We can also appreciate how infected water may convey the germs by washing the utensils or by deliberate adulterations. (See instances marked §.) Infection may also take place through the agency of scrubbing brushes, dishcloths, and exposure to contaminated air. Last, but not least, the agency of flies and other insects as carriers of the germs to the milk and other food stuffs can not be ignored.

In 1895, in the city of Washington, I had abundant opportunity to observe the influence of flies in the spread of typhoid fever, and so recorded my opinion in my official report.

TYPHOID FEVER.

Of the 195 epidemics of milk typhoid, the writer has collected 110, Mr. E. Hart 69, and Freeman 16. The latter are included in the subjoined table, in which the main facts are presented. In 148 of these epidemics there is evidence of the disease having prevailed at the farm or dairy. In 67 instances it is probable that the infection reached the milk by soakage of the germs into the well water with which the utensils were washed, and in 16 instances, Nos. 7, 51, 70, 79, 103, 104, 113, 114, 115, 116, 120, 130, 136, 139, 149, 152, the intentional dilution with pollutted water is a matter of evidence.

In No. 184 the bacteria coli commune was demonstrated in the wash water. In Nos. 149 and 188 it is claimed that the specific germ of typhoid fever was isolated in the water supply, and in No. 189 sewage bacteria were found in ice cream sold by street vendors. In 7 instances (Nos. 12, 83, 121, 124, 131, 147, 178) the infection is attributed to the cows drinking or wading in sewage-polluted water and meadows. In 4 instances (Nos. 144, 151, 163, 189) the infection was spread in ice cream prepared in infected premises. In 7 instances the infection was spread through milk delivered at creameries (Nos. 96, 120, 146, 155, 172, 183, 188). In 24 instances the dairy employees also acted as nurses (Nos. 1, 4, 8, 14, 18, 19, 28, 34, 41, 43, 47, 52, 72, 77, 91, 127, 130, 137, 142, 154, 155, 165, 173, 177). In 10 instances the patients, while suffering from a mild attack of enteric fever or during the first week or ten days of their illness, continued at work, and those who are familiar with the personal habits of the average dairy boy will have no difficulty in surmising the manner of direct digital infection (Nos. 118, 119, 128, 132, 140, 162, 164, 166, 177, 190).

In one instance (No. 28) the milk tins were washed with the same dishcloth used among the fever patients. In No. 159 the man who milked the cows was also the night-soil scavenger, and probably conveyed the germs into his own family. In another instance (No. 177) a boy working at the dairy and who had recently driven a night-soil wagon developed typhoid fever. A sister of the boy was taken sick ten days later, their mother nursed them both and washed the dairy utensils, including a cloth milk strainer. In No. 111 the owner of a milch cow, whose child was sick with typhoid fever, kept the milk in a safe in the sick room, it being the only room at the disposal of this poor widow. In No. 182 Sir Cameron, the health officer of Dublin, believed the milk was infected by absorbing exhalations from the dejecta of the patient while being carried down the stairs.

He placed some enteric dejections close to a vessel of milk, and in ten minutes found that it had become infected, as proved by subsequent culture tests. In this, as well as similar instances, the writer would suggest that the contagion was carried by flies rather than by absorbing exhalations.

SCARLET FEVER EPIDEMICS.

Mr. Hart collected 21 epidemics, Dr. Freeman 5, and the writer 73, making a total of 99 epidemics spread through the medium of the milk supply, the details of which will be found in Table No. II.

In 68 instances the disease prevailed either at the milk farm or dairy. In 6 instances persons connected with the dairy either lodged in or had previously visited infected houses. (See Nos. 8, 9, 10, 11, 15, 45.) In Nos. 12 and 99 it is believed that the infection was conveyed from a fever house visited by the dairyman, who was in the habit of taking his milk can into the houses, and by means of infected empty bottles. In 17 instances the infection was doubtless conveyed by persons connected with the milk business, while suffering or recovering from an attack of the disease (see Nos. 2, 26, 30, 33, 47, 63, 64, 66, 76, 78, 80, 88, 89, 91, 95, 96, 98), and in at least 10 cases by persons who acted as nurses while handling the milk (Nos. 1, 2, 7, 9, 13, 14, 16, 29, 69, 92).

In three instances, Nos. 1, 86, 87, the milk had been kept in the cottage or rooms close to the sick room. In No. 75 the cows had been milked into an open tin vessel, which was carried across an open yard past an infected house, and in No. 59 the milkman had wiped his cans with white flannel cloths (presumably infected) which had been left in his barn by a peddler. Nos. 25 and 49 appear to have been instances of mixed infection of scarlet fever and diphtheria. In the Hornsey epidemic, No. 87, it was stated that "the milk was distributed by two men, and that at the houses at which one of these men delivered milk there were no cases at all, while at those at which the second man delivered there were 15 or 16 cases. At this man's house a child had suffered from scarlet fever, showing clearly the manner of infection as having taken place by infected clothing, and the germs were most likely conveyed into the milk while this man pushed his arm into the big can to fill the little ones during his rounds.

In 19 instances the infection was attributed to disease among the milch cows; in 4 of these (Nos. 19, 20, 21, 40), the puerperal condition of the animal is blamed. In 9 instances inflammation of the udder or teats was found (see Nos. 34, 38, 44, 46, 65, 67, 68, 72, 75), and in 6 instances loss of hair and casting of the skin in the animals were noted (Nos. 19, 20, 21, 43, 45, 46). As a matter of fact, many of the epidemics of scarlet fever and diphtheria in Great Britain have been attributed to a milk supply derived from animals suffering with local affections of the teats and udder. Thus, in November and December, 1885, an epidemic appeared at Marylebone, St. Pancreas, and Hampstead, which W. H. Power traced to a particular milk farm at Hendon, but could discover no sign of scarlet fever at or near the dairy.

Upon examination of the cows some of them were found to be suffering from an ulcerative disease of the teats and udders, and from various other circumstances he inclined to the belief of the bovine origin of this disease. This opinion was shared by the late Sir George Buchanan, who requested Dr. Klein to make an examination of the disease observed among the milch cows at Hendon. The latter found certain micrococci in the diseased tissues and organs of these cows and in the discharge from their teats, and succeeded in growing these in a variety of culture media. Inoculations of calves with this material, whether from cultures or direct from the cow, produced a disease having unmistakable affinities both with the Hendon disease and human scarlatina.

Klein found this microbe to inhabit the tissues and organs both of the human scarlatina patient and of the Hendon cow, and declared that we need no longer hesitate to call it the "micrococcus scarlatinæ."

These views were strongly combatted by Thin, Crookshank, and Brown, and from the evidence before us we conclude that there is no proof that there is a disease in the cow which is communicable as scarlet fever or diphtheria to man. This question, however, seems to us by no means settled, and is one that merits the most searching investigation by pathologists and bacteriologists. In the meantime there is nothing strained in the assumption that in these debatable instances and in all the epidemics marked with an asterisk (*), i. e., in 35 out of 135 epidemics of scarlet fever and diphtheria, tabulated by the writer, we are dealing with a streptococcus or staphylococcus infection, and it will often be impossible to differentiate clinically such attacks from true diphtheria and scarlet fever.

In addition to Klein's testimony as to the presence of a streptococcus in these cases, Guillebeau made an examination of the milk of 76 cows suffering from udder inflammation, in all of which he found pyogenic organisms, capable of producing similar inflammation when inoculated in healthy animals.

Dr. Cotterill has published epidemics of a febrile sore throat which appeared to be neither scarlet fever nor diphtheria, but nevertheless caused by the milk from cows which had an eruptive disease on the teats and udders. Grey Edwards, in August, 1897, published cases of follicular tonsilitis, in which the staphylococcus pyogenes aureus and albus, and the streptococcus pyogenes (short form) were not only found by Severn, director of a London pathological laboratory, in the suspected milk, and in the milk of a certain animal, but also in the sweeping (culture) from the throat. Moreover, Prudden reports 24 cases of diphtheria, in which all but two he demonstrated a streptococcus, probably identical with the streptococcus pyrogenes and streptococcus erysipelatous.

Baginsky, in 1892, reports that of 154 cases of diphtheria treated under his supervision, in 118 cases Löffler's bacillus was present, while in the remaining 36 only cocci (staphylococci and streptococci) could be demonstrated.

When we further consider that toxines may and do produce a scarletinous exanthem, we feel fully warranted in reaffirming our statement uttered five years ago, that in all the epidemics of scarlet fever and diphtheria which were traced to milk from cows suffering with some inflammatory lesions of the udder or from puerperal fever, we have typical instances of a streptococcus and staphylococcus infection.

DIPHTHERIA EPIDEMICS.

Mr. Hart collected 12 epidemics of milk diphtheria, Freeman 2, and the writer added 22 more, making in all 36 epidemics. (See Table III.) In 13 of these 36 instances diphtheria existed at the farm or dairy, and in 12 instances marked * the disease is attributed directly to the cows having gurget, chapped, and ulcerated conditions of the teats and udder. (See Nos. 2, 5, 8, 16, 22, 23, 24, 25, 28, 29, 31, 34.) In No. 26 one of the dairymaids suffered from a sore throat of an erysipelatous character. In No. 33 the patient continued to milk while suffering from diphtheria. In No. 35 the driver of the wagon was suffering from a sore throat, which Professor Howard believes to have been diphtheria, although the bacillus diphtheriæ was not demonstrated in this case, the cultures having been made at least five or six days after the subsidence of the throat symptoms and the probable disappearance of the false membrane.

It is, of course, difficult to account for the infectious qualities of the milk in those epidemics where the disease in question could not be found at the milk farm or shop. In the epidemics of so-called scarlet fever and diphtheria which were attributed to inflammatory conditions of the teats and udder, for reasons already given we feel justified in believing that we have to deal with a staphylococcus or streplococcus infection, while in the typhoid epidemics traced to milk farms or shops where no cases of enteric fever could be found, we are either forced to the conclusion that the specific germs remained dormant for a long time, or that certain varieties of bacteria may acquire virulent properties by suitable environments, which, unfortunately, too often exist in connection with milk farms.

The possibility of the infectious germs being carried by flies into the milk should not be overlooked, nor the fact that milk bottles from infected houses and which have been exposed in the sick room may and probably are often the medium of conveying the primary contagion to the dairy, and the health department of Washington, as soon as a case of diphtheria or scarlatina is reported, notifies the dairyman to discontinue leaving bottles, but as Dr. Walsh justly remarks, "there is danger of contagion before the case is diagnosed, or in cases where the disease is not recognized at all."

It is interesting to note that of 195 epidemics of milk typhoid, 99 of scarlet fever, and 36 of diphtheria, a total of 330 epidemics, 243 have been recorded by English authors, 52 by American, 14 by German, and 11 by Scandinavians, and 5 each came from Australian and French sources. This is probably due to the fact that the English and Americans usually consume milk in a raw state, while in Germany, France, and the Continent of Europe milk is rarely used without previous boiling (sterilization). It can scarcely be an index alone of the greater interest taken in England and the United States in preventive medicine.

This is quoted to show that butter made from milk and cream may be, under certain circumstances, very unhealthful, and that, as a matter of comparison, oleomargarine has at least an equal showing to the respect and confidence of the people as a good food product.

During the debate on the Grout bill at the last session of Congress Mr. Bailey of Kansas, a member of the House, a large cattle raiser, stated that the manufacture of oleomargarine made every beef cattle worth to the owner from $1 to $2 per head more by reason of the utilization of the fat for the manufacture of butterine, oleomargarine, and similar products. We see, therefore, that the man that raises cattle to sell for beef, the cotton planter that raises cotton and sells his seed for oil is entitled to some rights, and his products should not be discriminated against and taxed to give an advantage to the dairymen of the country.

I see from the bulletin just issued to-day by the Census Department from a report made by Daniel C. Roper, expert special agent on cotton-seed products, that last year there were 93,325,729 gallons of cotton-seed oil produced in the United States. His tables are as follows:

Forty-nine million gallons were exported last year, which left 45,000,000 for home consumption, of which a little less than one-fourth went into the manufacture of oleomargarine. Commenting on the increase of the production of cotton-seed oil, that eminent statistician says:

The increase in the production from 281,054 gallons in 1876 to 5,352,530 gallons in 1879 was much in excess of the supply required for the limited field in which it was then utilized. About this time, however, it was discovered that cotton-seed oil could be advantageously combined with beef fat to make a substitute for lard. Then followed the further discoveries that this oil could be utilized in packing American sardines and, in combination with other substances, in making artificial butter. This increased the demand and gave a permanent stimulus to the industry.

In the year 1899 nearly 9,000,000 pounds of cotton oil went into the manufacture of oleomargarine, and I have just been informed by the statistician of the Agricultural Department 200,000 barrels of refined cotton oil, or 220,000 barrels of crude oil, to obtain which required 250,000 tons of seed to be crushed, were used in said manufacture in the year 1901. At 25 cents per gallon this would be about two and one-fourth million dollars, or, more accurately, about $2,220,000.

In the hearing before the Senate committee in 1901 Mr. D. A. Tompkins, of Charlotte, N. C., an expert oil manufacturer and statistician, in reply to the question as to how the cotton-seed interests would be affected by the Grout bill, said:

Mr. TOMPKINS. I can tell you right now that they have $6,000,000 worth of interest a year in it if this bill is passed in depreciation of the value of cotton seed. According to my estimate of 3,000,000 tons of cotton seed which are used for making oil every year, their loss would be $6,000,000 a year—the loss of the cotton-seed people alone. Now, you would bleed the working people of the country of ten millions more, and you would bleed the stock people of five. That is what you would do. That is an estimate of the value, in dollars and cents, of these interests.

Before the same committee Mr. Henry Bond, of Tennessee, representing the cotton-seed interests of that State, said:

Testimony heretofore given before your committee indicates that about 40,000 barrels of cotton-seed oil are used in the manufacture of that portion of oleomargarine that is consumed in this country annually; and while we have no definite data, the impression prevails that more margarine oil is exported than is used here.

The mills of Tennessee will crush this year about 150,000 tons of seed and make over 100,000 barrels of oil, or probably just about enough to fill the requirements of the oleomargarine trade.

The oleomargarine manufacturers, however, use only the very best grades of cotton-seed oil wherever they can find it, and pay higher prices than the mills can obtain from any other source, and we believe that their demands go a long way toward setting the market price for the whole cotton-seed oil production.

After it was known last spring that Congress would not (for some time, at least) further impede the oleomargarine business the price of cotton-seed oil at once advanced, and the advance was maintained all during the summer and fall, until Congress reassembled and renewed the attack upon it. Since then, although other conditions seemed to warrant the expectation of higher prices, oil has declined about 5 cents per gallon, or $2.50 per barrel, and we believe this decline is due to the threatened legislation against oleomargarine, which deters the manufacturers from making purchases for future use.

Favorable weather all fall and winter had expedited the picking and ginning of the cotton and the marketing of the seed. That part of the business is practically over now, and there is no way in which the mills can protect themselves, so that they alone will have to bear the burden of the loss this season.

Hereafter, however, should the Grout bill or any similar prohibitory measure become law, and these conclusions be correct, the mills, in self-protection, will be forced to reduce the price of seed to correspond with the reduced price of oil, and the farmers will then have to bear the loss.

A decline of $2.50 per barrel in the price of oil will necessitate a reduction of $2.50 per ton in the price of seed; and upon that basis the Tennessee mills alone would pay out for the quantity of seed used this year $375,000 less than they would otherwise do, even if there should be no further decline in the market price of oil; and this loss would fall upon the class of farmers least able to bear it.

This statement applies with equal force and truth to every oil mill, and on the same basis will indicate, on the 2,000,000 tons of seed bought by the 400 mills an annual loss to the farmers of the South of $5,000,000; and this, mark you, is caused merely by the fear of the enactment of the law. What depression would result from its actual enactment can only be conjectured.

A few words about our product:

The manufacture of cotton-seed oil is conducted entirely by means of machinery, and with the utmost cleanliness. From the time it leaves the fields as seed cotton until it leaves the mills as oil it is not touched by hand. As it is the cheapest edible oil known, it is not possible to profitably adulterate it. Its nutritive qualities are so well recognized by physicians that its use is often indicated by them, even in its crude state, to those of their patients who, suffering from tuberculosis and other wasting diseases, are unable to buy the higher-priced olive and cod liver oils. Its palatability is known by everyone engaged in its manufacture. Though oil mills run only a few months in the year, they never have any trouble in getting hands, and at the time of starting up are usually overwhelmed with applicants. A negro will quit any other job to get where he can inhale the fragrant odor of the oil and drink as much of it as he pleases.

Besides the interests of the cotton planter, cotton-oil manufacturer, the swine raiser, and the cattle raiser, there are millions of laboring people of the United States who are affected by this legislation.

The live-stock associations and the labor unions of the United States have generally passed resolutions against the passage of this law, as they regard oleomargarine to-day as the poor man's butter, and its consumption is rapidly increasing, not only in this country, but throughout the world. It is sweet, pure, wholesome, and cheap, and within the reach of every laboring man throughout the length and breadth of this country.

Labor can afford to purchase it at prices from 15 to 20 cents per pound. They can not afford to buy creamery butter even at the present price of 35 cents per pound, much less to pay 50 cents per pound, which is the real object of the solicitude of these creamery manipulators. It is one of the tenets of the great party of which I have the honor to be an humble member that it advocates equal rights to all and special privileges to no man. In other words, it contends for those measures which confer the greatest good on the greatest number. It is opposed to class legislation, and both the pending bill and the Wadsworth substitute are obnoxious to the theory of government which is its purpose and mission to establish.

There is not one creamery in the United States where there are 1,000 cotton planters, cattle raisers, and laborers.

Are we, then, by this drastic measure to affect the interest of 1,000 of the good citizens of our country—the substance, the bone, the very sinew of our land—and discriminate against them in favor of the one creamery?

I hope not.

A just government does not discriminate in favor of one class of its people against another. It leaves each class to work out its destiny in generous rivalry, unfettered by restrictive laws, but encouraged to go forward in the development of its work and business, with the confident assurance of the equal protection of the laws of the land.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the wise course for this Government to pursue as to this question, I submit, is this:

Let each article, whether it be butter or oleomargarine, stand on its own merits. Make it severely punishable by law for any person to manufacture or sell oleomargarine shipped to another State unless the package containing it is branded or stamped as oleomargarine.

Or, preferably, give the States, as provided for in section 1 of the pending bill, the power to regulate its sale. The States will pass the proper statutes prohibiting the sale under false pretenses. This remedy will be ample and complete to protect the citizen from being defrauded, and the Revised Statutes of the United States will have expunged from it a most iniquitous and pernicious piece of class legislation.

It is the evil example of unjustly fostering one enterprise at the expense of another, by excessive and unjust tariff laws, which has so seared, if not corrupted, the public conscience as to at last make it respectable for the butter manufacturers to clamor for protection against a legitimate rival industry—not of foreign competition, but one conducted at home by American enterprise, genius, and capital. [Loud applause.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. JENKINS having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. PARKINSON, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 1447. An act to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Spokane, in the State of Washington; and

S. 3509. An act to transfer the county of Carroll from the northwestern division of the northern district of Georgia back to the northern district of Georgia of the United States district and circuit courts.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the following resolution:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the Clerk of the House of Representatives be directed, in the enrollment of the bill H. R. 9315, to insert the word "thirteenth" on page 9, in line 9, in lieu of the word "thirtieth."

OLEOMARGARINE.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, my lamented and distinguished predecessor, the late Dr. Stokes, was a member of the Agricultural Committee, which thoroughly considered this same bill last year. He was among the members of the committee who signed the minority report on this bill, and entered his most solemn protest against the passage of the majority report. My great faith in the soundness of his judgment upon all propositions which came under his consideration would be a strong inducement to me to record my vote against this bill. But I have made an independent investigation of the subject, and have found, as I most invariably found during my long association with him, that his judgment was reliable and his conclusions wise and just.

Mr. Chairman, so extraordinary a piece of legislation as is contemplated by this bill should demand of its sponsors and promoters extraordinary reasons for its enactment into law. A bill that purposes to use the taxing power of Congress to restrict and hamper the sale of one industry, honest and legitimate in its character, so that another industry may thereby secure a monopoly of the trade at present divided between the two, should show alarming conditions to insure its favorable consideration by this House.

There should be a general demand for such legislation coming from all the people everywhere, and not a single voice representing a single dollar of vested property or stored-up labor, should cry out against it, before this Congress could be justified in violating the spirit of our Constitution in giving its sanction to this bill. An alarming public need is the only condition that could give a semblance of justification to a measure so arbitrary, discriminating, and unjust in its effects.

There might be extraordinary occasions, such as a depleted Treasury, resulting from extraordinary expenses, incurred, perhaps, in the prosecution of war or in an enterprise of general and public benefit, demanding such extraordinary legislation, in order to meet a public need; but it is hard even to imagine circumstances so exceptional as to justify such an exercise of the taxing power of Congress.

We have looked through volumes of testimony dealing with every phase of this matter, read numerous able and exhaustive articles, followed closely all the elaborate controversies touching this question, and studied carefully the clear-cut and unmistakable decisions of the Supreme Court and the various authorities on constitutional law affecting the issue here presented in a vain and ineffectual effort to find some reason for the remarkable and indefensible position assumed by the advocates of this bill.

Nowhere can there be found solid ground for them to stand upon, and we find them shifting from one position in 1886, when they asserted oleomargarine was unhealthful and unwholesome, to an exactly opposite position taken the other day by the leader of the majority of the committee reporting this bill, when he flew away from the old position, admitted the wholesomeness and healthfulness of the article, but charged that it was being fraudulently sold in competition with creamery butter.

They take a position one day that there is no purpose to destroy the oleomargarine industry, that they are only after its illegal sale, and the next day its stoutest advocates, in cold blood and premeditatedly, substantially declare the intention of this bill to be: the stamping out of the oleomargarine industry. They are like the proverbial flea—it is there and it is not there. You follow these men in their reasoning to a point where it seems they must reach a conclusion and take a position, and before you know it, they have gone off on a tangent, disappeared, gone up in vapor, and you find you have been following a logical will-o'-the-wisp, an argumentative chimera.

A close analysis of their devious windings, however, shows one purpose more distinctly than any other, and that is their disguised intention to drive the oleomargarine manufacturer from the field of competition with creamery butter. Cover it up as they may, the purpose crops out under the fire of debate. For instance, Mr. ADAMS, in arguing the side of the advocates of the bill, exclaimed:

> There is no use beating about the bush in this matter. We want to pass this law and drive the oleomargarine manufacturers out of the business.

Another instance, when Mr. Knight, secretary of the National Dairy Union, in his famous letter of May 18, 1900, wrote:

> Now is the time for you to clip the fangs of the mighty octopus of the oleomargarine manufacturers.

Another admission of the same purpose, by ex-Governor Hoard, in his testimony last year before the House Agricultural Committee, speaking for the National Dairy Union and the interest represented by it, used these plain words in reference to the purpose of this bill:

> In plain words, this is repressive taxation.

I admire the candor of the governor. It is in striking contrast to the hypocritical palaver of some other of the advocates of this measure, whose intentions, though similar to those of Governor Hoard, are disguised in profuse expressions of sympathy for the consumer, who, they say, is defrauded and imposed upon, and for the dairyman, who, they assert, is brought in competition with an article doing an unfair business.

Whoever heard of a trust sympathizing with the man it is fleecing? And it is fleecing both the dairyman and the consumer. Their sympathy is such sympathy as a lion has for the lamb. If there is anything, above all things, which the Almighty looks with favor upon, it is a candid man going at things in a direct way; and I think if there is anything which arouses His supreme contempt and disgust, it is the hypocrite. The world loves an honest and direct man and despises the hypocrite and knave.

The success of the promoters of this legislation in driving a bill similar to the one under consideration through this House by a two-thirds majority at the last session has emboldened them to more fully uncover their positions. They are saying things now which they would not have dared say last year. Governor Hoard has added a later edition to his testimony of last year, and we find him perfectly frank in admitting that this bill is aimed, primarily, at the destruction of the oleomargarine industry. Before the Committee on Agriculture on January 15, 1902, in reply to the direct question as to his wish if this bill failed to reduce the manufacture of oleomargarine, he said:

> In that case, sir, I would come before Congress and demand a still higher tax.

In other words, the Governor wants this Congress to understand that if this bill fails to rid his people of an annoying, yet legitimate, competitor, he will come back here and ask for the passage of a bill which will accomplish that purpose. If this load fails to do the work, he serves notice on us that he will load with heavier shot the next time. Other admissions, expressions, and deductions could be given, but they would only serve as cumulative evidence and have no value in establishing the main point.

I can not see how any fair mind, after studying the testimony as given at the several hearings before the Committees on Agriculture of the House and Senate, can hesitate in concluding that the direct and only purpose of those most directly interested in the passage of the majority report of the committee on this bill is to destroy, root and branch, a successful rival of the creamery butter trust for the supply of butter or butter substitutes to the country. This is the only reason that I can see for the adoption of the majority report.

Congress is to be made the tool with which one individual destroys the property of another. It is lending the Government to the purposes of the robber and confiscator. It is giving governmental sanction to the destruction of legitimate enterprise. It is holding up one enterprise by governmental hands and with the same hand cutting the throat of an equally deserving enterprise. It is subverting the high functions of this Congress to small and mean uses.

Mr. Chairman, we have gotten the purpose of this legislation—the destruction of the colored oleomargarine industry. Let us go one step farther and learn the character of oleomargarine, what it is, and what are its uses. It is a cheap substitute for butter, made of certain products of the cow, hog, and the oil of cotton seed. It is absolutely healthful and wholesome. This is admitted by dairymen themselves, and the consumers of the product, and the overwhelming weight of scientific opinion.

Those who eat the article have had no harmful results from it, and all agree in pronouncing it a very palatable and satisfactory substitute for butter and less dangerous as a carrier of disease germs than the highest-price butter, because it is subjected to a great heat in its manufacture and the germs are killed. It is more palatable and pleasing to the taste than the low-price butter, and is meeting a sale which strongly testifies to its purity and popularity. It is cheaper than high-price butter and as good, and is as cheap as low-price butter and better and more palatable. It meets every requirement of the rules of health, and is a valuable addition to the food supply of the world.

It is a legitimate article of commerce, having all the rights to the protection of the law which such legitimacy gives to every such article of commerce. If there is doubt about the correctness of this proposition, we prove it by invoking the decision of the Supreme Court in the Shallenberger case and the implications carried by the act of Congress of 1886 imposing a 2-cent tax on the colored product. The court in this case, speaking of the effect of the law of 1886 in legitimatizing oleomargarine, uses this language:

> This shows that Congress, at the time of its passage in 1886, recognized the article as a proper subject of taxation, and as one which was the subject of traffic and exportation to foreign countries and of importation from such countries. Its manufacture was recognized as a lawful pursuit, and taxation was levied upon the manufacturer of the article, upon the wholesale and retail dealers therein, and also upon the article itself.

At another point, and in the same connection, the court uses language which leaves no doubt as to its meaning. It says:

> The article is a subject of export and is largely used in foreign countries. Upon all these facts we think it apparent that oleomargarine has become a proper subject of commerce among the States and foreign nations.

In the light of that language and the testimony of the experts and scientists, the legitimacy of the product is well established, and we are brought face to face with the proposition whether or not Congress has the legal or moral right to use its taxing power to destroy a legitimate article of commerce.

Boiled down to its essence, this legislation attempts to pervert the taxing power of the Government by using it to strike down free and open competition between home industries, giving to one a monopoly, with capacity to raise or lower prices of an important food product at its will, and driving the other from the field of legitimate trade. Does this Congress have the authority in law or morals to destroy an enterprise, honest in its character, which is giving to the wage-earner and laboring man all over this country a cheap, wholesome, and healthful article of food? No one, I believe, has so far forgotten the fundamental principles of right and equity underlying our free institutions as to give a serious affirmative to such a proposition.

The question is elemental, and the merest casual student of the theories, giving such beauty and strength to our system of government, must unhesitatingly deny to Congress such a right. It is true Congress has the constitutional right to levy taxes for public purposes. In other words, it is within the power and right of this body to lay a tax for the purpose of raising revenue to meet the expenses of the Government. Such taxation would be for the benefit of all the people, without discrimination, and is agreeable to the spirit of our institutions and to our notions of right. Equally elemental is the negative of the principle just laid down.

Congress has no right to use its taxing power except for the purpose of meeting the public need; and when it gives its sanction to a measure whose purpose is not to raise revenues beneficial to all the people alike—for such purpose is affirmatively disclaimed by the sponsors of this legislation and is disproven by the overflowing condition of the Treasury—it goes clearly beyond its power. When legislation is intended to crush one industry that another may exact unrestrained tribute of all the people, Congress violates the letter and spirit of our fundamental law when it gives its approval.

There is entire unanimity of judicial authority sustaining this contention. The doctrine is recognized everywhere and by everyone. Theorist, economist, and constitutional lawyers and writers unite in denying to Congress the right to use its taxing power in the interest of one industry against another. In a case the Supreme Court of the United States uses this pointed language in speaking against governmental favoritism:

> To lay with one hand the power of the Government on the property of the citizen, and with the other bestow it upon favorite individuals to aid private enterprises and build up private fortunes is none the less a robbery because it is done under the forms of the law and is called taxation.

Along this same line, and in the same case, the court says:

> There can be no lawful tax which is not laid for public purposes.

The power of Congress to make pets and favorites of one industry, of one class of people, at the expense of another industry and to the detriment of another class of people, is here expressly denied by the highest judicial tribunal in the land. Such a perversion of the taxing power of the Government will not and should not be tolerated by the people who have its power always to fear.

If this bill passes this House, Mr. Chairman, and it meets the expectation of its friends, it will violate one of the most sacred rights guaranteed by the Constitution—the right to protection in the use and enjoyment of property. Millions of dollars have been invested in the oleomargarine industry upon the assumption that the usual protection afforded by the Government against interference with legitimate enterprise would be given it. This property has become a vested right in the hands of the individual, and so long as it is used in a way not injurious to the health and the morals of the people, so long as it respects the rights of others and conforms itself to the requirements of the law, it challenges the equal protection of the law guaranteed it by the Constitution.

It is proposed in this bill to forget the Constitution, to forget right and to destroy the property of men who have spent their lives in accumulating it. It is proposed to lay the heavy hand of the Government on a vested right whose only sin is the sin of being the rival of large monopolies already existing, and of contemplated monopolies, the executive officer of one of which, if the press reports are true, is to receive a salary as large as the President of the United States. We are asked to close our ears to the appeals of reason and fairness and to shut our eyes to the bold letters of the Constitution and the various decisions of the courts.

It is sought to have us turn our backs on the dangers lurking in such a use of the power to tax. We are asked to establish a precedent when we know it will bring down upon this Congress, in the future, thousands of demands for legislation whose only object is to drive competition from the field and to establish monopoly of trade. We are asked to give legislative force to the doctrine of might over right, we are urged to cover up wrong with a legislative cloak, and to set an example of governmental favoritism and unfairness. Why give to the world this miserable exhibition of legislative heedlessness and cowardice?

I do not impugn the motive of any man voting for this measure. I take it that he is acting in accordance with his conception of right. I protest against the idea which seems current, that public position makes men dishonest or susceptible to influences which would not affect them in private life. Public men are just as honest as the general public, as a rule. A Representative is the exponent of public honesty just as he is the exponent of public intelligence. He represents as much the virtues of his people, or their vices, as he does their political and individual opinion.

If the public sense of right and justice is warped, the representative of that sentiment will be proportionately warped. In this case I think each man is voting his conscience, and I think he is representing what the conscience of his constituency at present seems to be. This bill will pass. That is inevitable. But I believe it will inevitably be repealed. My unshaken faith in the honest intent of the American people and their representatives on the floor of this House gives me reason to think this legislative monstrosity will ultimately meet the fate of all such abortions of justice and right.

Mr. Chairman, the effect of this kind of legislation will be disastrous, and this particular bill, if it passes, will be invoked as a precedent for all kinds of legislation, selfish in its nature and unjust in its effect. It sets the example and asserts the right of Congress to officiously intermeddle with private individuals in their lawful pursuits, lending itself to the one to the destruction of the other. The principle in this bill is just as wrong as the principle which induced Congress to place a tax on State-bank issue in order that national banks might have a monopoly of the banking business of the country. It is a vicious principle whose evil effects are unlimited.

By giving Congress the power to destroy competition we are giving it the power to create monopolies. You say, in substance, that whenever the pressure is great enough, whenever the clamor is loud enough, Congress has a right to come to the rescue of an industry by destroying its competing rival. The moment you assert that principle you throw wide open the door for every class and kind of legislation looking to the destruction of competition and resulting in the creation of monopolies that will eat into the vitals of the body politic, control its legislation, and administer its laws.

This legislation aims specifically at the perpetuation of the butter trust, but its effect will be the creation of numberless monopolies. If it is right for Congress to destroy competition in the interest of the butter trust, is it too great a stretch of the imagination to predict the coming of the day when this same body, acting upon this precedent, reasoning analogously from this example, will legislate out of existence certain unfavored and weak industries in the interest of certain others, stronger and more favored?

The same principle which gives Congress the right to destroy the oleomargarine for the benefit of the butter industry can be called upon to destroy our Southern molasses industry that the maple-sirup industry may be without competition. Why, it is a fact that there has already been introduced into this House a bill in the interest of woolgrowers of Ohio as against the cotton grower of the South. It is almost identical in principle with the one now under discussion. It purposes to hamper and restrict the sale and manufacture of a certain cloth called "shoddy," into which cotton enters as a component part.

The same hypocritical reason is given for the passage of both the bills, and the real purpose in both is to stifle free competition, and thereby perpetuate monopoly. No one objects to labeling oleomargarine so that the consumer may know what he is buying, and the minority report on this bill proposes this, and I am willing to support it. Every safeguard should be used to prevent the fraudulent sale of oleomargarine, and what is said of oleomargarine is equally applicable to the sale of butter which has been renovated and given false color. We should throw no restrictions around the sale of one which we do not throw around the other. Let each tub stand on its own bottom. The deserving will stand the longer.

This body has never been called to pass upon a more drastic piece of class legislation. And what is the reason offered by the advocates of this bill for its passage? It is claimed that oleomargarine is sold fraudulently as butter, and is therefore a dishonest competitor. They say it is possible to make these fraudulent sales because it is given a yellow color—the same color assumed by Elgin butter. They therefore ask for a tax on colored oleomargarine sufficient to drive the industry from the field of legitimate commerce.

The butter men assert a right to the use of the yellow color and come to this Congress and ask it to deny that color to oleomargarine. Butter has no patent right to a yellow color. The truth is, butter is not yellow except during a few months of the year when the cow is feeding upon rich pasturage. During the winter months butter is almost white in its natural color, but when you go to buy it in the market it is always yellow. How comes it so? The beautiful golden tint is added to it, and for the purpose of deceiving the buyer into the belief that he is getting the butter of a fat, sleek, well-fed Jersey cow.

The public has been educated to think yellow is the best butter. It is more pleasing to the eye and is in greater demand, and brings from 5 to 10 cents more per pound in the market than its unfortunate uncolored white companion. Hence the color is added, and poor, inferior, rancid butter is revamped and renovated and colored and is sold for first-class butter. The color is the thing that catches the bird. The trade demands it. Yet the dairymen are asking Congress to forbid to others the doing of a thing which they themselves do, and urge their contention with all the vehemence of pharisaism run mad.

I can not see why we should deny to oleomargarine any privilege which we accord to butter. To give butter color and added value and to deny oleomargarine color, thereby destroying it, is class legislation of the most pronounced type and will come back to haunt this House. It is contrary to the principle of "equal and exact justice to all," and a dangerous field for this Congress to enter into. We have no right to discriminate between equally meritorious industries. In the court of conscience it is condemned. It is unsound and vicious in principle, dangerous and unsafe in policy.

Ten years ago a bill so far-reaching in its effect, so violative of the personal and property rights of the citizen, so infringing upon the power of the States, so discriminating and unjust in the treatment of a legitimate enterprise, could not have been reported from a committee to this House. But in these days of marvelous progress, when men worship mammon, when we forget the traditions of the fathers and go off into a policy despised by patriots, when we shut our eyes to the struggles of a people to be free, when we are the aggressors in a war of subjugation, despoilers of home and fireside, there is no wonder that we should give tolerance to this iniquity.

We are now beginning to reap the whirlwind of protection. The wolves are beginning to tear each other. Those who can not get a monopoly by tariff taxation are coming here to get it by having Congress place a prohibitory tax on the produce of a rival. The whole theory of protection for protection's sake is wrong, and the wrong principle is working itself out in this masked assault upon legitimate effort. You will reap what you sow, is a principle running through national as well as individual life. In protection we have sown to the wind, and in this legislation we are reaping the whirlwind. Shall we go on forever disregarding the principles of justice and heeding the insistency of greed until Right lies handcuffed at the feet of Might?

Mr. Chairman, the practical effect of this bill is the creation of a great butter monopoly, with the power to regulate butter prices to suit itself. The price of creamery butter will go up, to what extent no one can tell. This is measured only by the greed of the monopoly, and ordinarily that is limited only by the utmost capacity of the consumer to pay. The dairymen believe their product will be greatly advanced in value by this legislation, and hence the vim which has characterized their efforts to secure favorable consideration.

In this conclusion reason and common sense concur. When all competition is gone, there is nothing to prevent the monopoly then created from raising the price of butter. Who will be benefited by this? No one except the large dairymen and the butter monopoly. It gives them the power to reach into the pockets of the consumer and demand their own prices for butter. The small farmer, with a few cows furnishing a few pounds of butter each week for sale, will never know the difference, so far as the price received for his butter is concerned.

The local merchant, the local market, will continue to regulate the price of country butter in the future as it has done in the past. Butter raised on our farms, where it is only a very minor product, does not go into the general market, and is not affected by general market prices. A rise in the price of Elgin butter does not carry with it a corresponding rise in the price of country butter. Elgin butter will bring 35 cents per pound in Columbia, while the average price for country butter will not exceed 20 cents per pound. This legislation will help the Elgin manufacturer of butter because it gives him a monopoly, but it will not raise the price of country butter one iota, and will not, therefore, help the producer of the country product. The butter trust alone will be benefited by this legislation.

In support of the contentions here made—that the small farmer will not be benefited by destroying the oleomargarine industry—I want to quote from the testimony of Governor Hoard, and he is the man leading the fight for the butter trust. On page 28 of the hearings before the committee the following is shown:

Mr. SCOTT. I ask you if oleomargarine does not compete chiefly with the cheaper grades of butter, and is it not a fact that it has no effect on the better grades of butter?

Mr. HOARD. No, sir. It sells for the best grade of butter wherever it can be imposed.

The above is a direct refutation of the idea some farmers have been led into having, that by destroying oleomargarine added value will be given to the few pounds of butter that they are able to sell each week. As shown here, the spokesman of the butter interest distinctly denies that oleomargarine comes in competition with the butter made on the small farms, and therefore, whatever might become of the industry, the price of farm butter would not be affected in the least. But the price of butter made by the large manufacturers, who turn out thousands of pounds of butter each day, is affected by the competition of oleomargarine and kept within reasonable limits by it, and that is why oleomargarine is sought to be destroyed.

The solicitude of the friends of this bill for the consumer of butter is amusing in its absurd hypocrisy. They tell us they wish to protect the public from the imposition of unscrupulous manufacturers. They are emphatically silent about protecting the great consuming public against the greed of the butter monopoly. If the wage-earner and laboring man had wished the passage of this bill, he would not have hesitated in making that wish known to the committee. But instead of hearing any demand for this enactment, the spokesman of the great labor organization of this country appeared before the committee last year and strongly protested against this legislation.

Every factory operative, every miner, every laborer who is a consumer of butter, we are assured, enters his solemn protest against this bill which is so inimical to their best interest. They assert the right to choose between butter and a cheap but wholesome substitute, and they claim the right to have that substitute colored to suit their taste.

They tell us that a great many of their more unfortunate number, living in large cities, can not afford the luxury of creamery butter even now, and they predict when the only competitor of creamery butter is destroyed, as it will be by the passage of this bill, when there is no rival remaining to equalize the butter market, giving the consumer a reasonable price, when the butter monopoly is consummated, the price of butter, such as they can get, will rise to such a degree as to put a prohibition on its use by the poor man. It will practically dry up the butter on the bread of the wage-earner, the man who works at the forge and in the factory, whose toil is ceaseless and whose luxuries are few.

Butterine is the friend of the poor man. It stands between him and the butter trust. They tell us we have no right to assume to dictate to them what shall go on their table, and if I mistake not the grit that is in them they will resent such interference with this privilege, and they ought to resent it.

But in addition to the well-founded objection to this kind of legislation, already urged, there are other objections, selfish in their character, no doubt, which intensify the opposition of Southern members to this bill.

When we take into consideration the fact that cotton-seed oil is one of the chief ingredients of oleomargarine, it is not surprising that a majority of Southern members, representing the great cotton belt of the country, should note most carefully every phase of this question before giving their assent to the bill. To pass this bill is to hurt the cotton-seed industry of the South. In proof of this proposition I quote from resolutions adopted by the cotton-oil superintendents from North Carolina and South Carolina at Charleston, S. C., July 6, 1900:

That this association implores Congress not to destroy an industry which now uses nearly 10,000,000 of the best grade of cotton-seed oil annually, and thus kill that quantity of our most profitable output.

In this same connection, to show the effect of this legislation and to call attention to the magnitude of the cotton-seed industry in the South, I desire to make a few extracts from the statement of Mr. Oliver, representing the cotton-seed-oil men of the two Carolinas and Georgia, made before the Committee on Agriculture last year. I want to show just the amount of money that this bill will drive out of the South, and just the amount of money the cotton producer, the farmer, gets out of this industry. He said:

The cotton-seed-oil interests of the South have invested in plants not less than $50,000,000. The working capital necessary to conduct the business is not less than $50,000,000 more, making $100,000,000 employed in the business. The mills have converted a product, namely, cotton seed, which was once considered a perfect nuisance by the farmers and ginners, into an article bringing to the cotton planter millions of dollars and to the laboring man millions more and to the railroads a large and profitable tonnage in and out, amounting to millions of dollars in freight. There has been paid to the cotton producers this season not less than $40,000,000 for about two-fifths of the seed produced. There has been paid to the railroads to haul the seed in and the products of oil mills out not less than $15,000,000. There has been paid to laborers dependent upon the manufacture of cotton seed at least $10,000,000, making a grand total paid out by the oil mills of not less than $65,000,000, and this for a product that forty years ago was considered absolutely worthless, and for only two-fifths of the seed produced, the balance being used on the farms for fertilizing and for cattle feed.

The cotton-seed industry is in its infancy. It is easily within the memory of many of the members of this House when cotton seed were considered by the majority of farmers as of no value whatever except as a fertilizer. But the discovery of the value of cotton-seed oil and cotton-seed meal has developed a market for cotton seed which has made the by-product at least a third as valuable as the product itself. In other words, cotton seed forms about 30 per cent of the value of the cotton crop.

The cotton grower, the farmer, the large farmer and the small farmer, the man who raises a hundred bales of cotton, and the man who raises only one is directly and vitally interested in the defeat of this bill, which will cripple the cotton-seed oil industry, and thereby greatly lessen the demand for his cotton seed. As just stated, the cotton-seed business is young. As yet it is hardly out of its swaddling clothes. To what extent it may ultimately develop if unhampered by discriminating legislation is reasoned out by the gentleman just quoted. He says:

If the oil mills are not crippled by adverse legislation in this country and others it is only a matter of time when all cotton seed not required for planting will be worked up in oil mills, creating a market value for the seed, money paid out for transportation and labor, from a crop of 12,000,000 bales of cotton, a grand total amounting to at least $150,000,000, or about one-half of the value of the cotton crop itself.

This gives an idea of what the cotton-seed business may mean to the South. One hundred and fifty millions of dollars added to the property value of the South! One hundred and fifty millions of dollars for one farm by-product! To destroy that industry means something to the farmer of the South, and he is protesting against this bill, this stab at one of his most valuable and developing products.

The cotton-seed industry in South Carolina alone amounted last year—and it is rapidly increasing each year—to over three and one-half million dollars. The actual value to the farmer—the cotton grower—was over two and one-quarter million dollars. Who can estimate what that value will be ten years hence? And shall we pass this bill and cripple that enterprise which is and is to be of such vast importance to the cotton farmers? As business men, viewing a business proposition, we can not vote for this bill, but we oppose it on higher ground than this, and upon these higher grounds we are willing to have the country judge us.

I am against this bill, because we have no constitutional authority to use the taxing power of Congress to destroy a legitima e article of commerce. I am against it because it gives added powers to the National Government, and that is dangerous and undemocratic. I am against it because it seeks to destroy competition and create monopoly, and that is un-American. I am against it because it is the rankest kind of class legislation, and that is contrary to the genius of our institutions. I am against it because it makes this Congress a party to a mean and contemptible assault upon an honest product, and that is cowardly. I am against it because it is governmental favoritism, and that is unfair. I am against it because it is applying the Republican doctrine of protective tariff to home industry and seeks to inaugurate an internal tariff movement, and that is dangerous. I am against it because it sets a bad precedent for legislation, and that is unwise. I am against it because it is a violation of the rights of vested property, and that is wrong.

There is no principle in law or morals that will sanction it. There is no doctrine of Democracy agreeable to it. Every instinct of justice and right protests against it. Every precept of reason, every example of wise statesmanship point to its dangers, and bid us avoid them.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I desire now the close attention of Democrats that have committed themselves to the passage of this bill without amendment through this House, or think they have. I think I can convince anyone of them that he should vote for the amendment just offered by the gentleman from Kansas. I ask the studious attention of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GAINES] and the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. LAMB] and of those good Democrats from the good old State of Missouri, who happen to be wrong, from my standpoint, on this issue, to this amendment, at any rate.

Mr. Chairman, on page 2 of the bill there is a proviso, and that proviso reads as follows:

That nothing in this act shall be construed—

Mark you the language—

shall be construed to permit any State to forbid the manufacture, etc., of oleomargarine.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I can not, for I have only five minutes. If the gentleman will let me go along I will explain what he wants to know much better than I could in answer to a question.

Now, I want gentlemen to understand the proviso:

Nothing in this act shall be construed to permit any State to forbid the sale or manufacture of oleomargarine.

Why should a State be "permitted to forbid" the sale and manufacture of oleomargarine if it wanted to, under its police powers? Now, gentlemen have said on the floor of this House that that proviso was put here to meet certain objections which I made to the bill, and that will bring me along to the right line of thought.

My objection was, before the proviso was put in, that the Federal Government in attempting to carry itself on the lines of interstate commerce and the taxing powers into the State, in the control and licensing of this business, had infringed on the reserved rights of the State, and I therefore wanted a proviso to safeguard them. The gentleman from Kansas has offered the proviso that will safeguard them, and I shall read it to the House, so that the House shall see what ought to be the proviso in the bill, but what is not. The proviso now in the bill is absolutely absurd on the very face of it, and, if not absurd, it contains an inherent or latent assertion of a right to forbid to a sovereign State the right to forbid, or to permit a sovereign State to forbid, the sale or manufacture of an article.

Now, here is what we offer in place of it. I say that no man who believes in the rightful distribution of powers between the Federal Government and the States, who believes that Congress ought not to attempt, by innuendo or otherwise, to trench upon those rightful powers, can vote against this proviso:

Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed to forbid any State to permit the manufacture or sale of oleomargarine in any manner consistent with the laws of the State, provided that it is manufactured and sold entirely within the State.

The effect of this is simply that nothing in this act shall be so construed as to forbid the State of Texas, for instance, from chartering an oleomargarine factory, which shall manufacture and sell oleomargarine, provided only that it manufactures it and sells it entirely within the State of Texas. I call the attention of the gentleman from Virginia to it. I call the attention of the gentleman from Tennessee to it. I call attention of the gentlemen from the great Democratic State of Missouri to it.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I do not need any castigation in regard to my position upon this proviso. I have been against it all the time—both in the original bill and in the amendment. Neither are necessary.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I am glad to hear it.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I have been doing all that I could within the last four days on this floor to oppose that proviso, and I shall continue to do so as long as it is in the bill. I do not need any castigation.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, far be it from me to "castigate" the gentleman from Tennessee. Nobody deserves it less, and nobody would receive less of it at my hands. But I had understood from the character of questions being asked by the gentleman that he was in favor of this bill; and I have understood from the spirit which has been shown here "all along the line" that there was a solid phalanx coming up to vote for the bill, without any amendment whatsoever. Now, I say to the gentleman from Tennessee that unless this amendment be adopted I do not think he or anybody else who believes that the States have left to them and ought to have left to them one solitary vestige of reserved rights can vote for this bill unless this proviso is taken out and this substitution made.

Mr. JACKSON of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, it is my object and purpose to support the majority bill, not because it is the best that the mind might conceive; not because it meets with my hearty and unqualified approval, for it does not, but because as between the two bills the majority more nearly accomplishes the object and purpose desired. I am informed that sundry amendments will be suggested; but until I know their nature and character, of course I can not tell which, if any, one of these amendments I will support. I regret exceedingly that on this measure many of the Democrats are not fully in accord with some of our Democratic brethren in the South. From the remarks just made by the distinguished gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] I judge that the Democrats who do not support the minority bill will be excommunicated. But inasmuch as no Democratic caucus has undertaken to make this a party issue; inasmuch as there are almost as many true and loyal Democrats supporting the majority bill as the minority, I have no fears of my standing in the party. [Applause.]

The fact is, in the last two days of general debate many foolish and unwise things have been said; statements have been made which would far better have been left unsaid; and if but a small per cent of the statements made are true, not only should the majority bill pass, but there should be some drastic measure to purify this legislative Hall. However, I am sure that the statements were made in the heat and passion of debate, and there was no intention to impugn the motives and integrity of any member.

Because we can not all think and see alike will not justify us in questioning the purity of motive of those with whom we do not agree. Almost all who have taken part in the general discussion seem to have forgotten the real question at issue; each has sought to outdo the other in devotion to the farmer and laborer. Why not strip this question of all subterfuge? Why not deal with it honestly, frankly, and candidly? Surely the farmer and the laborer have enough to bear without being the scapegoat of fraud and rascality. [Applause.]

In my judgment it is not a question as to whether oleomargarine is pure and wholesome; it is not a question whether or not you may prefer oleomargarine to butter, or vice versa; it is not a question as to which industry, if either, would be benefited or injured by this legislation. The all-important question in its final analysis is simply one of right or wrong.

Is it right to permit oleomargarine to be so manufactured that it can be either fraudulently used or sold for butter? Shall we permit one industry not only to impose upon the consumer, but also its competitor. In a word, shall we make it possible that the consumer shall have the opportunity of knowing whether he is buying and using oleomargarine or butter?

Both bills seem to recognize this right to the consumer; both bills seem to recognize that the industry ordained and created by God should not suffer by reason of any unjust and unfair imposition. Both bills concede that oleomargarine has been, is to-day, and will continue to be, sold and used in the name of butter unless there is some legislative restraint. This seems to be an admitted fact.

Personally I know nothing with reference to this question other than as I gather from the testimony taken before the committee and the two reports which we have before us. I neither affirm nor deny that oleomargarine is being sold and used in imitation of butter. But when it is admitted and conceded to be a fact, then why should we not adopt some measure which will be drastic enough to remedy the wrong of which we complain? In other words, if we are to legislate at all, and if oleomargarine is being fraudulently used for butter and thereby necessitates legislation, why not legislate in an intelligent manner and in such a way as to accomplish the purpose? Why should we have impotent legislation, as suggested in the minority bill?

The gentlemen who support this minority bill may be able to fool some of the people, but they can not fool all the people. Each speech which has been made in behalf of the minority denounces the majority bill as class legislation. Even my colleague from Kansas [Mr. SCOTT], in the strongest possible language, not only denounces it as class legislation, but insists that we are seeking to build up one industry at the expense of another. And yet I find that he, as a member of the committee, joined in the minority report.

The minority bill recognizes that a certain class of consumers shall have the right to know whether they are using and purchasing oleomargarine or butter, but denies that right to all of the citizens. It recognizes this right to a selected class, but they give no legislation stringent enough to accomplish the purpose. In effect, it simply means that if you have home and family you shall not be defrauded in this way; but if you are not fortunate enough to have either home or family, if you belong to that vast army of men and women who, either through poverty or taste, depend, for a consideration, upon the table of another, then you are not entitled to any consideration. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, the minority bill is a decoy; it is a shift and a device. Every speech made by its reputed supporters has been the strongest indictment of its perfidy. The minority know that if their bill is right in principle, so is the majority bill. They know if the majority bill is wrong in principle, so is the minority bill. There is no halfway ground. Both bills admit and concede that oleomargarine is fraudulently disposed of for butter, and the minority has not the manhood and courage to prevent that fraud. [Applause.]

Sir, I take no interest in the clamor about class legislation. A few of my Democratic brethren have become so embittered by reason of the iniquitous protective policy of the Republican party that they have lost their discriminating faculties. The purpose of this bill is not to destroy an industry. It is aimed at a fraud and to protect the consumer, and also to give to the housewife, the dairyman—yea, the cow, an honest competitor. [Applause.] It does not seek to destroy the manufacture of oleomargarine, nor will it have that effect so long as it is manufactured and sold honestly and does not impose on the public by claiming that it is something which it is not. If it is dishonest; if it will not come out and be an open, honorable competitor with butter, then, sir, it should be required to pay a penalty for its dishonesty. It is true the minority speak lightly of this question of imitation and deception and refer to the numerous imitations of household ware. They should remember that two wrongs do not make a right; if lawyers, they know that a man who sells an article making representations as to the nature, kind, and quality of the article, and the person relying on such representations purchases the same and pays a price for the article as represented, and if it is not the character and quality of the article as represented, then the vendor is guilty of fraud and may be prosecuted.

Such a law does not have for its object and purpose the protection of the manufacturer of that article, but seeks to protect the citizen. I deny that there is any class legislation in this. We are seeking to destroy fraud and deception. We are maintaining and insisting that the citizen shall have the right to be informed and know that when he demands butter he is receiving the article for which he pays his money. If, by such legislation, we injure an industry it is but the reflex action of wholesome legislation. We must understand that the underlying and fundamental principle of this Government is the greatest good to the greatest number. The barons, who have made untold millions by reason of a protective tariff, would have the same right to say to us—who believe that the tariff is unjust—that it would be unfair to their interest to reduce the tariff, and if we did so reduce it would be class legislation.

Sir, there is no more class legislation in this bill than that given us by the great Lawgiver, approved and ratified by every State in the nation, when it was said, "Thou shalt not murder; thou shalt not steal." Every man who commits a wrong against his fellow-citizen has the same right to complain of class legislation if you seek to punish him. If you say that the manufacturers of oleomargarine are honest, I answer that when they make a product in imitation of butter, and when they know, as the evidence before this committee discloses they do know, that by reason of that imitation it is sold to some of their customers for butter, they are guilty of fraud. They are particeps criminis.

In my judgment it does not become the manufacturers of oleomargarine to discuss class legislation. It does not become them to seek to avoid their own dereliction by claiming that some one else is as guilty as they. In my experience as a lawyer I never knew of a criminal who was not anxious to mitigate his offense by calling the attention to other people who were also guilty. If oleomargarine is all that its friends claim it to be, it should have no objections to this bill, but should accept this opportunity to come before the people as an honest product, advertising and insisting that it is far superior to butter, and let the people have an opportunity to determine whether or not they prefer oleomargarine to butter.

Mr. Chairman, for my part I sometimes become weary and heartsick with the constant cry that the Government can't do this and it can't do that. Standing in the daybreak of the twentieth century, we behold marvelous things which this Government has accomplished. Many of these things have been done over the persistent and vehement protests of "can't." [Applause.]

This Government, sir, is all powerful; this Government is the people, and the people can do anything with their Government that they desire, in so far as it affects their rights. This Government is to-day doing many things of which I do not approve; it is doing things which I trust and hope the people will, in their sober second judgment, change and modify. I trust and hope that the Government will always be for honor, integrity, liberty, and freedom. I trust and hope it will ever be the sworn enemy of fraud, deceit, tyranny, and oppression. [Applause.]

In my judgment, the Government has a right to strike down fraud wherever it may be, and invoke such means as is necessary to accomplish it. I maintain that it is the duty of the Government to protect the citizen in all of his rights where he can not in the exercise of his political rights protect himself.

This is an age of progress, and we must keep abreast of the times. New conditions are constantly confronting us, and we should be able to meet these conditions bravely and courageously. I believe in progress, and I believe it should be along the line and principles of the Declaration of Independence. I am very sorry to hear some, especially my Democratic brethren, so bitterly oppose the taxing provisions of this bill. The taxing power is one of the mighty arms of the Government. It is to be used for the protection of the Government, for justice, for equality, for honor, and should not be used for oppression and injustice. To-day we have a great problem before us, a question which is engaging the attention of the ablest men of the land. The tyrannical trusts of this nation are sapping the vital cord of individuality and destroying competition. It is a question that must be solved, and some of the ablest men of our party are advocating to-day taxation as the best and most efficient remedy.

If we deny this power of taxation by the Government, as claimed by some of my Democratic brethren, then we will have to look for other and different means by which to remedy this evil. I notice in the minority report on the bill for the reduction of the war taxes that our Democratic brethren advocate taxation as one of the means to destroy the trusts of this land. We, as Democrats, are in favor of an income tax and therefore we should not be so hasty in denouncing the power of taxation as some have been in the general discussion on this bill.

I have, Mr. Chairman, consumed more time than I had expected, but I desire to submit one further thought. The minority insist that they represent the interests and welfare of the farmer and laborer. If this be true, then why do they insist that the object and purpose of the bill is to break down one industry and build up another. The one which they say we seek to build up is the honest product from the cow, and therefore the one in which the farmer and laborer are most interested.

This bare statement is sufficient to take the mask from their faces and expose the absurdity of their claim. The farmer and the cow, in one sense, are colaborers, and legislation that protects their product, by giving it honest competition, can not be other than helpful. It will be beneficial to the laborer, because it will permit him to obtain oleomargarine at a less cost and expense than he pays to-day. It gives him the option of determining whether he wants butter or oleomargarine, and while not increasing the price of butter, will decrease the price of oleomargarine.

Mr. Chairman, within the history of the Republican party this is the first time when a goodly number of them have advocated a measure to help the farmer and the laborer, and I feel that we should show our appreciation by making it unanimous. Let us be thankful for small things; let us trust and hope that it is a good omen for better legislation in the future. [Prolonged applause.]

Mr. ZENOR. Mr. Chairman, I had not thought in the first place of participating in the discussion of the bill that is now pending before the House; but, representing a district composed largely of agricultural interests, and I may say a district that contains no oleomargarine industries and no large dairying interest, but composed largely of farmers scattered through the district, as most districts represented by gentlemen on this floor are composed, I feel it to be my duty to state my position on the bill. I think that I am free from any particular prejudice, and not subject to the influence of any special interests, in my advocacy of the passage of the majority bill introduced by the Agricultural Committee.

I have been surprised, Mr. Chairman, at the course of argument that has been pursued by many gentlemen upon our side of the House, as well as by many gentlemen upon the other side of the Chamber. I regret and deprecate, as did my colleague from the State of Missouri, the spirit that seemed to animate some gentlemen in the discussion of these two different measures. I have been unable to recognize the necessity for any gentleman on this side in the discussion of the merits of this proposition to undertake to arraign any Democratic brother because he, in the exercise of his judgment, in the position he takes on this proposition, differs with those who take an opposite view.

Mr. Chairman, a discussion has been injected into the consideration of this bill in reference to the clause in the first section of it. I have been unable to discover anything in the phraseology of this particular provision of the bill, this proviso, that attempts to transfer to the Federal Government any power not already possessed, or attempts to reach out into and interfere with the exercise of the sovereign powers of any State of this Union. It merely provides that this act shall not be construed to permit any State to forbid the manufacture of oleomargarine in a certain manner and form.

It seems to have been the purpose of the authors of this bill to preclude any inference that might be drawn upon the part of the legislatures of the States that this bill conferred authority upon those legislatures to exercise any additional power in their legislation against oleomargarine. It is simply a provision as a precautionary measure. It confers no power upon the legislature. It restricts the legislatures of the States, according to my view, in no respect whatever, and in that sense I take it that it is not undemocratic nor unconstitutional.

I have listened with amazement to some gentlemen who, in speaking upon this bill, say that it is not only a violation of the Constitution, but that it is a violation of all the traditions of the Democratic party; that we have always been opposed to any legislation imposing taxation for the purpose of building up one industry at the expense of another or to tear down one industry to upbuild another.

I take it, and according to my view, this legislation has grown out of public necessity, out of a demand upon the part of the great body of the people of this country, the great farming interest of this country, the great agricultural interest of this country, not that a tax be imposed upon one industry for the purpose of building it up or for the suppression of another, but to suppress a fraud that is admitted by those who advocate the minority bill and those who oppose the passage of either one of these bills.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. ZENOR. Mr. Chairman, I ask for five minutes more.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. I shall have to object to any extension of time.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] has risen in his seat here to-day and pointed out "the gentleman from Tennessee" and "the gentleman from Virginia" as though they had been derelict in their duty and their Democracy was getting below par.

I want to say to the gentleman that I was the first man upon the floor of this House who discovered the very matter that he has brought to the attention of the House to-day, and that I asked the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MCCLEARY] to explain that provision, and then he said that the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] was the author of it. I looked around through the House and finally found the gentleman in the cloakroom, and asked him to explain this provision, and asked him if it did not restrain existing State rights. The gentleman [Mr. WILLIAMS] came upon the floor and disclaimed any connection with the authorship of this provision in any way.

Again, when the first section of this bill was read this morning, I approved all of it except the proviso beginning at the word "otherwise," line 7, page 2. I objected to that, and have repeatedly done so heretofore. I do not know whether the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] was in his seat or in the cloakroom. I was on the floor working at this matter, trying to perfect this bill, if possible; trying to remove objectionable provisions and substitute proper ones.

I objected to this proviso because I thought that it encroached upon existing State laws and State rights. Then the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. SCOTT] rose and said, as did others, that he had an amendment to cure the trouble I was pointing out. So that, Mr. Chairman, I have been just about as industrious and about as Democratic as the gentleman from Mississippi, learned and experienced as he is in this House, classic in his knowledge, and always patriotic and Democratic. I am opposed to the proviso in the bill, but the amendment removes the objection greatly; but neither is necessary.

I am a better Democrat, it seems, than the gentleman from Mississippi, because I say the States already have the right, and I am opposed to Congress undertaking to give to the States what they already have. Let them stand on their own rights when they have them, and not depend on Congressional action as to them.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Certainly.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. According to your position, which I think is a good one, this entire section ought to be stricken out.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. No; only the proviso. The first part of the section strengthens the powers of the States.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Let me ask the gentleman this. Here is a section which undertakes to say the States shall have certain rights, and, in my opinion, it does not say it with sufficient clearness. Now, we offer a proviso which clearly says that nothing in the act shall be construed to forbid any State to permit the manufacture or sale of oleomargarine consistently in its own lines, provided the sale is within its borders. This is simply a limitation upon the intimation of the Federal authority.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. The States have that right. The States have the right to prohibit the manufacturing of a thing within their limits, even though the article manufactured may afterwards become interstate commerce or is made to ship into some other State.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I think so.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Why, then, do you want either proviso? The States have these rights without this amendment, regardless of Congress.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Without this proviso I think legal questions will arise and suits would arise.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman from Mississippi allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Certainly.

Mr. TAWNEY. I desire to ask the gentleman from Mississippi this question: Wherein does anything in any part of section 1—that is, with the proposed proviso—interfere with the States and the rights of the States authorizing the manufacture of oleomargarine if sold within the States?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I find it in the probable assumption, Mr. Chairman—in the reservation, at least—that the rights of the States are dependent upon a declaration of the Congress of the United States.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Exactly. That is the position I have taken all the time.

Mr. TAWNEY. Then why not strike out the proviso?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I want to limit it——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. To strike out the entire thing, because—the gentleman has asked me a question, Mr. Chairman, let me answer it—because if the States already have this power this bill is unnecessary to give it to them. If the States already have not this power then it is an attempt on the part of Congress to divest itself of a power that it now has and vest it in the States. Therefore neither is clear, and I think no part of it would be necessary at all, but you contend that it is, and then the part of it which I offer is to restrict and limit the purview and scope of it.

Mr. TAWNEY. The States have the power you contend for to control the sale of oleomargarine when not protected by the interstate commerce.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. I now move that all debate upon the pending amendment be closed.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. They have committed a fraud upon me in taking my time, but I suppose I can not help it.

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. LAMB. Allow me one suggestion.

The CHAIRMAN. The motion is agreed to, and debate is closed on the pending amendment. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. WANGER. A parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WANGER. Is a division of that question possible, so that we can have a vote separately on the motion to strike out this proviso and another upon the substitute?

The CHAIRMAN. The motion to strike out and insert is indivisible under the rules.

Mr. LAMB. I rise to a parliamentary question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LAMB. Would it be in order to move to strike out all after the word "otherwise," in line 7, and offer a substitute for that? As a member of the committee, I desire to say that if my friend from Mississippi had made that speech in the committee we could have considered it then.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. The gentleman made that speech two years ago, and they put this proviso in to meet his objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on this amendment is exhausted.

Mr. WANGER. I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. This is a substitute pending before the committee.

Mr. WANGER. I desire to offer an amendment to the substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. LAMB] made a parliamentary inquiry which the Chair was not able to answer, owing to the debate that immediately ensued. Will the gentleman state the proposition again?

Mr. LAMB. I ask, Mr. Chairman, if it would be in order to move, as a substitute for the motion pending, to strike out all after the word "otherwise," in line 7, down to line 12, on page 2?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that would not be in order. The question is on the motion to strike out and insert.

Mr. WANGER. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend that amendment by striking out that part which relates to "and to insert" and all that follows.

The CHAIRMAN. That would be a subdivision of the proposition that is forbidden by the rules.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. SCOTT) there were—ayes 72, noes 54.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and the Chair appointed as tellers Mr. HENRY of Connecticut and Mr. SCOTT.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask how many members voted for tellers?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair counted until he saw that there were more than 20, and that being sufficient, he ceased counting.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Is not it necessary to have one-fifth of a quorum?

The CHAIRMAN. It is. The Chair counted up to 20, and 20 being sufficient, he stopped.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I make the point of order that the Chair did not ascertain the number voting for tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair announced that there were more than a sufficient number. The chair counted to 20, and ceased counting as there were more than 20, and that was a sufficient number. If the gentleman from Alabama raises any question, the Chair will count again. Does the gentleman challenge the count?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. No, Mr. Chairman; I do not challenge the count.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks that the amendment be again reported. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk again read the amendment offered by Mr. SCOTT.

The question was again taken; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 96, noes 66.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the Clerk read the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend section 1 by adding at end of section the following:

"Provided, however, That none of the provisions of this section or of this bill shall apply to or be enforced against healthful and wholesome food products manufactured in whole or in part out of pure cotton-seed oil, or food products in the production of which pure cotton-seed oil enters as an ingredient."

[Mr. BARTLETT addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. ZENOR. Mr. Chairman, when I yielded the floor a few minutes ago I was about to say that during the course of this discussion I have listened attentively to the arguments of those opposed to the passage of the majority bill. It is not denied by those who are opposed to the bill that upon its face—according to the language and phraseology employed in the original bill—it is constitutional. It is conceded by every opponent of the bill that upon its face there is no constitutional objection appearing. This question has passed under the discussion of not only this Congress, but through the Fifty-sixth Congress; and in 1886 the constitutionality of a similar law was very thoroughly discussed.

I wish to call the attention of my distinguished friend from Texas [Mr. BURLESON] to the position then taken by the very distinguished Representative from that State then on this floor—Judge Reagan—who in a discussion of that bill, although opposed to its passage as a matter of policy, virtually conceded that the measure itself was constitutional.

That bill, Mr. Chairman, as it was originally introduced by the committee proposed, as this bill proposes, to impose a tax of 10 cents a pound upon the sale and manufacture of oleomargarine. The tax was, however, finally reduced to 2 cents per pound. But the same principle was involved.

Now, Mr. Chairman, in reference to the question of invoking the power of Congress to impose taxation for the purpose of regulating the sale of oleomargarine, a confusion, it seems to me, exists in the minds of some gentlemen in relation to this particular phase of the question. No Democrat here, I presume, would be in favor of the imposition of Federal taxation for the purpose of crushing out any industry of this country. It is foreign to any purpose of mine.

I would oppose as strenuously as any man on this floor any proposition to impose any kind of tax upon any particular industry for the purpose of building up or helping another industry. It is not the industry that this tax is directed against. It is not for the purpose of crushing out the manufacture of oleomargarine that we are asked now to vote a tax of 10 cents a pound. This bill is directed against the practice of fraud as now carried on by the manufacturers of oleomargarine and the wholesale and retail dealers.

Gentlemen make comparisons, and say that we are in favor of taxing out of existence one industry for the purpose of protecting another industry. The great body of the farmers of this country do not demand any such discrimination. The great body of the agricultural interests in this country do not demand invidious legislation at the hands of Congress. They are the last people on earth who would ever come to Congress in the form of a trust or otherwise to demand special legislation or favoritism at the hands of Congress of the United States.

Ah, my friend, they are the only people who ordinarily, when measures of legislation involving their interests are pending here, are not heard in the lobbies and in the hotels of the city of Washington. When a measure is introduced here looking to the conservation of the interests and welfare of the farmer, the welfare of the agricultural interests, the welfare of the great dairy interests, it seems surpassingly strange that members of this House, professing their fidelity and devotion to the farmer, are found upon the floor of this House ready and willing to denounce the representatives of the dairy interests and the advocates of a bill calculated in my judgment not to wipe out, crush, or cripple a legitimate industry, but to protect the great body of the people—not only the farmer, not only the dairy interests, but the consumers all over the country—against the imposition constantly and continually practiced by the sale of oleomargarine.

I believe in this bill for the reason that I am in favor of bridging the chasm that lies between the cost of the manufacture of this article—this colored oleomargarine in imitation of butter—and the immense profit that the manufacturers make in putting it on the market and selling it as butter in competition with the product of the dairy interests of this country. I think if you bridge the chasm, if you will wipe out this large profit, you will thereby destroy to a certain extent the incentive of these gentlemen to perpetrate and practice these frauds, and for that reason I am in favor of this bill. [Applause.]

This subject has been the study of the most thoughtful and best-posted men of the whole country, since the practice of fraud and deception in the sale of this article has attracted the attention of the public by its rapid growth and development, and this majority bill, which is substantially what is so well-known through the entire country as the "Grout bill," seems to be the final culmination of this thought and study and the best and most efficient remedy to crush out this fraud and deception and force these two rival and competing food products to take their legitimate places in the markets of the country upon their own intrinsic merits—to be sold and purchased for what they really are. It is admitted on both sides that the coloring matter used in the manufacture of oleomargarine to imitate and look like yellow butter adds nothing to the quality, nothing to its digestibility or nutrition.

The sole and only purpose of its use—so say its advocates—is to adapt it to the taste and fancy of the consumers. But, Mr. Chairman, I very much fear that this reason is not the real, not the true one. I suspect, as the courts have held, that this coloring matter is used in the manufacture of oleomargarine as a means to destroy the power of the public to discriminate and distinguish between the oleomargarine and pure butter in the markets, in the hotel, boarding house, and restaurant. We want merely that these two articles shall be exposed for sale for what they are; that the consumer may know when he buys a pound of butter that he is getting butter, and if he wants a pound of oleomargarine that he can procure the same at a price that it is really worth, and not be compelled to pay the higher price of dairy butter for the cheaper and inferior article.

According to the report of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue for year ending June 30, 1901, there was manufactured of oleomargarine 104,943,856 pounds. This would, it is true, not be more than 1¼ pounds per capita of our population, while the dairy interests have invested, according to conservative estimates, in the whole country, about $2,500,000,000 in plants and equipments. The butter products of the country amount annually to about 1,500,000,000 pounds, and amount in the aggregate to about the sum of $500,000,000. There are at least 5,000,000 of people engaged in the dairy interest, and every farmer, large or small, makes more or less butter for the market, and it is no inconsiderable part of his income.

About 700,000,000 pounds are consumed by the producers, and the remaining 800,000,000 pounds placed upon the market. I grant you that this is not a full supply of butter. I am aware that if our people could buy and were able to supply themselves with butter to the full extent of their wants and needs that all the butter and oleomargarine produced would not supply our people with more than 19 to 20 pounds per capita of our population, but this, I take it, will not excuse the flagrant, open, and notorious violation of the laws of thirty-two States of the Union against the fraudulent practices of the oleomargarine interests in manufacturing and selling their product in the butter markets of the country for pure butter. Let this bill be enacted into law, and under its operation let this substitute for butter enter the race of competition with the dairyman and farmer; but let it do so in its natural state, in its original condition, without wearing the guise and mark of its competitor, without seeking the markets under false and deceptive pretenses, and the dairy and farming interests of this country will not protest, will not complain, but will take pride in the rivalry and hold the primacy in the markets of the world with their superior and unexcelled food product. [Applause.]

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise to challenge a statement made by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. JACKSON]. He said that the essential principles underlying the bill reported by the majority and the minority were the same. Mr. Chairman, there is not a lawyer in this House who will read these two measures who can come to that conclusion. The bill reported by the majority invokes two powers conferred upon Congress by the Constitution. The first section of that bill invokes the commerce power conferred upon Congress and seeks to subvert that power to a use which is unauthorized. Read that section and you will see that it is to get rid of the effect of the original-package decision. It is also an attempt on the part of Congress to delegate to the States, in some degree, certain power and control over the purely domestic commerce of the State. Furthermore, Mr. Chairman, it violates in other particulars the proper construction of the commerce clause of the Constitution.

The substitute bill offered by the minority is a revenue bill, pure and simple. There is not a regulation in the minority bill except regulation to enforce a revenue law and for the purpose of the collection of revenue.

Every man here admits that Congress, under the taxing powers of the Constitution, has the power to impose a purely revenue tax upon oleomargarine, whisky, and the like. The power of Congress to levy taxes for the purpose of raising revenue to support the Government seems only to have been limited by the decision of the Supreme Court which says you can not tax the income of the idle holders of idle capital to defray the governmental expenses.

Mr. Chairman, one provision of the majority bill invokes the taxing power of Congress. From the beginning, power to tax has been held to be distinct from the commerce power of Congress, which ought never to be used except as a means for regulating interstate commerce and foreign commerce and trade with the Indian tribes. The commerce power of the Congress should not be used as a means to exact taxation from the people.

Mr. Chairman, the reserved rights of the States are invaded in the majority bill. In my opinion the reserved rights of the States are not invaded in the minority bill. The majority bill seeks to destroy the reserved power in the States to regulate their own domestic affairs. What difference is it to New York or Pennsylvania or Wisconsin that the people of Missouri and Alabama are permitted by their States to eat butter or to make and eat oleomargarine, or to make and drink white whisky or red whisky, or to drink branch water, as it may suit them. [Applause.]

Mr. TAWNEY. I ask for the reading of the pending amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be again reported.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend section 1 by adding, in line 12, as amended, after the word "yellow," the following:

"Provided, however, That none of the provisions of this section or of this bill shall apply to or be enforced against healthful and wholesome food products manufactured in whole or in part out of pure cotton-seed oil or food products into the production of which cotton-seed oil enters as an ingredient."

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on the pending amendment and on section 1 of the bill be closed.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota moves that all debate on the pending amendment and on section 1 of the bill be closed.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT].

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. BARTLETT) there were—ayes 34, noes 67.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, at the request of the gentleman in charge of the bill, who is temporarily absent, I offer in behalf of the majority of the committee the following amendment to section 2.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The section should be read.

Mr. TAWNEY. I withhold the amendment until the committee amendment has been acted upon.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill by sections.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That on and after July 1, 1902, the tax upon oleomargarine as prescribed in section 8 of the act approved August 2, 1886, and entitled "An act defining butter, also imposing a tax upon and regulating the manufacture, sale, importation, and exportation of oleomargarine," shall be one-fourth of 1 cent per pound when the same is not made in imitation of yellow butter; but when made in imitation of yellow butter the tax to be paid by the manufacturer shall be 10 cents per pound, to be levied and collected in accordance with the provisions of said act.

The following committee amendment was read:

Strike out all of the section and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"SEC. 2. That the first clause of section 3 of an act entitled 'An act defining butter, also imposing a tax upon and regulating the manufacture, sale, importation, and exportation of oleomargarine,' be amended by adding thereto, after the word 'oleomargarine,' at the end of said clause, the following words:

"'And any person that sells, vends, or furnishes oleomargarine for the use and consumption of others, except to his own family and guests thereof without compensation, who shall add to or mix with such oleomargarine any ingredient or coloration that causes it to look like butter shall also be held to be a manufacturer of oleomargarine within the meaning of said act and subject to the provisions thereof.'"

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which is at the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota offers the following amendment to the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out of the committee amendment all after the word "oleomargarine," in line 2, page 3, and insert the following:

"Approved August 2, 1886, be amended by adding thereto after the word 'oleomargarine,' at the end of said clause, the following words:

"And any person that sells, vends, or furnishes oleomargarine for the use and consumption of others, except to his own family and guests thereof without compensation, who shall add to or mix with such oleomargarine any ingredient or coloration that causes it to look like butter of any shade of yellow shall also be held to be a manufacturer of oleomargarine within the meaning of said act and subject to the provisions thereof."

Mr. TAWNEY. I will state, Mr. Chairman, that this amendment changes the bill as reported only in this respect. After the word "oleomargarine" in line 2, the words "approved August 2, 1886," are inserted. Then, in line 9, after the word "butter," the words "of any shade of yellow" are inserted. That is the only change in the proposed amendment. The rest of it is a mere recital of the language of the section as it was reported originally from the committee.

The first change is essential, because it omits to perfectly describe the act it proposes to amend, as it omits the words "approved August 2, 1886." The second is in line with the amendment the committee has already adopted in section 1, by inserting the words "of any shade of yellow." That is the only change this amendment makes in the section as reported by the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment offered by the committee.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. To which the gentleman offers the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out, in line 5, page 3, the words "person and that" and insert "and any retail or wholesale dealer in oleomargarine or butter or any corporation, including manufacturer of butter who;" also, in line 6, after the word "others," strike out all down to the word "who," in line 7.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Now, Mr. Chairman, to my mind the most objectionable——

The CHAIRMAN. The committee has already adopted the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is very true; but mine is another amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. It is an amendment to that which the committee has already adopted. The original text would be open to amendment, but not the language of the amendment of the committee.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I supposed I had the right to offer any amendment to that section which did not interfere with his amendment, and I am offering that amendment.

Mr. TAWNEY. I make the point of order that the gentleman's amendment should have been offered to the amendment offered by me.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment should have been offered before. Is there objection to its being considered now?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I offer the amendment as an amendment to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment having been agreed to by the committee, it would not be competent to offer an amendment to that.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, the committee has the right to offer an amendment to the section. If that had been in the way of perfecting the section it would have been in order for the gentleman from New York to offer an amendment to the committee's amendment when offered. Now, the section has been perfected, and it is now subject to amendment. Any other rule than that would simply cut off all amendments by merely permitting the committee to offer an amendment which would be adopted, and then cut off amendments to the section itself.

The CHAIRMAN. What the gentleman will see is this: The committee has already adopted the amendment.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Very well. That has perfected the section. Now, for the first time, it is open to amendment by someone not authorized by the committee to offer an amendment. This is a very plain proposition; it is not new; it is very old, and it is the only way an outside member of the House can offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee's amendment has already been adopted.

Mr. GROSVENOR. But the section has not been adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. But this is not a proposition to amend the section. Of course the gentleman from New York could offer to amend the original section as it stood.

Mr. GROSVENOR. He could not do it because the committee had an amendment which they had not offered. That amendment has been adopted, and the question recurs on the original section.

The CHAIRMAN. He offered it to the committee amendment.

Mr. GROSVENOR. The section has not been passed.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can offer this amendment to the original section, but can not to the amendment the committee offered.

Mr. GROSVENOR. It is not offered as an amendment to the committee amendment, which was adopted by the committee, but to the section. It is clearly in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman offers it as an amendment to the part which has been stricken out. The original section is still open to amendment.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I will offer it as an amendment to the section.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out in line 5, page 3, the words "person and that" and insert "and any retail or wholesale dealer in oleomargarine or butter and any corporation, including manufacturers of butter, who;" also in line 6, after the word "others," strike out all down to the word "who," in line 7.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will suspend. Line 7 on page 3 has been stricken out. It can not be amended after stricken out, and the Chair would suggest——

Mr. WADSWORTH. There is a mistake. It is line 5, page 3. I offer it as an amendment to the section as adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. That has already been adopted by the committee. The gentleman can go back to the original section, which has not been disposed of, and that may be amended.

Mr. WADSWORTH. If that is the parliamentary procedure, I will do that.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I offer this as an amendment to section 2.

The CHAIRMAN. Section 2 is open to amendment. The Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out in line 5, page 3, the words "person and that" and insert "and any retail or wholesale dealer in oleomargarine or butter, and any corporation, including manufacturers of butter, who;" also in line 6, after the word "others," strike out all down to the word "who," in line 7.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Now, the point of my amendment is this. I think it is the most iniquitous provision in the bill——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman still offers his amendment to the amendment which has been adopted. There is no difficulty if the gentleman will apply his amendment to the original section, which has not been disposed of.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, the amendment which the committee has adopted and which I offered strikes out all of section 2 after the word "oleomargarine," on page 3, line 2, and then inserts the language contained in the amendment. Now, as I said, the only effect of that was to add after the word "oleomargarine" the words "approved August 2, 1886," and again after the word "butter," in line 9, "of any shade of yellow." That is a rewriting of that portion of the entire section. Now, the gentleman's amendment should have been offered to my amendment before the latter was adopted.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to amend the section, notwithstanding the adoption of the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent, notwithstanding the adoption of the amendment by the committee, to offer his amendment to the same and amend the committee's amendment. Is there objection?

Mr. RAY of New York. I object, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Then I move to strike out the section as amended by the gentleman from Minnesota, and insert the amendment which I offer.

Mr. TAWNEY. I ask that the Clerk report the section as it will read when amended.

Mr. THAYER. Mr. Chairman, gentlemen on this side do not understand the tangle which the gentlemen over there have got into.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York has prepared an amendment adapted to the condition of the section before the committee amended it, and it does not fit the situation now.

Mr. THAYER. It seems to me his purpose is to amend the amendment we have adopted by substituting something else for it. The only way that can be done is to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was adopted and then the question is before the House.

The CHAIRMAN. It is very easy for the gentleman from New York to re-form his amendment and make it applicable.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend section 2 by striking out line 24, page 2, all after the word "that," and inserting the amendment I send to the desk.

The CHAIRMAN. After the word "that" in the substitute section?

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman from New York explain from the bill as printed just what the effect of that amendment would be.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the gentleman from New York has obviated the difficulty.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, the object of the amendment is simply this: The bill of the majority provides that:

Any person that sells, vends, or furnishes oleomargarine for the use and consumption of others, except to his own family and guests thereof without compensation, who shall add to or mix with such oleomargarine any ingredients or coloration that causes it to look like butter, shall also be held to be a manufacturer of oleomargarine within the meaning of said act, etc.

Now, that makes any boarding-house keeper, no matter how many or few boarders he may have, subject to that law, and makes him, within the intent of this paragraph, a manufacturer of oleomargarine. If he colors it after purchasing it of the retail or wholesale dealer and serves it to the guests it makes him a manufacturer.

Mr. TAWNEY. If he colors it for sale.

Mr. WADSWORTH. If he colors it for his boarders. My point is to apply the law to the retail and wholesale dealer in oleomargarine or butter, to corporations, and manufacturers, and not go into the privacy of the home and dictate to the American citizen in what color, form, or shape he shall put his food on the table. That is the object of my amendment.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I ask, Mr. Chairman, for the reading of the amendment that has been sent to the desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will have read first the following extract from Jefferson's Manual:

The Clerk read as follows:

But if it had been carried affirmatively to strike out the words and to insert A, it could not afterwards be permitted to strike out A and insert B. The mover of B should have notified, while the insertion of A was under debate, that he would move to insert B; in which case those who preferred it would join in rejecting A.

After A is inserted, however, it may be moved to strike out a portion of the original paragraph, comprehending A, provided the coherence to be struck out be so substantial as to make this effectively a different proposition; for then it is resolved into the common case of striking out a paragraph after amending it. Nor does anything forbid a new insertion, instead of A and its coherence.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the committee's substitute for section 2 as amended by striking out all after "that" in line 24, page 2, and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"The first clause of section 3 of an act entitled 'An act defining butter, also imposing a tax upon and regulating the manufacture, sale, importation, and exportation of oleomargarine,' approved August 2, 1886, be amended by adding thereto after the word 'oleomargarine,' at the end of the said clause, the following words:

And any retail or wholesale dealer in oleomargarine or butter and any corporation (including manufacturers of butter) who sells, vends, or furnishes oleomargarine for the use or consumption of others who shall add to or mix with the said oleomargarine any ingredient or coloration which causes it to look like butter shall also be held to be a manufacturer of oleomargarine within the meaning of said act and subject to the provisions thereof.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I wish to explain the purpose of this amendment. I do not believe that Congress desires to go into the privacy of American homes and supervise or control what may be served on their tables. If any family wish to put upon their table a beefsteak that has been pounded, they ought to have the right to do it. If they want to put a little water in their milk because they have not money enough to pay for pure milk, they should have that privilege. And if, within the privacy of their own homes, they want to add a little coloring matter to oleomargarine, I do not see why we should undertake to interfere.

Mr. TAWNEY. Does the gentleman intend that this amendment shall apply to butter as well as oleomargarine?

Mr. WADSWORTH. No; I do not.

Mr. TAWNEY. The language of the amendment will have that effect.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It is intended to apply to the dealer who sells oleomargarine fraudulently as butter.

Mr. TAWNEY. But I infer from the reading that the amendment would place the person who colors butter upon the same level as the manufacturer of oleomargarine who colors oleo.

Mr. WADSWORTH. No.

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard for a moment in regard to this amendment; and I think my colleague from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] will take no offense from my references to him. It is well known, and the gentleman from New York can not take exception to the statement, that he is opposed to this bill as it stands.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The gentleman mistakes me there. I am not opposed to wiping out the fraud in the sale of oleomargarine. The gentleman must not put me in a false position.

Mr. RAY of New York. If that is true, then the gentleman does not intend by any amendment to this bill to throw the door wide open for any person to sell, vend, or furnish oleomargarine for the use and consumption of others when it is colored in imitation of butter. Now, this section, as written, prevents anything of that kind. It is designed for that purpose and for no other.

My colleague asserts that this bill, as it has been amended by this committee, would prevent the householder from coloring oleomargarine, if he desired so to do, for use upon his own table; and he says it would prevent a boarding-house keeper from purchasing oleomargarine and then coloring it in imitation of butter and putting it before his guests or boarders as pure butter. If the section as it now reads will prevent that fraud, then I think every friend of the dairyman, every friend of pure butter, should insist upon its standing as it is.

Mr. GROSVENOR rose.

Mr. RAY of New York. I have no time to yield to the gentleman.

Now, will this amendment, already adopted, have the effect which he claims for it? Certainly not. How does it read?

Any person who sells, vends, or furnishes oleomargarine for the use or consumption of others except his family and guests—

The householder and his family and his guests are excepted. Now, are not the boarders in my family a part of my family?

A MEMBER. They are not guests without compensation?

Mr. RAY of New York. They are a part of my family. Everybody understands that. The boarders in my home are a part of my family. It has been decided five hundred times under the criminal law that the boarders in a man's home are entitled to his protection under that principle of the law which declares that I may defend myself and my family.

The word "family" does not apply to my wife and to my children alone, but to all who have the right to live in my house.

Mr. SIMS. It says "without compensation."

Mr. RAY of New York. It makes no difference whether they are paid compensation or not.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. But the bill says so.

Mr. RAY of New York. They form a part of my family.

Mr. PERKINS. Will the gentleman allow a question?

Mr. RAY of New York. So far as I have time.

Mr. PERKINS. Does the gentleman hold that if a man has a son who is past 21 years of age, who continues to live with his father and pay his board, that he would not be within the meaning of this bill?

Mr. RAY of New York. He is a part of my family as long as he is rightfully living there.

Mr. GROSVENOR. The gentleman from New York is making a mistake by not reading the bill which is before his own eyes.

Mr. RAY of New York. I am speaking to the bill that is before my own eyes, and I am seeking to prevent the substitution of words in this section of the bill that will open the law to everyone to defy its provisions and, under a false pretense, color oleomargarine for sale and for use or disposition to others. That is what I am seeking to do, and I have watched the language that my colleague from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] would seek to write into this bill. It would not have the effect to protect the family and to protect the boarders, but it would have the effect to open the door wide for the coloring of oleomargarine in defiance of the provision of the law.

That is the reason why I am in earnest about it. I have watched his words with great care. This comes in here at a time when the friends of this bill can not examine the words and study the meaning of them; but I have watched them with great care to see what the effect would be.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, is this a five-minute debate, or what?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I should like to be heard.

Mr. RAY of New York. I should like to explain——

Mr. GROSVENOR. The gentleman will not allow me to read the words to which I want to call his attention.

Mr. RAY of New York. I will, if I can have time. I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed for three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. RAY] asks unanimous consent that he be allowed to proceed for three minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAY of New York. Now, I will listen to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I quote from the language of the bill:

And any person that sells, vends, or furnishes oleomargarine for the use and consumption of others, except to his own family and guests thereof without compensation, who shall add to or mix with such oleomargarine any ingredient or coloration that causes it to look like butter shall also be held to be a manufacturer of oleomargarine within the meaning of said act and subject to the provisions thereof.

Mr. RAY of New York. Yes.

Mr. GROSVENOR. What is the meaning of that?

Mr. RAY of New York. Members of his own family and others——

Mr. GROSVENOR. And guests thereof, not members of the family, who are there without paying compensation. Now, that means that the boarding-house keeper who colors his oleomargarine, if he is found out by these detectives who can smell of the American table hereafter, shall be punished because he has colored the butter that his guests, who are paying board, are going to eat. The gentleman can not escape from that conclusion.

Mr. RAY of New York. Let me suggest to my friend from Ohio that the purpose suggested by my colleague from New York, that he desires to accomplish, if that be the only purpose of his amendment, can be accomplished by the insertion in that very clause of the word "boarders"—"except to his own family, boarders, and guests thereof without compensation."

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is a different proposition.

Mr. RAY of New York. If that be the purpose of the gentleman, let him say so.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is my purpose.

Mr. RAY of New York. Vote his amendment down, and then you can get the protection you want by saying "except to his own family, boarders therein, and guests thereof."

Mr. TAWNEY. I should like to ask the gentleman if a boarder in a boarding house who is paying for his board is not as much entitled to protection against the fraud of oleomargarine as any other man is?

Mr. RAY of New York. There is no use in striking out two-thirds of this section and inserting words that will throw the door wide open to fraud for the sake of reaching his suggestion, which is that he designs to protect the boarders in a boarding house. That could be accomplished by inserting the two words which I have suggested in the section as it now stands.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, in answer to the gentleman from New York, if I can have order. The gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] did not voluntarily strike out the proviso in order to fix this little thing, as the gentleman says. He was compelled to pursue that parliamentary method, owing to the parliamentary situation in which he found himself. So much for that.

Now, by the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York—and I understand he is willing to go farther than he has gone in order to make certain his object, so as to meet this condition of things. In Chicago, New York, and all the great cities very often in certain tenement parts of the cities where people are keeping boarders, where the wife of a laboring man is keeping house for him, and perhaps another laboring man, being his brother or her brother, he may have one or two boarders.

Now, if this bill goes through as it is, it will make any poor woman in the tenement district supposed to be aware of what the law is, and make her a manufacturer, subject to all the penalties of this bill, and all the taxes and all the penalties will accrue to her. Now, it is for the House to say, first, whether they desire to do that or not.

I understand the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] is willing to add after the word "corporation" in his amendment the words "public hotels or restaurants," so as not to allow an exemption to people who keep public hotels and public restaurants. And that is what it intends to do. Now, let me answer the strictures of the gentleman from New York, a great lawyer, chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, upon what the section means as it is now. It reads:

Any person that sells, vends, or furnishes—oleomargarine for the use and consumption of others, except to his own family.

Furnishes—

And except whom else?

"And guests." Guests "without compensation." If they are guests without compensation they are persons furnished with it, and the use and consumption of these guests with compensation falls under the definition of manufacturer under this bill and the party becomes subject to the penalties and fines of this bill.

Mr. RAY of New York. May I interrupt you?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Yes.

Mr. RAY of New York. Now, I do not claim that "guests without compensation" would include boarders, but I do claim that the words "his own family" include and protect boarders. Now, I want to ask my friend from Mississippi, do you think there is any harm done to any person if we enact a law——

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I consented for a question, and the gentleman knows that I have but five minutes, and the gentleman refused——

Mr. RAY of New York. I will ask that you have further time. This is an important matter.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Ask your question then.

Mr. RAY of New York. I will not interrupt without your consent.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. You have my consent.

Mr. RAY of New York. Is there any wrong done to anyone by any possibility by making it provide against private boarding-house keepers buying oleomargarine in the market and then coloring it to imitate butter and putting it before their boarders as pure butter? I think that should be stopped as well as the other fraud.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Now, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman has conceded in his question already that as a matter of fact and as a matter of law a boarder is a part of the family. Now, that is either correct or incorrect. Now, as a matter of fact, I think I need not argue to you to show that it is incorrect; but if it were correct, then the boarders in a public hotel would be part of the hotel proprietor's family, and boarders in a public boarding house would be part of the boarding-house keeper's family.

What the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] is trying to do is to protect the women who keep a few private boarders; women who are endeavoring by keeping boarders to help their husbands eke out a living. Now, he intends to offer to insert the words "public restaurants and public hotels."

Mr. WADSWORTH. I should be very glad to do so.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi (continuing). There will be a bona fide amendment, and it will protect the private boarding-house keepers who take a few boarders, and will give them an exemption from the penalties provided in this bill.

Now, the gentleman from New York [Mr. RAY] asks me the further question if I know of any reason why an honest boarder at one of these private boarding houses should not be protected from fraud. I answer the gentleman that I do not know any; but I do know a great many reasons why the poor wife of a laboring man, occupying a little bit of a tenement and having one or two people for boarders, if she buys oleomargarine and colors it, should not have visited upon her all these severe penalties that would wipe her, her husband, and family out of existence.

The very manufacturer's license tax would be too much. Now, if you want to punish her at all, punish her in some other way, by fine of $10, $15, or $20. [Loud applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. THAYER. Mr. Chairman, we have heard a great deal in the last four days about fraud. Eighteen members of this House, gathered from States all over this country—from Vermont to Mississippi—and constituting the Committee on Agriculture, have agreed that there should be some legislation which shall stop the fraud that has been perpetrated by the manufacture, sale, and consumption of oleomargarine. They have all agreed that there is a necessity for some legislation. The majority of them have presented the legislation which they think is required in the form of the majority bill, and the minority have presented it in the form of their bill. If there is a necessity of doing away with the fraud, it is well to consider who the persons are who should be protected, who are affected by it the most.

The manufacturer that manufactures oleomargarine knows that he manufactures it, and he manufactures generally nothing else in the butter line. The wholesaler who goes to him is not defrauded, because he goes to purchase oleomargarine, and he gets it. The retailer goes to the wholesale dealer, and he goes there to purchase oleomargarine, and he gets it, and he is not defrauded. The retailer undertakes to sell that commodity to be used by the consumer. I undertake to say, having had some experience in this violation of the oleomargarine law by parties in my State, that nine-tenths of all the parties who purchase of the retail seller are not defrauded.

They come to the retail seller and purchase oleomargarine because they want it. Who, then, suffers from the fraud? It is the man who goes to a cheap hotel; the man who goes to the cheap boarding house, or to the lunch counter, or the night lunch wagon, or to the restaurant; those who gather in the boarding houses of the mining camps and in the boarding barracks where railroads are being constructed and canals built and public enterprises are being promoted. These are the people who are being deprived of their just rights. They expect to receive butter, they pay for butter, they think they are getting butter, whereas in many instances they receive this counterfeit. But if the amendment which the gentleman from New York now proposes prevails, we might as well burn up this bill that has been presented here, because the great majority of those whom we are attempting to protect will get no protection whatever. I undertake to say that the men and women of all classes who are principally defrauded are the boarders; those who, by force of circumstances, are away from their families or homes, if they have any anywhere; those who have a right to expect to receive butter instead of colored grease.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. THAYER. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Does the gentleman understand that anything in the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] would exempt a public hotel keeper or a restaurant keeper from being subject to the penalties of this bill if they bought uncolored oleomargarine and colored it? If it does, the gentleman has misunderstood the amendment.

Mr. THAYER. But how about the boarding-house keepers, the lunch-room keepers, the restaurant keepers, and the men who take boarders in the camps and mines? Thousands and tens of thousands of people are every day eating this concoction and do not know it. These are the men who would not be affected by this bill if your amendment should prevail. The great object of this bill is to protect those whom we believe are being defrauded. We propose to stamp out the fraud where it is practiced or to deprive them of the opportunity to practice fraud who are now practicing it without let or hindrance, and the bill with your amendment in it would be powerless to restrain the very ones we seek to restrain. I believe that all classes of people engaged in the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine in this country are generally honest. This legislation is to protect not the poor man who goes to the store and buys a pound of oleomargarine. He goes there to purchase it, knowing what it is and what he wants, and in nine cases out of ten they are the men who get what they want. The fraud is not there.

Now and then there may be a case where the purchaser goes to purchase butter and he is sold oleomargarine. But I undertake to say that the great body of our people are honest, the manufacturers are honest, the wholesaler is honest, the retailer is honest, with now and then an exception where they undertake to deliver oleomargarine in place of butter. But it is the consumer who is being defrauded. He is the one who is imposed upon and deceived and is unable to protect himself. Did you ever hear of a person asking for oleomargarine when there was honest butter on the table? If we adopt the amendment proposed by the gentleman from New York, the life and virtue of this bill is gone.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I want to say one word in reply to the gentleman from New York who offers the amendment. The original amendment to section 3 of the existing oleomargarine law does not apply to anyone who would buy manufactured, uncolored oleomargarine and color it again for sale either as oleomargarine or butter, or as anything else.

In the course of the investigation by the Committee on Agriculture—and I have this information from the chairman of that committee—certain members of the committee visited an oleomargarine factory near the Capitol and there witnessed the operation of coloring uncolored oleomargarine without reducing it by any process whatever, heat or otherwise; but by the mere coloring of the salt and mixing the salt through the uncolored oleomargarine, they produced a colored oleomargarine that resembled butter so that no one not an expert could detect the difference.

While that process was going on another gentleman remarked that he knew of a better plan than that, and when they got through he took a little coloring matter, sprinkled it over a brick of pure uncolored oleomargarine, and, with a butter paddle, produced in a few minutes, to all appearances, a perfect roll of butter. So that to pass this bill without amending this clause defining a manufacturer of oleomargarine would open the door to a more gigantic fraud than has ever been perpetrated in the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine, for every pound would be manufactured uncolored, and the retailer and the wholesale dealer would take it into his cellar and color it as butter, and sell it as butter, and not be liable to any penalty, for, the property being his, he would violate no law by simply coloring his own property.

By the provisions of that section of the pending bill providing for the tax upon colored and uncolored oleomargarine, the tax on oleomargarine colored as butter or in any shade of yellow is 10 cents per pound, while the tax upon the uncolored oleomargarine, or oleomargarine free from coloration or any ingredient that would give it any shade of yellow, is one-quarter of 1 cent per pound.

Here, then, we have a difference of 9¾ cents per pound on the same manufactured product, but made in two different colors, one natural, the other artificial. This would constitute a most powerful inducement to the manufacturer and to the dealer to manufacture oleomargarine uncolored, and then, as I have said, with the aid of a little coloring matter and a butter ladle the dealer, or purchaser, or hotel proprietor, or restaurant keeper, or boarding-house keeper would color the uncolored product and sell it to the consumer or place it upon the table for his guests as butter. This would lead inevitably to a most gigantic fraud and should not be permitted; but inasmuch as the purchaser could make or save the tax of 9¾ cents per pound, the fraud would unquestionably be committed unless we make the tax on both the colored and the uncolored the same.

But the dairymen and their friends have no desire to place a burden of that kind upon the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine in its natural color, for in its natural color it is a legitimate product, but not a competitor of butter. All the dairymen want is to put that burden upon the product of the oleomargarine factory made in the color of butter and made in that color for the purpose of being disposed of in the open market as butter.

To permit, therefore, the manufacture and sale of uncolored oleomargarine, to give to those who wish or of necessity are compelled to purchase a substitute for butter at a price below the cost of the genuine article, it is proposed to place only a one-fourth cent tax on the uncolored article. This would not enhance its price and would not prevent its sale if, as the friends of oleomargarine claim, it is as pure, as sweet, and as wholesome as genuine butter.

But, Mr. Chairman, the only way, then, this can be accomplished and the fraud I have referred to prevented is to amend that clause of the existing oleomargarine law defining a manufacturer to be "one who manufactures for sale," so that the person who buys manufactured uncolored oleomargarine and colors it in imitation of butter for the purpose of again selling it shall be deemed a manufacturer and compelled to take out a manufacturer's license, at a cost of $600, and pay the 10 cents per pound tax on the uncolored oleomargarine which he colors for sale either to customers or guests.

The amendment I have offered is for the purpose of closing the door, as I have said, to that fraud. But if you allow a man who is running a boarding house, as proposed by the gentleman from Mississippi, to color uncolored oleo, every retail dealer in oleomargarine, every unscrupulous rascal who has been evading the existing law will have a boarder in his house to protect him, and he will be coloring manufactured uncolored oleomargarine for sale as butter.

So that you can not adopt this amendment, even excepting boarders—you can not go beyond the limitations proposed in the amendment I have offered and make any exceptions without opening the door to greater frauds than have ever been perpetrated in the carrying on of this business.

In the course of this debate the opponents of this measure have vigorously defended the manufacturers of oleomargarine, claiming that, with one exception, their business is conducted honestly and without fraud; that if there is fraud practiced in connection with the business of making and selling oleomargarine, it is limited entirely to the dealer.

Let me give you a few notable instances of fraud practiced by the manufacturer in order to disprove the statements of the men who have so eloquently defended the manufacturers of spurious butter.

Last month a representative of the Hammond Manufacturing Company, of Hammond, Ind., the largest manufacturer of oleomargarine in that State, was arrested upon the charge of having offered the food commissioner of Michigan a standing bribe to permit his company to dispose of oleomargarine in Michigan in violation of the laws of that State and without interference from the dairy and food department.

A year ago last winter, in exposing the fraudulent character of the oleomargarine business in Philadelphia, the North American published a facsimile telegram from the Holland Butterine Company, of Pittsburg, the only makers of oleomargarine in Pennsylvania, in which it agreed for a cent a pound extra charge on their oleomargarine to protect retail dealers against the enforcement of their State law.

On page 493 of the Senate evidence is printed a copy of an affidavit made by Braun & Fitts, manufacturers of oleomargarine in Chicago, and filed in the Federal court of Chicago about a year ago, in which it is stated under oath by a representative of that concern, and as an excuse for their not testifying, that an examination of their books would disclose incriminating evidence. In this action they were charged with fraud by the collector of internal revenue in connection with one of the greatest conspiracies for swindling the public ever conceived, and they offered in settlement the sum of $7,500, but the offer was at that time rejected.

On the same page of this testimony you will find copies of the record of the arrest of one Frank Mathewson, president of the Oakdale Manufacturing Company, of Providence, R. I., an oleomargarine factory. The arrest was made upon the complaint of W. F. Kinney, collector of internal revenue of the Connecticut district. This is the largest oleomargarine manufacturing company in the East. The arrest in this case was upon the charge of concealing facts in connection with their business which, by the regulations of the Internal-Revenue Department, they were obliged to enter in their books.

A. T. Dow, formerly with Armour & Co., of Chicago, and later a manufacturer of oleomargarine, on his own confession, was fined in the circuit court of the United States in Chicago last year the sum of $10,000 and imprisoned for six months for fraudulent practices in the conduct of his establishment.

The charter of the Capital City Dairy Company, of Columbus, Ohio, was revoked a year ago by the supreme court of that State, and the revocation was confirmed January 6, 1902, by the Supreme Court of the United States. The ground upon which it lost its charter was repeated and flagrant violations of the laws of the State. This was the largest oleomargarine factory between Rhode Island and Chicago.

The president of the much-lauded and advertised Standard Butterine Company of Washington, D. C., Walter P. Wilkins, whose factory is almost within sight of the Capitol building, is to-day under indictment in the District of Columbia, charged with fraudulently removing brands, marks, and stamps from packages of oleomargarine, with intent to sell the same as butter, while his brother recently served a sentence of four months and paid a fine of $1,500 for the commission of a similar offense. This brother is now manager of the establishment of Braun & Fitts, of Chicago.

If you will again examine the Senate evidence, page 615, you will see where the oleomargarine makers of Chicago appeared and furnished bond for the future appearance of the principals in the most gigantic swindle in the sale of oleomargarine ever committed in any business of any kind.

On page 612 you will find the history of one of those swindlers, written by former Attorney-General Griggs, the facts therein contained being taken from the Internal-Revenue Department.

On page 552 of this same evidence you will note that there was presented to the Senate committee documentary evidence, including the original bonds, showing how representatives of the leading oleomargarine establishments of this country appeared repeatedly in the courts to protect retailers of oleomargarine charged with the fraudulent sale of oleomargarine as butter. Not once did they do this; this record shows that it was a very common practice and occurred on many different occasions from one end of the year to the other.

These are only a few instances of the flagrant violation of the existing oleomargarine law by the manufacturers of oleomargarine. The number of instances could be multiplied several times over if the records of the Department of Justice and the Internal-Revenue Department were carefully examined.

The instances which I have cited embrace violations of the law and fraudulent practices by the manufacturers of more than one-half of the oleomargarine that is manufactured in this country.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I think the debate on this section should close.

Mr. MANN rose.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Let me put a question to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY]. Does he think that the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] would protect a retailer in doing what the gentleman a moment ago supposed him to do?

In other words, when this amendment goes on to provide that corporations, public boarding houses, public hotels and restaurants vending or furnishing oleomargarine shall be manufacturers—leaving out any provision in regard to private boarding houses—does not the gentleman know, as a lawyer, that if any man, for the purpose of vending oleomargarine to the public at large, should undertake to resolve himself into a fraudulent boarding house, and not only supply his guests at his table with this article, as contemplated by the amendment of the gentleman from New York, but go further and sell it out doors—does the gentleman suppose that under such a state of facts the man could be protected by the amendment of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. TAWNEY. My friend from Mississippi is now indulging in the practice which he criticised my friend from New York a little while ago for indulging in—that is, making a speech in the form of a question. I would like to ask the gentleman from Mississippi how the administrators of this law are to distinguish between a private boarding house and a public boarding house—a little one or a big one?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Under the laws of Mississippi the distinction between a private boarding house and a public boarding house is very clear.

Mr. TAWNEY. But, thank God, our laws all over the country are not the same as in Mississippi.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I suppose the same distinction applies elsewhere. Public boarding houses are licensed, are they not?

Mr. TAWNEY. Not anywhere in the United States, I think, except in the gentleman's own State.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. If this question should arise in court, it would be for the jury to determine whether the house in question was a private boarding house or a public boarding house—whether it took anybody that applied or only select guests.

Mr. TAWNEY. Is the gentleman answering my question?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I answer the gentleman by saying that a public boarding house is one that takes as a boarder anybody who comes and pays. A private boarding house is like a private family, only private boarders or select boarders being accepted. The volume which I hold in my hand recognizes this distinction.

Mr. UNDERWOOD obtained the floor.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I move that debate on this amendment and on the pending section be now closed.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I understand that I am recognized.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Will the gentleman yield to me for only a moment?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will if I do not lose the floor.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I shall be very glad to accept the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS], to include public boarding houses and hotels.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. And restaurants.

Mr. WADSWORTH. And restaurants.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I yield for a minute to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS].

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. In connection with the question asked a moment ago by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY], I wish to refer to a legal decision made in the case of Cady v. McDowell, decided in 1869 by the supreme court of the State of New York. It will be found in volume 1 of the reports of that court, page 484. In that case the court says:

> A boarding house is not, in common parlance or in legal meaning, every private house where one or more boarders are kept occasionally only, and upon special considerations. But it is a quasi-public house, where boarders are generally and habitually kept, and which is held out and known as a place of entertainment of that kind.

Now, that is the definition of a boarding house in the State of New York, in the absence of any statutory definition.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, in order that I may occupy my five minutes under the rule, I move to strike out the last word. I have not attempted to make an argument on this bill. I have listened with pleasure to a great many arguments that have been made here; but I think the discussion which has just taken place on the last amendment demonstrates more clearly than all the discussions that have preceded it the viciousness of this legislation. You are going now to require that this legislation shall go into the home of every citizen of the United States, from those who live in the palaces to those who live in the hovels, that the Federal Government, with its scores of marshals and employees, shall follow the housewives of this country. And the class of legislation that you propose to put on the bill provides no slight punishment. It is no small dereliction to violate this law.

You gentlemen who propose to put this legislation into the homes of your constituency remember the pains and penalties that you are carrying there. This law says that any person who willfully violates any of the provisions of this section shall for each such offense be fined not less than $50 and not exceeding $500, and imprisoned not less than thirty days nor more than six months, one or both. That is what you are going to carry into the homes of this country. You know as well as I do that there are hundreds and hundreds of poor people in this land who will never know that this law has been enacted until the deputy sheriff walks into that house to tell them they have committed a criminal offense. Not a criminal offense in the eyes of God, not a criminal offense because it is a violation of the decalogue, but a criminal offense because you, in order to protect a cow monopoly, to protect these men who want to build up one business at the expense of the other, are creating this class of crimes to punish your own constituency.

I do not think that there could be any more dangerous class of legislation that you could pass. You know as well as I do that all laws are violated. You can pass a law against murder, but men will commit murder. You can prohibit stealing, but men will steal. You can prohibit the sale of colored oleomargarine, but there are people who are going to violate this law and show others how to violate it. The men who go out to sell white oleomargarine and teach innocent people how to color it will not call their attention to this law. They will escape the pains and penalties that you impose, which will ultimately fall on innocent heads. I say that the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] would protect a large class of these people from the severe penalty that you are about to put on them.

Mr. TAWNEY. I move that debate on the pending amendment and section be now closed.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota moves that debate on the pending amendment and section be now closed.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] desires to ask unanimous consent for some modification of his amendment.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I ask unanimous consent to insert the words "public restaurant and hotel."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to modify his pending amendment by inserting the words "public restaurant and hotel."

Mr. RAY of New York. I object to that.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made.

Several MEMBERS. Add the words "public boarding house."

Mr. WADSWORTH. I have no objection to inserting the words "public boarding house," if public boarding houses have a legal status before the country.

The CHAIRMAN. It can only be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Then I will simply ask unanimous consent to put in the words "public restaurant and hotel."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to insert the words "public restaurant and hotel."

Mr. RAY of New York. I object to any modification of the amendment.

Mr. MANN. I move to amend the amendment by inserting those words.

The CHAIRMAN. The motion is not in order. The amendment would be in the third degree, and it could only be made by unanimous consent.

Mr. MANN. Why can not the amendment be made?

The CHAIRMAN. The rule gives only one amendment to a substitute, and this is in the third degree and can not be offered except by unanimous consent.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TAWNEY. This vote is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York, limiting the definition of a manufacturer of oleomargarine to corporations, wholesale and retail dealers, is it not?

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment has been fully reported.

Mr. TAWNEY. I simply wanted the committee to understand it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It limits the wholesale and retail dealers in oleomargarine and in butter. It limits them to corporations and manufacturers of butter, public restaurants, and hotels. It excepts private persons and individuals.

Mr. CANDLER. I ask for the reading of the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be again reported.

The amendment was again read.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment just reported.

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Division! Let us have tellers on it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the gentleman from New York to demand tellers.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Take the division first, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 84, noes 99.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Tellers, Mr. Chairman.

The question was taken on ordering tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. A sufficient number; tellers are ordered, and the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] and the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] will take their places as tellers.

The committee again divided; and tellers reported—ayes 111, noes 126.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add as a new section, section 3, to read as follows:

"SEC. 3. That on and after July 1, 1902, the tax upon oleomargarine, as prescribed in section 8 of the act approved August 2, 1886, and entitled 'An act defining butter, also imposing a tax upon and regulating the manufacture, sale, importation, and exportation of oleomargarine,' shall be one-fourth of 1 cent per pound when the same is not made in imitation of butter; but when made in imitation of butter, the tax to be paid by the manufacturer shall be 10 cents per pound, to be levied and collected in accordance with the provisions of said act."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to have the attention of the committee a moment. The motion to adopt the substitute as amended has not yet been put to the committee. The Chair will now put it.

The question was taken; and the substitute as amended was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the amendment of the committee, inserting the new section 3; which has just been read. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out of the committee amendment entitled section 3 all after the word "That" in line 12 of page 3 and insert the following:

"Section 8 of an act entitled 'An act defining butter, also imposing a tax upon and regulating the manufacture, sale, importation, and exportation of oleomargarine,' approved August 2, 1886, be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"'SEC. 8. That upon oleomargarine which shall be manufactured and sold, or removed for consumption or use, there shall be assessed and collected a tax of 10 cents per pound, to be paid by the manufacturer thereof; and any fractional part of a pound in a package shall be taxed as a pound: Provided, When oleomargarine is free from coloration or ingredient that causes it to look like butter of any shade of yellow, said tax shall be one-fourth of 1 cent per pound. The tax levied by this section shall be represented by coupon stamps; and the provisions of existing laws governing the engraving, issue, sale, accountability, effacement, and destruction of stamps relating to tobacco and snuff, as far as applicable, are hereby made to apply to stamps provided for by this section.'"

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Connecticut to the amendment offered by the committee. The gentleman from Connecticut is recognized.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota to explain the amendment.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I will say, in explanation of this amendment to the committee amendment, that it changes existing law in only two particulars. It changes the word "two" to "ten," making the tax 10 cents instead of 2 cents a pound, and it adds a proviso imposing a tax of one-fourth of 1 cent a pound upon oleomargarine when made without color or upon uncolored oleomargarine. In other words, it is a reenactment of section 8 of the existing oleomargarine law of August 2, 1886, with these two exceptions.

The tax is changed from "two" to "ten" a pound on oleomargarine as defined in that law, not a tax of 10 cents a pound on oleomargarine as defined in the section as originally reported by the committee to the House, but it is 10 cents a pound on oleomargarine as defined in the existing law, and when oleomargarine is manufactured free from discoloration or from any ingredients giving the color of yellow, or any shade of yellow, it is then taxable at the rate of one-fourth of 1 cent a pound; so that those who wish to use oleomargarine upon their tables or in their kitchens can go to a store and buy it, and buy it for less than they are paying for it at the present time.

The tax is reduced from 2 cents to a quarter of a cent a pound; but if they put into their product that which entirely changes the character of the product, enabling the manufacturer to sell it and the retailer to sell it for that which it is not, and thereby perpetrate a fraud upon the consumer, he must pay a tax of 10 cents a pound, so that with the original cost and tax added it will bring its cost up to the cost of manufacturing butter.

Now, when they want to use it, that is, when the poor downtrodden laboring men, for whom our friends on the other side have manifested such great solicitude, want to use oleo on their tables; when the poor wife of the poor laboring man wants to keep a boarder in order to help pay their household expenses, as the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] has told us, by buying a cheap product for use upon her table, she can go to the factory or she can go to the store and buy uncolored oleomargarine for less than she can buy that product to-day, and for a great deal less than she would have to pay at this time for that product colored in imitation of butter.

That is the only change proposed in the existing law, Mr. Chairman, in the amendment offered by the committee. It changes the tax from 2 to 10 cents a pound, with the proviso exempting uncolored oleomargarine from the present tax, with the exception of a quarter of a cent, or rather, reducing the tax upon uncolored oleomargarine to a quarter of a cent a pound.

I wish to say, for the information of the committee, right here, that under the existing definition of oleomargarine, as that product is defined in the law of 1886, it is very questionable whether oleomargarine is taxable at all. Three years ago a decision was rendered by Judge Grosscup in the circuit court of the United States in Chicago in which he held that uncolored oleomargarine was free from taxation under the existing law, because without the color of butter he held it was not made in imitation of butter.

But the oleomargarine manufacturers themselves prefer to have some tax on the uncolored product. That will appear from the testimony presented to the Committee on Agriculture. The reason given is that it gives their product a standing and character in the market that it would not otherwise have.

I will say here that the bill I introduced at the beginning of this session expressly provided that uncolored oleomargarine should be exempt from any tax, because when made in its natural color it is not a competitor with butter, but in the judgment of the committee it was deemed best to retain a portion of this tax in order that the Government might be able to determine and inquire into and have an interest in investigating the business of manufacturing the uncolored oleomargarine, and thereby police that business as well as police the manufacturer of the colored oleomargarine. I have nothing further, Mr. Chairman, to say in support of this amendment.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I want to ask if the gentleman's amendment is exactly what is printed in the bill on our desks?

Mr. TAWNEY. No; it is not.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. The words "every shade of yellow" is what is added?

Mr. TAWNEY. No; what I have offered is offered as a substitute for section 3, as that section is reported by the committee.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. The amendment the gentleman has just offered as a substitute, or whatever it was, is literally section 3 as printed, except the words "every shade of yellow" is added?

Mr. TAWNEY. No.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. What is the difference?

Mr. TAWNEY. What is offered is the identical language of section 8 of the existing law. What the committee reported was an entirely different phraseology, and it is for the purpose of avoiding a possible conflict between the definition of the product on which the 10-cent tax is imposed, as that product is defined in the committee bill, and the definition of oleomargarine, as defined in the existing law. In order to avoid any possible conflict, the substitute reenacts the present section of the law of 1886, changing the word "two" to "ten," and adding a proviso for a quarter of a cent a pound tax on uncolored oleomargarine.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following, which

I send to the desk, to follow at the end of the sections after the committee amendments are disposed of.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add as an amendment to section 8, line 22, page 8, after the word "act," the following:

"That the tax on all sirups put up, labeled, or sold in imitation of maple sirup shall be taxed 10 cents per pint, to be levied and collected in accordance with the provisions of this act."

Mr. TAWNEY. I make the point of order, Mr. Chairman, that the amendment is not germane.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Upon that, Mr. Chairman, I would like to be heard.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks it is not in order at this time.

Mr. TAWNEY. And, furthermore, it is an amendment in the third degree and therefore is not in order.

The CHAIRMAN. It is not in order.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I did not claim it was now in order. I said I desired to offer it at the end of the section after the committee amendments were disposed of.

The CHAIRMAN. The point is made that it is not germane and the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I do not understand how it is not germane. I may find out after awhile from some of these able parliamentarians. [Laughter.]

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I offer as a substitute for section 3 the amendment that I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend section 3, in line 22, page 3, after the word "act," by adding thereto the following:

"That on and after July 1, 1902, there shall be levied and collected a tax of one-fourth of 1 cent per pound on manufactured ice when same is sold in 1 and 5 pound blocks, and each block shall be stamped 'Counterfeit ice,' but when same is made in imitation of natural ice, by nature's process from river and lake water, and sold in blocks larger than 5 pounds, the tax to be paid by the manufacturer shall be 10 cents per pound, to be collected in accordance with the provisions of this bill."

Mr. TAWNEY. I make the point of order, Mr. Chairman——

Mr. BURLESON. I do not yield to the gentleman.

Mr. TAWNEY. I do not care whether the gentleman does or not. I have a right to raise the point of order that this amendment is not germane to the section that it is proposed as a substitute. Furthermore, it is not a substitute. It is not germane to the bill, and is as foolish as the gentleman that offered it.

Mr. BURLESON. It is not as vicious as the bill supported by the gentleman from Minnesota. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is made by the gentleman from Minnesota, and the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. BURLESON. I appeal, Mr. Chairman, from the decision of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas appeals from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. TAWNEY. I move to lay the appeal on the table.

Mr. BURLESON. I have a right to be heard on the appeal. Bearing upon this substitute, I want to appeal to any earnest and sincere believer in the majority bill to give me one reason why this substitute should not be adopted. As a matter of fact, the same vicious principle underlies both. No man can gainsay it. There is no divinity that hedges around butter or milk that gives them a peculiar protection over God's pure water that is found in streams and the lakes. [Applause.] Now, gentlemen, you who are behind this majority bill, I will admit that manufactured ice is purer than natural ice; that natural ice often contains germs of malaria and germs of typhoid fever, and I will also admit that butter often contains the germs of tuberculosis, which will never be found in the manufactured oleomargarine.

Now, gentlemen, I offer this amendment only to accentuate the rank absurdity and injustice of the measure that is being advocated by the selfish and ambitious gentleman from Minnesota. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the appeal, and also the substitute, as it has served my purpose.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the amendment by striking out the words "10 cents" wherever they occur and inserting in lieu thereof "3 cents."

The CHAIRMAN. This is an amendment in the third degree, and is not permissible at this time.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Then I withdraw it for the present.

Mr. FEELY. Mr. Chairman, I send to the desk a substitute which I desire to offer for the section.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out section 3 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"SEC. 3. That on and after July 1, 1902, the tax upon oleomargarine, as prescribed in section 8 of the act approved August 2, 1886, and entitled 'An act defining butter, also imposing a tax upon and regulating the manufacture, sale, importation, and exportation of oleomargarine,' shall be one-fourth of 1 cent per pound when the same is not made in imitation of butter; but when made in imitation of butter, the tax to be paid by the manufacturer shall be 5 cents per pound, to be levied and collected in accordance with the provisions of said act."

Mr. FEELY. Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to indulge in any debate on this amendment. I simply wish to submit it as a test of the fairness of the majority so far as they have proceeded upon this bill. They have closed the door against the poor boarding-house keepers of this country by forbidding them to use butterine, even if desired by their boarders. Men have stood upon the floor of this House and assumed that if the law did not prevent it the vast army of boarding-house keepers in this country would commit fraud. The gentleman from Massachusetts stated here that the wholesaler is committing no fraud, that the retailer is committing no fraud, but that the fraud is committed down in the ranks of those who pander to the taste of the consumer. Gentlemen, vote, if you please, to place an arbitrary tax of 10 cents per pound on this product when colored in a color as natural to it as yellow is the natural color of December butter, and satisfy yourselves, if you can, that you are not conforming to an arbitrary test imposed upon you by someone outside of this hall.

Men may as well say that 10 cents is the natural tax upon oleomargarine as to say that yellow is the natural color of December butter. If there is a spirit of fairness left in this House, if there is one consideration that can prevail here against striking down a legitimate industry, then I ask that you adopt this substitute placing the tax on colored oleomargarine at 5 cents a pound—not 10 cents—the latter tax being so heavy as absolutely and wholly to drive out of existence in the business world the honest business of manufacturing and selling oleomargarine.

Go on, gentlemen, if you will, using the taxing power of the Government for a purpose for which it never was intended. Go on, States-rights men, if you will, using the power of the Government to prevent the separate States of the Union from passing laws which permit the manufacturing, retailing, and eating of an honest product; and then go back to your constituents and, if you can, defend your consistency.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment to the substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the proposed amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add at the end of the substitute the following:

"And the tax on all preparations of glucose, sucrose extracts, and other compounds put up, labeled, or sold as pure sugar candy, when not made entirely of sugar, with proper coloring and flavoring ingredients, shall be 10 cents per pound, to be levied and collected in accordance with the provisions of this act."

Mr. TAWNEY. I make a point of order against this amendment.

Mr. CLAYTON. Let me say one word.

Mr. TAWNEY. I insist on the point of order.

Mr. CLAYTON. I want to protect the babies and children against this candy that contains clay and other deleterious substances. While we are going on with this business of protection, let us protect the babies and children against this impure candy.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Chairman, I appeal from that decision.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama appeals from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. CLAYTON. Now, upon that I desire to be heard briefly.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Chairman, this is a sweet subject that I am going to talk on, and I ask you to hear me a little while. This measure and the debate growing out of it have shown a disposition here in the House and on the outside to go into what directly belongs to State authority. This is a matter of dealing with food and a matter of police regulation.

Now, the amendment that I have offered to the substitute is no more absurd and no more unauthorized than is the main proposition pending before this House. If we are going to protect grown men and women against fraudulent butter or oleomargarine, I say if we recognize that as a proper subject for the legislation of Congress, we ought to protect the young children and the babies of this country from deleterious candy made in part from flour, white clay, glucose, chalk, and a number of other things that are put into candy that are certainly deleterious to the health of the babies and the children. [Applause.]

A MEMBER. And our sweethearts.

Mr. CLAYTON. And our sweethearts, too, as somebody says. [Laughter.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, some of you millionaires over there, who are able to buy Huyler's candy, do not need this; but we poor fellows who have got to buy stick candy to give to our sweethearts, our babies, and our children, need this just as much as you need your oleomargarine bill. The babies cry for it. [Applause.]

Now, give us this. We not only need this, but we need protection against this fraudulent maple-sirup business that is practiced all over the country. Why, you yankees have had to abandon your wooden-nutmeg business, because we have got onto that; but every grocery store in my town sells your fraudulent maple sirup as the pure juice of the tree, boiled down to the proper consistency. [Laughter.] Now, protect us against all these. In the name of American liberty [laughter], in the name of the constitutional rights of our sweethearts, our children, and our babies, I beg you to adopt this amendment. [Applause.]

I withdraw the appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama withdraws his appeal.

Mr. ALLEN of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

SEC. 4. That the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized and required to cause a rigid sanitary inspection to be made from time to time, and at such times as he may deem necessary, of all factories and storehouses where butter is renovated; and all butter renovated at such places shall be carefully inspected in the same manner and to the same extent and purpose that meat products are now inspected. The quantity and quality of butter renovated shall be reported monthly. All renovated butter shall be designated as such by marks, brands, and labels, and the words "Renovated butter" shall be printed on all packages thereof in such manner as may be prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture, and shall be sold only as renovated butter. Any person violating the provisions of this section shall, on conviction thereof, be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall be fined not less than $50 nor more than $500, and imprisoned not less than one month nor more than six months.

The Secretary of Agriculture shall make all needful sanitary and other rules and regulations for carrying this section into effect. And no renovated butter shall be shipped or transported from one State to another, or to foreign countries, unless inspected as provided in this section.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against this amendment that it is not germane to the section to which it is offered as an amendment.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, we want to be heard on that proposition.

Mr. TAWNEY. My point of order is this: This section relates exclusively to the imposition of a tax upon a certain product. The proposed amendment is intended to regulate, inspect, and supervise the manufacture of another product without any tax whatever.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks this is not germane to this section. It should be offered as an independent section at the proper time.

Mr. ALLEN of Kentucky. It was my purpose to offer that as an additional section, and at the end of this section I want it to be considered as pending, as an additional section.

The CHAIRMAN. It would not be proper to offer it in this connection.

Mr. ALLEN of Kentucky. I should like to have it considered as pending.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. We ask, then, that it be considered as pending.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that it be considered as pending. Is there objection?

Mr. MAHON and others objected.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Then we will ask for the floor at the proper time.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota to the committee amendment.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, there have been so many amendments offered, I would like to have the Clerk read the amendment or have the Chair state the amendment that is proposed to be voted on now first.

The CHAIRMAN. If there is no objection, the Clerk will report the amendment. The committee amendment to which this is offered is already before the committee in print. The amendment to the committee amendment will be reported.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out of the committee amendment entitled section 3 all after the word "That," in line 12 of page 3, and insert the following:

"Section 8 of an act entitled, 'An act defining butter, also imposing a tax upon and regulating the manufacture, sale, importation, and exportation of oleomargarine,' approved August 2, 1886, be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"'SEC. 8. That upon oleomargarine which shall be manufactured and sold, or removed for consumption or use, there shall be assessed and collected a tax of 10 cents per pound, to be paid by the manufacturer thereof; and any fractional part of a pound in a package shall be taxed as a pound: Provided, That when oleomargarine is free from coloration or ingredient that causes it to look like butter of any shade of yellow, said tax shall be one-fourth of 1 cent per pound. The tax levied by this section shall be represented by coupon stamps; and the provisions of existing laws governing the engraving, issue, sale, accountability, effacement, and destruction of stamps relating to tobacco and snuff, as far as applicable, are hereby made to apply to stamps provided for by this section.'"

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment just read.

Mr. LESSLER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] made the statement in his opening remarks on this section that the consumer was protected here; but it is plain to all of us that the manufacturer is named here, and there is no question in the mind of anybody that if the consumer wants the product he has got to pay the 10 cents. There are some of us who are in earnest on the subject of protecting the consumer and those of us who represent large cities, and who know the conditions existing there, are well aware what the result will be. We understand why the poor man buys this imitation product, if you will call it that. We know that this 10-cent tax will have to come right out of his pocket, and it will come out of the pockets of people to whom every penny is important.

It is very much like a bill that might be introduced here imposing a penalty in favor of a railroad company when a man is run over by the cars, allowing that company to sue the man who was run down. Here is a proposition to protect the poor man against fraud, to protect the hotel men against fraud, by asking somebody to pay 10 cents a pound tax. Ultimately, and in the last instance, that 10 cents will have to come out of the pockets of men who have very little money to spend, who want 15-cent butter or butterine or oleomargarine, who do not want it white, who do not know how to color it, who will not learn how to color it, but who want the yellow product; and it is a shame and an outrage to deprive them of that which they want and which they ought to have. [Applause.]

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I would be derelict in my duty to my constituents if I did not object to the passage of this bill. I represent the largest cattle-growing district in the greatest cattle-growing State in this Union, and I would misrepresent my people if I did not raise my voice against this iniquitous measure. The time-honored Democratic principle of equal rights to all and special privileges to none is plainly violated by this bill. The advocates of this bill object to oleomargarine because it is colored like butter, yet, at the same time, they claim the right to color butter. Why should Congress give butter makers the right to color their product and deny a like right to makers of oleomargarine? Why should the Elgin Creamery be permitted to buy up all the rancid butter in the country and renovate it and color it as they please, and then put it on the market and sell it as butter, and the makers of oleomargarine be deprived of this right? Is this equal rights for all and special privileges for none? If you make it unlawful to color oleomargarine, why not at the same time make it unlawful to color creamery butter or renovated butter? What is sauce for the goose should be sauce for the gander.

If it is lawful to color the product of the cream of the cow, should it not also be lawful to color the product of the tallow that comes from the cow's brother, the steer? The Whig and Republican parties have always contended for prohibitive tariff duties, so as to destroy foreign trade in our home markets, but this bill, the most indefensible piece of special legislation ever proposed in the American Congress, proposes to destroy and drive from the markets of this country the poor man's butter (oleomargarine), so that the creamery butter makers may be deprived of a dangerous competitor and thus be enabled to completely monopolize the butter business of the country and raise the price of creamery butter from 30 to 45 cents a pound at least. The Associated Press dispatches of January 20, this year, state that a butter trust with $18,000,000 capital has been formed in New York, with Charles H. Patterson as manager. This trust has already bought up 400 creameries, and propose to buy up all the large creameries in this country.

This bill is in the interest of this dairy trust. By it they will destroy and drive oleomargarine out of the markets. Congress has been flooded with petitions from labor unions located in all the large cities protesting against the passage of this bill. They call oleomargarine the poor man's butter. They say that they can purchase it from 15 to 20 cents per pound, and that they can not afford to purchase creamery butter at the present price of 35 cents per pound. They claim that oleomargarine is a wholesome article of food; that it is pure and sweet, and is hard to distinguish from the best dairy product, and is far superior to renovated butter.

Therefore in the name of the laboring men of this country I protest against the passage of this bill. I also protest against its passage in the name of the cotton raisers of the South, for the reason that cotton-seed oil enters largely into the ingredients of oleomargarine, and the object of this bill is not to control the sale of oleomargarine, but to prevent its manufacture.

The caption of this bill declares that oleomargarine is an imitation dairy product; and in its first section declares everything not made exclusively of pure and unadulterated milk or cream is an imitation dairy product. The proviso at the end of this section will permit any State to prevent the sale or manufacture of oleomargarine if any "ingredient that causes it to look like butter" is used in the manufacture of oleomargarine.

Now, it is well known that cream and milk is used in the manufacture of oleomargarine, and it can not be made without it. Hence it is within the power of any State under this bill to prevent the manufacture of this poor man's butter, oleomargarine.

Section 3 of the bill declares that when oleomargarine is made in imitation of butter it shall be taxed 10 cents per pound. Now, the caption declares that oleomargarine is an imitation butter. Hence all oleomargarine will be taxed 10 cents a pound, and this is a prohibitive tax and will at once stop its manufacture, and this will depreciate the value of every beef steer, every hog, and every pound of cotton seed produced in this country. This loss will fall almost wholly on the South and West, and its benefits will accrue almost entirely to the North and East, so that we have not only to witness the great injustice of one industry seeking to destroy another, but also of one section of our country almost solidly lining up against another section for the purpose of throttling an industry that rivals one of their own.

As the price of the beef steer, the hog, and the cotton seed of the South and West goes down, the price of the dairy cow and butter in the East and North goes up. The millions thus lost in the one section will be gained in the other.

I shall attach to my speech a copy of a resolution adopted by the National Live Stock Association at its annual meeting at Denver, Colo., in December last. This resolution sets forth in plain terms the injustice of this bill. But we are told by the advocates of this bill that they would not object to oleomargarine if it was not colored yellow, so as to imitate butter. May I inquire when the creamery trust got a patent on the color known as yellow?

If they have a valid patent on this color, then the oleomargarine manufacturers could not use that color; otherwise they can. I had always thought that God gave that color to mankind, among others, when he made the rainbow; and the yellow color in the rainbow is certainly not a new discovery; hence it is not patentable, and one man has as much right to use it as another. It has also been shown that the makers of oleo were the first men to use yellow coloring matter in the manufacture of their product, and that the creamery-butter makers adopted the same color and now claim the exclusive right to use the color.

If coloring oleomargarine yellow is a fraud and a crime, then it should be wholly prohibited and punished as a crime and not taxed out of existence, But is it a fraud? If so, is it not also a fraud for the fair sex to powder or color their faces, because perchance some scheming Delilahs might thereby allure some strong and confiding Samsons into the toils of matrimony? Almost every article we eat or wear is judged by its color. This truism has produced a modern slang phrase, viz: When speaking of something out of the usual order of things, or of doubtful propriety, we often say that it is a "little off color." We find that beer, whisky, tobacco of all grades, candy, tea, cloth, and clothing of all kinds are almost universally colored by manufacturers, and if we undertake to regulate all these things by law we will have a government of paternalism run mad.

I object to this bill because I believe in the Democratic doctrine of States rights, and that the States themselves should legislate on these subjects, and not the Congress of the United States.

I am opposed to this bill because if enacted into a law it would be unconstitutional and void. The Constitution provides that all taxation shall be equal and uniform; but you, by this bill, propose to tax oleomargarine because it is colored yellow, and refuse to tax creamery butter or renovated butter, which is also often colored yellow. You propose to tax it because you say it purports to be butter when it is not butter, but is a fraud. If this contention is true, then you would have to tax the wooden nutmegs of New England and all other spurious things on the market, and thus secure uniformity of taxation.

I want to warn this House that this bill is most vicious and dangerous in its tendencies; that it subverts the fundamental principles of our Government; that it seeks to destroy a lawful business by an abuse of the taxing power of the Government; that it will array one section of the country against another, one business interest against another, in that it points out the remedy of taxation as a means of wrecking a rival business interest. It will array the laboring man against the capitalist, because in this piece of legislation he sees the creamery trust refuse to him the right to color the substitute for butter that his poverty forces him to buy, and by destroying the oleomargarine industry forces him to pay from 10 to 20 cents more per pound for creamery butter than the former price.

This species of legislation will array the strong populous parts of our country against the weaker parts, the stronger rival business against the weaker, and, in my judgment, is only the forerunner of a Pandora's box of like evil measures that will return with frightful regularity to plague future Congresses.

The following is a resolution adopted by the National Live Stock Association:

HEADQUARTERS NATIONAL LIVE STOCK ASSOCIATION,
Denver, Colo.

The following resolution was unanimously adopted by the Fifth Annual Convention of the National Live Stock Association, held in Chicago, Ill., December 3, 4, 5, and 6, 1901:

Whereas the National Live Stock Association has heretofore announced itself as unalterably opposed to that class of legislation which builds up one industry at the expense of another equally as meritorious, and has opposed the passage of the bill for a law known as the "Grout bill," which certain dairy interests sought to have passed by the last Congress of the United States, but which failed to reach a vote; and

Whereas unofficial notice has been served upon the officers of this association that this same measure will be reintroduced in the coming session of Congress and forced to an issue; and

Whereas the openly expressed intention of the movers of this law is to destroy the manufacture of oleomargarine, a product of the packing house, which has been declared by Government authorities to be a pure food product as wholesome and healthful as butter; and

Whereas the stockmen of the United States believe that this product should be sold upon its own merits, and favor any legislation that will prevent or compel the manufacturers to sell their product for just what it is, a substitute for butter, but draw the line on legislation that would unjustly hamper the industry by compelling the manufacturers to offer their product in a form that would make it offensive to the eye of the consumer, and consequently unpalatable; and

Whereas the so-called "Wadsworth" substitute for the Grout bill, offered in the last Congress, which provides that the oleomargarine product be only offered for sale in one and two pound packages, each package labeled in plain letters, meets with the approval of the members of this association: Therefore,

Resolved, That the National Live Stock Association, in convention assembled, representing more than four billions of invested capital, reiterates its former expressed disapproval of such class legislation as the old Grout bill, and we protest against the passage of any law of this nature, firmly believing that such legislation is unjust, unconstitutional, and unfair, and not to be telerated in a free country.

Resolved, That we heartily approve of such legislation as the law proposed by the Wadsworth substitute in the last Congress, and we approve any legislation which, in a legitimate manner, compels manufacturers to offer their products for sale for just what they are.

Resolved, That we heartily indorse the position taken by Hon. J. W. WADSWORTH, chairman of the House Committee on Agriculture in the last Congress, and believe that, in justice to him, he should be retained as chairman of that committee in the present Congress. The thanks of this convention are due, and are hereby tendered, to Senators MONEY of Mississippi, HEITFELD of Idaho, WARREN of Wyoming, and BATE of Tennessee, members of the Senate Committee on Agriculture, for their able and successful opposition to the passage of the Grout bill during the closing session of the last Congress.

Resolved, That the executive committee of this association be instructed to forward copies of these resolutions to Congress and to take such action as it may think necessary and proper to oppose the passage of any bill containing such provisions as the so-called Grout bill.

Attest:

JOHN W. SPRINGER, President.
CHAS. F. MARTIN, Secretary.

Mr. TAWNEY. I ask for a vote on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment just reported.

The question was taken; and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. ALLEN of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the substitute offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken; and the substitute was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the substitute as amended.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLEN of Kentucky. I offer the following section.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. That the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized and required to cause a rigid sanitary inspection to be made from time to time, and at such times as he may deem necessary, of all factories and storehouses where butter is renovated; and all butter renovated at such places shall be carefully inspected in the same manner and to the same extent and purpose that meat products are now inspected. The quantity and quality of butter renovated shall be reported monthly. All renovated butter shall be designated as such by marks, brands, and labels, and the words "renovated butter" shall be printed on all packages thereof, in such manner as may be prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture, and shall be sold only as renovated butter. Any person violating the provisions of this section shall, on conviction thereof, be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall be fined not less than $50, nor more than $500 and imprisoned not less than one month nor more than six months.

The Secretary of Agriculture shall make all needful sanitary and other rules and regulations for carrying this section into effect, and no renovated butter shall be shipped or transported from one State to another, or to foreign countries, unless inspected as provided in this section.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that this amendment is not germane to this bill.

Mr. ALLEN of Kentucky. In what respect.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman on the point of order.

Mr. TAWNEY. This bill is, in fact, a revenue bill. It provides for a tax on oleomargarine. It is only an amendment to the existing law, relating exclusively to this subject of taxing and regulating the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine. It relates exclusively to the Internal-Revenue Department, under whose administration the law has been placed. It is a revenue measure in that sense, while the proposed amendment relates exclusively to the manufacture of another product free from all tax and places the manufacture of that product under an entirely different department of the Government.

Mr. ALLEN of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, the intent and the purpose of this legislation is to prevent fraud. That is the claim of gentlemen upon the other side. Now, if this legislation proposed in that amendment is to prevent fraud also in the sale of butter, I would like to know the reason why it is not germane to the subject. That is the whole object and purpose of it.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be recognized on that point of order; and in that connection I want to call the attention of the Chair to the title of this bill, so as to show that this amendment is in order under the title of the bill. If the Chair will turn to the amended title, at the end of the bill, he will find this language:

A bill to make oleomargarine and other—imitation of dairy products subject to the laws of the State or Territory, etc., and to put a tax upon it.

Other—

Now, then, if renovated process butter is not "other imitation of dairy products," I would like to know what would fall within that definition?

Mr. WANGER. Is it to make it subject to the laws of the State or Territory?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. The subject-matter is the same, if it is for the purpose of dealing with the imitation of dairy products. It is true it deals with it in a different manner, and if it reach and touch the subject-matter, I do not believe the manner in dealing with it cuts out the jurisdiction.

Mr. McCLEARY. It is not an imitation butter dairy product.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. It is an imitation dairy product, if there is anything about it but old rancid butter picked up, and the most of it oleomargarine.

Mr. McCLEARY. But it is butter.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. And furthermore, it is to amend an act defining butter. This title reads as I have said, and it furthermore reads "to amend an act defining butter." Now, if the Chair please, just one moment. After the language referring to other dairy products, in the fore part of the title, I call the Chair's attention to the further provision in the title, namely, "And to amend an act entitled 'An act defining butter,'" and the gentleman's amendment does not define butter.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of the opinion that it is germane, although it is questionable as to whether the jurisdiction is obtained over the proposition without any taxation being connected with it. But the question being one of imitation butter, the Chair is of opinion that this section is germane. As to its constitutionality, of course, the Chair can not pass upon that. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. ALLEN of Kentucky. I desire to be heard. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"] Why, gentlemen, are you so anxious to vote? I was assured during the remarks I made a few days since by the gentleman managing this bill that they did not propose that any amendment should come in save and except committee amendments. I say to my friend that he has not kept faith; that he has not followed the track that he laid out. This Committee of the Whole House this evening has added to this bill an amendment which was a broad plank of States' rights, and now I ask gentlemen to cross over on that plank, and let us add another amendment to the bill that will make it a better one than it now is.

Mr. Chairman, they say they want to prevent fraud; that that is the purpose of it; that they want to go into the hotel and the restaurant where men who get their meals are required to eat oleomargarine, a wholesome and healthy product. And now I will give you an opportunity to vote. If you want to protect the consumer, if you want to help the man who will eat a dangerous article of food, I assure you, gentlemen, you can do it by voting for this amendment, which brands and marks renovated butter as renovated butter.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. ALLEN of Kentucky. Certainly.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I want to say right here, I read to the House in the last Congress, and I have the authority of the chief of the dairy division of the Agricultural Department, who has to do with this renovated process butter, to say that it does more harm and is more unwholesome than oleomargarine.

Mr. ALLEN of Kentucky. I will read a part of a letter that was written by Mr. Henry E. Alvord, Chief of the Dairy Division of the Agricultural Department, to Dr. J. J. Baumann, 661 Jersey avenue, Jersey City, N. J. I will only read a part of it:

The chief objection to this renovated butter is that it is sold in large quantities under misrepresentation in place of fresh creamery butter, and at prices much above its actual value. Fraud upon purchasers and consumers is thus perpetrated, and this is the feature connected with the business which needs governmental interference and regulation.

Very respectfully, yours, HENRY E. ALVORD.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the propounders of this bill have relied upon the Agricultural Department as authority in propounding and proposing this character of legislation, and they are assured now by the Agricultural Department itself that this renovated butter is sold in fraud of right; that it is an injurious and dangerous product, which ought to be restricted, or at least ought to be required to be sold as renovated butter.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman answer this question: Will you vote for the bill with this amendment in it?

Mr. ALLEN of Kentucky. No, sir; I would not. Take the taxing power that will destroy the industry out of it and I will. But I do not propose to tax renovated butter out of existence. I am not proposing to tax the renovated butter, but I am proposing that it shall be branded, in order that a consumer may know what he is eating, and if you desire to prevent fraud you are estopped from voting against the amendment I offer.

[Mr. FINLEY addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I move that debate on the pending amendment be now closed.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. UNDERWOOD) there were—ayes 137, noes 70.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I ask for tellers, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN (after counting). Not a sufficient number, and tellers are refused. The ayes have it, and debate is closed on the pending amendment. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky.

The question on the amendment was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi) there were—ayes 129, noes 118.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. I demand tellers, Mr. Chairman.

Tellers were ordered; and the Chair appointed as tellers Mr. HENRY of Connecticut and Mr. ALLEN of Kentucky.

The question was again taken; and the tellers reported—ayes 127, noes 107.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BOUTELL. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The next section has not been read.

Mr. BOUTELL. This is an amendment to the bill preceding the section which the Clerk is about to read.

The CHAIRMAN. Is it offered as an additional section?

Mr. BOUTELL. This is a new section.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers a new section to the bill.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. I ask that the reading of the bill may be proceeded with.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will please be in order. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the bill by inserting the following as section 5:

"That the tax on all fish put up in imitation of sardines shall be 10 cents a box, to be levied and collected in accordance with the provisions of this bill."

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the amendment is not germane.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. I ask now that the Clerk proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. That wholesale dealers in oleomargarine shall keep such books and render such returns in relation thereto as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may, by regulation, require; and such books shall be open at all times to the inspection of any internal-revenue officer or agent. And any person who willfully violates any of the provisions of this section shall for each such offense be fined not less than $50 and not exceeding $500 and imprisoned not less than thirty days nor more than six months.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment proposed by the committee.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FLEMING. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment as a new section to the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by adding a new section as follows:

"The purpose of this bill is to prevent the practice of fraud, and not to raise revenue."

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that that is not legislation. [Laughter.]

Mr. FLEMING. Not that it is out of order?

Mr. GROSVENOR. That is a stump speech. [Laughter.]

Mr. FLEMING. The gentleman does not get the full force of it. Mr. Chairman, if there has been one thing more patent in this debate than another it is that the purpose of this bill, as claimed by its advocates, is to prevent the practice of fraud, and not to raise revenue. Why should we not tell the truth and allow this section to go in? I am frank to say that my purpose in putting it there is to give the Supreme Court an opportunity to knock out the entire bill, as I think they will do. All I want is to get the facts before the court.

The CHAIRMAN. There was no point of order raised.

Mr. TAWNEY. A point of order was made that the amendment was not germane.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order has not yet been made.

Mr. FLEMING. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] did not catch the delicate wit of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR], who said that the statement of fact in the amendment was not necessary; that it was perfectly patent that this was not a revenue bill and not a bona fide effort to protect the people against fraud. This amendment embodies simply a statement of fact—a matter that has been admitted by almost every man on the floor who has argued the bill.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. FLEMING. Yes.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Does not the gentleman think that in construing this statute the court would look at the statute itself and not at a supplemental declaration of this character?

Mr. FLEMING. Let me ask the gentleman, does he not think that if a declaration of this kind be made a part of the statute it makes clearer to the court what the real intent of the statute is, and gives the court the opportunity to apply the law and declare the whole bill unconstitutional.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I will as an answer to the gentleman's question ask him another question. [Laughter.] Does this proposition make any clearer to the gentleman himself what the purpose of the bill is than it would be without this provision?

Mr. FLEMING. I think not, but the judges of the Supreme Court not having had the opportunity to hear the numerous admissions on this floor in regard to the purpose of the bill, I want to put the admission in such a shape that the court will have it before their eyes as a part of this law, and consequently will declare the entire law unconstitutional.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I have not any doubt that they will do that in any event, for the fact is that never before was such a question as this presented to the Supreme Court of the United States.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. FLEMING, it was rejected, there being—ayes 71, noes 163.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to the bill the following section:
"SEC. 6. That this act shall take effect on the 1st day of July, 1902."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. I offer a further amendment, to perfect the title.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I submit that an amendment to the title is not in order at this stage.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. I ask to have the amendment read.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. But it is not in order until the consideration of the bill is completed. I desire to offer as an amendment an independent section.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HENRY] will withhold his amendment for the present; the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] desires to offer an amendment to the bill.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. As an independent section I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the bill by adding the following section:
"That upon all products manufactured by the United States Steel Corporation, a company organized under the laws of New Jersey, there be assessed and collected an internal-revenue tax of 10 per cent ad valorem, to be paid by said corporation. And that upon all other products manufactured in the United States by corporations known as trusts there shall be assessed and collected a tax of 5 per cent ad valorem, to be paid by the manufacturer.
"All laws for the assessment and collection of internal-revenue taxes shall apply to the provisions of this act."

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. I make the point of order that this amendment is not germane.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I want to say a word on the point of order, and only a word.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, the pending bill is claimed by its friends to be a revenue bill. In objecting to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. ALLEN] a little while ago, the gentleman who speaks for the bill [Mr. TAWNEY] said that this was a revenue bill, a bill designed for revenue purposes. As a bill for revenue purposes it taxes one industry for the benefit of another. It taxes one product of a manufactory for the benefit of another. The amendment I propose taxes the products or the manufactures of certain corporations. It imposes a revenue tax of 10 per cent ad valorem. The language of the amendment is:

That upon all products manufactured by the United States Steel Corporation, a company organized under the laws of New Jersey, there be assessed and collected a tax of 10 per cent ad valorem, to be paid by the said corporation, and that upon all other products manufactured in the United States by corporations known as trusts there shall be assessed and collected a tax of 5 per cent ad valorem, to be paid by the manufacturer.

Mr. GREEN of Pennsylvania. I wish to ask whether the Democratic leader of this House really believes this amendment if adopted would be germane?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Why, certainly; I am arguing that it is germane. It is germane because we have before us a revenue bill, and when you bring in a bill to raise revenue, a bill imposing a tax, as this bill proposes to do, on a certain product, I insist we can tax the product of another industry or manufacture, and that being so, the amendment is germane to the bill. You can not undertake to say, because a bill covers two subjects, that the latter would not be germane. Tax bills cover many subjects.

You bring a bill here taxing the product of one industry for revenue. That is what the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] says the pending bill is here for, and that, in effect, is what the committee has just decided, as I understand it. The bill is upheld because it is a bill raising revenue. The object of the bill is expressed on its face, but the committee, by voting down the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia, has decided that it is a revenue bill. The committee has proceeded all along upon the idea that it is a bill raising revenue; and without that how would it have any status in the House?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. In a moment. Originally, in 1886, when the first oleomargarine bill was considered in this House, it was then considered alone, as I remember it, upon the idea that it was a revenue-raising bill, as the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] remembers.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Yes.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. This bill enlarges or extends that act, and being a bill to raise revenue, we have the right, it seems to me, to offer this amendment. Now I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. GROSVENOR. What I want to ask the gentleman is, if this is a bill to raise revenue, how did it get to the Committee on Agriculture?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. How did the bill of 1886 get there?

Mr. GROSVENOR. It did not get there.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. It did get there, and the gentleman from Missouri, Mr. Hatch, chairman of the Agricultural Committee, had charge of it.

Mr. TAWNEY. It got there by a vote of the House in 1886.

Mr. McRAE. I should like to suggest to the gentleman that it went there by a vote of the House on the motion of Mr. Hatch.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. That may be.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sees no difficulty whatever in the proposition. This is a bill to regulate the interstate commerce in oleomargarine, and incidentally to tax the same. The question of taxing butter and regulating the butter and oleomargarine business has no connection with the proposition in the amendment now offered. It is therefore not germane. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill to the House.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I move to strike out all after the enacting clause, and substitute the following, which I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk began the reading of the proposed substitute, which is as follows:

Bill offered as a substitute for H. R. 9206 by the minority of the Committee on Agriculture of the House of Representatives.

A bill to amend sections 3 and 6 of an act entitled "An act defining butter, also imposing a tax upon and regulating the manufacture, sale, importation, and exportation of oleomargarine," approved August 2, 1886.

Be it enacted, etc., That sections 3 and 6 of an act entitled "An act defining butter, also imposing a tax upon and regulating the manufacture, sale, importation, and exportation of oleomargarine," approved August 2, 1886, be amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 3. That special tax on the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine shall be imposed as follows:

"Manufacturers of oleomargarine shall pay $600 per annum. Every person who manufactures oleomargarine for sale shall be deemed a manufacturer thereof.

"Wholesale dealers in oleomargarine shall pay $480 per annum. Every person who sells or offers for sale oleomargarine in quantities greater than 10 pounds at a time shall be deemed a wholesale dealer therein; but a manufacturer of oleomargarine who has given the required bond and paid the required special tax, and who sells oleomargarine of his own production only at the place of its manufacture in the original packages, to which the tax-paid stamps are affixed, shall not be required to pay the special tax of a wholesale dealer on account of such sales.

"Retail dealers in oleomargarine shall pay $48 per annum. Every person who sells or offers for sale oleomargarine in quantities not greater than 10 pounds at a time shall be regarded as a retail dealer therein. And sections 3232, 3233, 3234, 3235, 3236, 3237, 3238, 3239, 3240, 3241, and 3243 of the Revised Statutes of the United States are, so far as applicable, made to extend to and include and apply to the special taxes imposed by this section, and to the persons upon whom they are imposed: Provided, That in case any manufacturer of oleomargarine commenecs business subsequent to the 30th day of June in any year, the special tax shall be reckoned from the 1st day of July in that year, and shall be $500."

"SEC. 6. That all oleomargarine shall be put up by the manufacturer for sale in packages of 1 and 2 pounds, respectively, and in no other or larger or smaller package; and upon every print, brick, roll, or lump of oleomargarine, before being so put up for sale or removal from the factory, there shall be impressed by the manufacturer the word 'oleomargarine' in sunken letters, the size of which shall be prescribed by regulations made by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury; that every such print, brick, roll, or lump of oleomargarine shall first be wrapped with paper wrapper with the word 'oleomargarine' printed on the outside thereof in distinct letters, and said wrapper shall also bear the name of the manufacturer, and shall then be put up singly by the manufacturer thereof in such wooden or paper packages or in such wrappers, and marked, stamped, and branded with the word 'oleomargarine' printed thereon in distinct letters, and in such manner as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall prescribe, and the internal-revenue stamp shall be affixed so as to surround the outer wrapper of each 1 and 2 pound package: Provided, That any number of such original stamped packages may be put up by the manufacturer in crates or boxes, on the outside of which shall be marked the word 'oleomargarine,' with such other marks and brands as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall, by regulations approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, prescribe.

"Retail dealers in oleomargarine shall sell only the original package to which the tax-paid stamp is affixed, and shall sell only from the original crates or boxes in which they receive the pound or 2-pound prints, bricks, rolls, or lumps; which said crates or boxes shall be, at all times, so placed as to expose to the customer the mark or brand affixed thereon by the requirements of this act.

"Every person who knowingly sells or offers for sale, or delivers or offers to deliver, any oleomargarine otherwise than as provided by this act, or contrary to the regulations of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue made in pursuance hereof, or who packs in any package any oleomargarine in any manner contrary to law, or who shall sell or offer for sale, as butter, any oleomargarine, colored or uncolored, or who falsely brands any package or affixes a stamp on any package denoting a less amount of tax than that required by law, shall be fined for the first offense not less than $100 nor more than $500 and be imprisoned not less than thirty days nor more than six months, and for the second and every subsequent offense shall be fined not less than $200 nor more than $1,000 and be imprisoned not less than sixty days nor more than two years."

Mr. WADSWORTH (during the reading). I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the further reading of the substitute. It is printed in the views of the minority, and I can explain it in a minute or two.

The CHAIRMAN. If there is no objection, the further reading will be dispensed with.

There was no objection.

Mr. WADSWORTH. This bill, offered by the minority of the Committee on Agriculture, is printed in the last page of the report.

Mr. Chairman, by this bill, in the first place, we preserve all the license fees demanded by the law of 1886—$600 a year for the manufacturer, $480 a year for the wholesaler, and $48 a year for the retail dealer—and we preserve the 2 cents a pound tax. That part of the bill of 1886 is not altered in one iota.

Now, instead of allowing the manufacturer of oleomargarine to sell it in tubs of 10, 20, 30, 40, or 50 pounds—and if I recollect right there is no limit to the size of the tub in the majority bill—we forbid him to manufacture and sell it, except in two ways: In pound or 2-pound tablets, upon which he must indent the word "Oleomargarine" in letters the size and depth of which shall be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

Then he shall wrap it in a wrapper of tissue paper, upon which is printed the name of the manufacturer, the district, and again the word "Oleomargarine." As a second wrapper he must wrap it in cheese cloth or in wooden cloth, with the word "Oleomargarine" printed on it in this way [illustrating], and around the whole the revenue stamp, represented by that blue band. Then the retail dealer and the wholesale dealer are forbidden under severe penalties to sell it to the consumer in any form except as above provided for.

The minute he attempts, as has been suggested on this floor, to take 10 or 20 of these 1-pound packages, take off the wrappers, and throw them into a tub and mix them up, for every time that he breaks a package he violates the law by breaking that revenue stamp. If he takes 20 pounds and mixes them up, he commits 20 violations of the law, subjecting him to 20 penalties.

Now, the majority bill compels the sale of oleomargarine in tubs, containing any number of pounds——

Mr. DAHLE. We do not force it.

Mr. TAWNEY. In not less than 10-pound tubs.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Not less than 10 pounds. I thank the gentleman for correcting me.

Mr. Chairman, the law goes further. It demands and enforces that the manufacturer of oleomargarine shall ship it in boxes or crates marked with the name of the manufacturer and the word "oleomargarine" on each side, and then it goes further and makes a provision which I frankly confess I do not know whether we can enforce or not. It says that the retail dealer or the wholesale dealer must keep that box in evidence, and must sell the oleomargarine from that box.

Mr. GROSVENOR. That is not any different from the law in regard to kegs of beer, etc.

Mr. WADSWORTH. My point is simply this, that in the summer time this box probably would have to be kept in a refrigerator, and perhaps for that reason the dealer might not be able to strictly comply with the law.

Mr. Chairman, under the majority bill the product can be sold in 10, 20, 30, 40, and 50-pound tubs. I think this is a 10-pound tub. It goes into the hands of the wholesale or retail dealer, and the consumer goes in and asks for a pound of butter. The dealer goes down into the cellar and scoops up a pound of oleomargarine and sells it to the consumer as butter. Now, as fraud is sought to be stopped by both bills, I submit to the House would not the minority bill most nearly and effectually accomplish that purpose?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I ask that the gentleman may have five minutes more time.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I think the ocular demonstration I have made more effective than all the talk that could be made upon the subject.

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent is asked that the time of the gentleman be extended for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I want to ask the House in all fairness under which law is the fraud most difficult to perpetrate? The retail or wholesale dealer can sell 50 pounds to one consumer and he perpetrates but one violation of the law and is subject but to one fine. The man who sells but 1 pound or 2 pounds is subject to the same penalty. [Applause.] If the severity of the penalty imposed is going to prevent a fraud, then the minority bill will be the most effective, for it imposes, by long odds, the severest penalties. This is a matter which you can see with your own eyes.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. One thing I would like the gentleman to make plain to the House, and that is the very fact that if in the sale of one of these packages the revenue stamp is broken he is made amenable to the punishment under the substitute bill, regardless of how it happened.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I said a short time ago that the moment he breaks that stamp he violates the law and is subject to the penalty, and if he violates the law in breaking the stamp in two separate pound packages he violates the law twice, while if he breaks the stamp on this 50-pound package he violates it but once. I have explained the practical working of the bill by this ocular demonstration, and do not care to say anything more.

Mr. PEARRE. Then I would like to be recognized in my own right.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland is recognized.

[Mr. PEARRE addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

The CHAIRMAN. The debate is exhausted on the amendment.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I heard with absolute astonishment the beginning of the remarks of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. PEARRE]. He said he did not believe that this substitute bill was introduced here for the purpose of decreasing frauds in the oleomargarine business, and that they would not be decreased under it any more than they are under the present law. It may be possible that the substitute bill will not put an end to all frauds. It is hard for law to do that, but it is still harder for me to believe in the mental integrity of a man who would say that we have not introduced this bill bona fide for the purpose of shutting off frauds in the oleomargarine business.

That is not all. The gentleman wants to know who will shut them off. A little while ago the Republican party had a Secretary of the Treasury who was supposed to be an honest man. The gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] is supposed to be an honest man. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CONNELL] is supposed to be an honest man. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. ALLEN] is presumed to be one, but the gentleman from Maryland seems to imagine that these colleagues of his in the House will introduce a bill to cut off frauds in the oleomargarine business without the purpose of so doing, and I would like to read him how it would be cut off from the mouth of Secretary Gage himself when examined before the Senate committee. I read:

Mr. SPRINGER. The difficulties which have been called to the attention of the committee in regard to the selling of oleomargarine or butterine seem to relate to the fact that the retail dealer may break the original package and deal it out in smaller quantities to suit the desires of the purchaser, and in so doing he can sell oleomargarine or butterine to a consumer who presumes that he is buying butter.

Now, I desire to ask you whether it would be possible to make such rules and regulations (if the law so authorizes) requiring the selling of oleomargarine to the consumer by the agents of the manufacturer or the retail dealer in the original package, without breaking even the stamp itself around the original package, that the selling of oleomargarine for butter would be prevented, and it would have to be sold for what it really is?

Secretary GAGE. I think so. I have read the amendment or substitute bill recommended by the minority report of the House committee.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN. That is what is known as the Wadsworth bill?

Secretary GAGE. It provides a method of putting up oleomargarine in packages of 1 pound or not more than 2 pounds, I believe. Am I right?

Mr. SPRINGER. Yes, sir; that is right.

Secretary GAGE. They are, as I understand, required to be separate and distinct from each other, with a revenue stamp wound around them and sealed as effectively as a box of cigars is with its stamp. I can not imagine any reason why that would not be a very effective means of preventing the dealer from opening these packages and selling the product as butter. The abuse in that respect would be reduced to an infinitesimal amount. Of course a dealer could cut a package in two, obliterate the stamp, and sell half a pound at a time as butter.

Senator MONEY. That is possible with cigars and everything else, is it not?

Secretary GAGE. It is possible in every department, but the temptation would be so small, and the penalties so great, that my opinion is that such deception would scarcely be practiced at all.

Mr. SPRINGER. That is to say, if the dealer is required to sell it to the consumer in the original packages and is not allowed to break them?

Secretary GAGE. That is what I mean.

Mr. SPRINGER. It would almost do away with the possibility of fraud on the consumer?

Secretary GAGE. Yes, sir.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I said during the debate on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois to the first section of this bill that it was an attempt to do indirectly what the substitute known as the Wadsworth substitute proposed to do directly, and that was to break down the laws of thirty-two States of the Union that have prohibited the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine colored in imitation of butter.

I know the gentleman said it does not do anything of the sort. One supporter of the substitute said to me on this floor yesterday that all they wanted was to pass the substitute in order that they could sell oleomargarine in the States where it is now prohibited. I will tell the Committee of the Whole how they propose to accomplish it. This morning I cited you a decision of the supreme court of the State of Maryland rendered only last month, in which it was held that under the laws of that State the sale of oleomargarine in original packages manufactured and shipped into the State could not be prevented by an act of the legislature.

Now, observe the specific language of this substitute with reference to how these packages are to be packed. The goods are to be put up in original packages—1 or 2 pound packages; and the package is not to be changed from the time it leaves the factory to the time it reaches the consumer; and then the amendment very artfully says—

Provided, That any number of such original stamped packages may be put by the manufacturer in crates or boxes.

Now, if you want to break down the law of your respective States, so that oleomargarine may be admitted therein and sold, notwithstanding your State laws, then vote for this substitute and you will accomplish that result. The package as it leaves the factory, under this substitute, would be an original package, and under the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States and the decisions of the supreme courts of the States that original package could not be touched by the laws of any State until it reached the consumer.

I say that, whether this is the purpose of the chairman of the committee or not, I am confident that nine-tenths of the members of this House who are supporting this substitute do it advisedly, knowing that the laws of the States which have prohibited the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine colored to resemble butter will be entirely destroyed, so far as the sale of this product in their States as an article of interstate commerce is concerned; and it is for that reason that this legislation is sought.

But, Mr. Chairman, let us inquire more particularly into the provisions of this proposed substitute offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH]. It is important that every member of this House should clearly understand its provisions, because it is upon this substitute and its apparent fairness and its apparent attempt to prevent fraud that the oleomargarine manufacturers and their friends rely to defeat the passage of the anti-oleomargarine bill under consideration.

Wherein is this so-called Wadsworth substitute any improvement over the oleomargarine law of 1886, which law has proven so ineffectual in the matter of protecting the public against fraud in the sale of oleomargarine? The provisions which the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] so eloquently lauded as being perfect and most effectual in stamping out fraud in the sale of this product are contained in section 2, which reads as follows:

SEC. 2. That all oleomargarine shall be put up by the manufacturer for sale in packages of 1 and 2 pounds, respectively, and in no other or larger or smaller package; and upon every print, brick, roll, or lump of oleomargarine, before being so put up for sale or removal from the factory, there shall be impressed by the manufacturer the word "oleomargarine" in sunken letters, the size of which shall be prescribed by regulations made by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury; that every such print, brick, roll, or lump of oleomargarine shall first be wrapped with paper wrapper with the word "oleomargarine" printed thereon in distinct letters, and said wrapper shall also bear the name of the manufacturer, and shall then be put by the manufacturer thereof in such wooden or paper packages or in such wrappers and marked, stamped, and branded with the word 'Oleomargarine' printed thereon in distinct letters, and in such manner as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall prescribe, and the internal-revenue stamp shall be affixed so as to surround the outer wrapper of each 1 and 2 pound package: Provided, That any number of such original stamped packages may be put up by the manufacturer in crates or boxes, on the outside of which shall be marked the word 'Oleomargarine,' with such other marks and brands as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall by regulations approved by the Secretary of the Treasury prescribe.

"Retail dealers in oleomargarine shall sell only the original package to which the tax-paid stamp is affixed.

"Every person who knowingly sells or offers for sale, or delivers or offers to deliver, any oleomargarine otherwise than as provided by this act or contrary to the regulations of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue made in pursuance hereof, or who packs in any package any oleomargarine in any manner contrary to law, or who shall sell or offer for sale, as butter, any oleomargarine, colored or uncolored, or who falsely brands any package, or affixes a stamp on any package denoting a less amount of tax than that required by law, shall be fined for the first offense not less than one hundred nor more than five hundred dollars and be imprisoned not less than thirty days nor more than six months; and for the second and every subsequent offense shall be fined not less than two hundred nor more than one thousand dollars and be imprisoned not less than sixty days nor more than two years."

What are the provisions of the present law with respect to the sale of oleomargarine and the marking of packages, and also in respect to the penalties imposed for violations of the law and violations of the regulations prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue? Section 6 of the present law, relating to this branch of the subject, reads as follows:

SEC. 6. That all oleomargarine shall be packed by the manufacturer thereof in firkins, tubs, or other wooden packages not before used for that purpose, each containing not less than 10 pounds, and marked, stamped, and branded as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall prescribe; and all sales made by manufacturers of oleomargarine and wholesale dealers in oleomargarine shall be in original stamped packages. Retail dealers in oleomargarine must sell only from original stamped packages, in quantities not exceeding 10 pounds, and shall pack the oleomargarine sold by them in suitable wooden or paper packages, which shall be marked and branded as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall prescribe.

Every person who knowingly sells or offers for sale, or delivers or offers to deliver, any oleomargarine in any other form than in new wooden or paper packages as above described, or who packs in any package any oleomargarine in any manner contrary to law, or who falsely brands any package or affixes a stamp on any package denoting a less amount of tax than that required by law, shall be fined for each offense not more than $1,000, and be imprisoned not more than two years.

You will note that the present law provides for an extreme penalty of $1,000 fine and two years' imprisonment for each offense. The Wadsworth substitute, under guise of stricter provisions against fraud, limits this penalty to $500 fine and six months' imprisonment for the first offense.

Now, what does the present law provide in the shape of safeguards against fraud upon the consumer? That—

Retail dealers in oleomargarine must sell only from original stamped packages, in quantities not exceeding 10 pounds, and shall pack the oleomargarine sold by them in suitable wooden or paper packages, which shall be marked and branded as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall prescribe.

And what provisions for marking and branding has the Commissioner of Internal Revenue prescribed? First, that all retail packages of oleomargarine must be legibly stamped in plain Roman letters, not less than one-quarter inch in height; that the stamp must be in ink in marked contrast in color with the paper, and that these marks must be in plain sight to the purchaser when he is handed the package. The rulings of the Department, which under this act have the force of law, explicitly provide that concealed or illegible marks are not in compliance with the law, and that when so concealed or made illegible will be considered as not marked.

Yet, despite the fact that the penalties in the existing law are four times as severe for failing to stamp oleomargarine properly as the proposed Wadsworth substitute provides for the removal of the marks, it is known that these provisions are daily violated with impunity. In the big city of Chicago, where more than 2,000 retail dealers in oleomargarine do business, not one of them advertises oleomargarine for sale. Recently two members of the Committee on Agriculture went into 10 places, one after the other, and at every place were given oleomargarine either unstamped entirely or illegibly stamped, in response to requests for the best grade of creamery butter. This condition has been known to the internal-revenue officers at Chicago through the evidence introduced here the past two years, if in no other way, and we have no evidence that there has been any effort to remedy it.

And why? The collector of internal revenue at Chicago, as well as at every other point, knows that these dealers have paid their license and have the right, so far as the Government is concerned, to sell oleomargarine. They know that the oleomargarine these dealers are selling comes from manufacturers who have paid the 2 cents per pound tax thereon. They know that the failure of these dealers to stamp the retail packages properly involves no loss of revenue to the Government; revenue officials are guarding the Government's revenues, not acting as policemen to enforce police regulations. They are zealous and faithful when the protection of revenue is involved, but they do not get up much enthusiasm in prosecuting a dealer who pays his license, and the more he cheats the public into purchasing this revenue-paying article the more revenue he produces at the rate of 2 cents per pound.

Now, wherein does the Wadsworth substitute provide greater precautions than are at present provided?

If the dealer to-day fails to stamp a retail package "oleomargarine," he is liable to a fine of $1,000 and two years' imprisonment. Under the Wadsworth substitute, if he accomplishes the same thing through the removal of the stamp and marks of identification, he is liable only for a fine of from $100 to $500, and not less than thirty days and not more than six months' imprisonment for the first offense.

One is a crime of omission, with two years' imprisonment provided, the other a crime of commission, with but six months' imprisonment. Which is the better law?

Now, let us look a little into the safeguards thrown around this traffic by the majority bill. It provides a tax of 10 cents a pound when oleomargarine is made in imitation or color of butter, which it is illegal to sell in 32 States. This 10-cent tax is intended to bring the price of this illegal article up to a cost that will take from it the incentive to defraud, which is always present with the facilities afforded for its sale as butter. It reduces to one-fourth of a cent per pound the tax on the uncolored article, which can be sold legally in any State. Note the contrast.

The Wadsworth measure, in making 1 and 2 pound packages "original" packages, is a deep-laid plan to more completely tie the hands of the States and render their laws ineffective by intrenching an outlawed article behind the interstate-commerce law. It is drawn in the interest of the makers of oleomargarine to give this counterfeit a standing before the courts that it has never had before, that of giving the retailer a right he has never had before, the selling of an original package.

Suppose the Wadsworth substitute were adopted. Where are the colored goods to be sold? You can not legally sell them in Maine; that State has prohibited their sale since 1895. You can not lawfully sell them in New Hampshire; they can not be sold in Vermont; since 1891 Massachusetts has forbidden their sale, and while this law was vigorously fought up to the United States Supreme Court, in the case of Plumley v. People (U. S., 155) the law was upheld by this highest court in 1895, in which Mr. Justice Harlan, rendering the court's opinion, said:

It will be observed that the statute of Massachusetts, which is alleged to be repugnant to the commerce clause of the Constitution, does not prohibit the manufacture or sale of all oleomargarine, but only such as is colored in imitation of yellow butter, produced from pure, unadulterated milk, or cream of such milk. If free from coloration or ingredient "that causes it to look like butter," the right to sell it "in a separate and distinct form, and in such manner as will advise the consumer of its real character," is neither restricted or prohibited.

It appears in this case that oleomargarine in its natural condition is of "a light yellowish color," and that the article sold by the accused was artificially colored "in imitation of yellow butter." Now, the real object of coloring oleomargarine so as to make it look like genuine butter is that it may appear to be what it is not, and thus induce unwary purchasers who do not closely scrutinize the label upon the package in which it is contained to buy it as and for butter, produced from unadulterated milk, or cream from such milk.

The suggestion that oleomargarine is artificially colored so as to render it more palatable and attractive can only mean that customers are deluded by such coloration into believing that they are getting genuine butter. If anyone thinks that oleomargarine not artificially colored so as to cause it to look like butter is as palatable or as wholesome for purposes of food as pure butter, he is, as already observed, at liberty under the statute of Massachusetts to manufacture it in that State or to sell it there in such manner as to inform the customer of its real character. He is only forbidden to practice in such matters a fraud upon the general public.

The statute seeks to suppress false pretenses and to promote fair dealing in the sale of an article of food. It compels the sale of oleomargarine for what it really is by preventing its sale for what it is not. Can it be that the Constitution of the United States secures to anyone the privilege of manufacturing and selling an article of food in such manner as to induce the mass of people to believe that they are buying something which, in fact, is wholly different from that which is offered for sale? Does the freedom of commerce among the States demand a recognition of the right to practice a deception upon the public in the sale of any articles, even those that may have become the subject of trade in different parts of the country? * * *

You can not lawfully sell this counterfeit article in Connecticut, this State having forbidden it in 1895. New York outlawed this colored article as far back as 1887, and revised the law in 1893. The oleomargarine people thought this law to be unconstitutional, but in the case of People v. Arenburg (105 N. Y., 123, 129, and 130) the court said:

"Assuming, as is claimed, that butter made from animal fat or oil is as wholesome, nutritious, and suitable for food as dairy butter; that it is composed of the same elements and is substantially the same article, except as regards its origin, and that it is cheaper, and that it would be a violation of the constitutional rights and liberties of the people to prohibit them from manufacturing or dealing in it, for the mere purpose of protecting the producers of dairy butter against competition, yet it can not be claimed that the producers of butter made from animal fats or oils have any constitutional right to resort to devices for the purpose of making their product resemble in appearance the more expensive article known as dairy butter, or that it is beyond the power of the legislature to enact such laws as they may deem necessary to prevent the simulated article being put upon the market in such a form and manner as to be calculated to deceive.

"If it possesses," continued the court, "the merits that are claimed for it, and is innocuous, those making and dealing in it would be protected to the enjoyment of liberty in those respects, but they may legally be required to sell it for and as what it actually is and upon its own merits, and are not entitled to the benefits of any additional market value which may be imparted to it by resorting to artificial means to make it resemble dairy butter in appearance. It may be butter, but it is not butter made from cream, and the difference in cost or market value, if no other, would make it a fraud to pass off one article for the other."

Again: "The statutory prohibition is aimed at a designed and intentional imitation of dairy butter, in manufacturing the new product, and not at a resemblance in qualities inherent in the articles themselves and common to both." The court, therefore, held that artificial coloring of oleomargarine for the mere purpose of making it resemble dairy butter came within the statutory prohibition against imitation and "that such prohibition is within the power of the legislature, and rests upon the same principle which would sustain a prohibition of coloring winter dairy butter for the purpose of enhancing its market price by making it resemble summer dairy butter should the legislature deem such a prohibition necessary or expedient."

The goods can not be legally sold in Pennsylvania, the supreme court of that State having within the past eighteen months upheld a law forbidding traffic in colored oleomargarine. It can not be lawfully sold in Maryland. This law has a number of times been upheld by the higher courts of Maryland, and—

In McAllister v. State (72 Md., 390) the court of appeals of Maryland sustained the validity of a statute of that State declaring it unlawful to offer for sale as an article of food in imitation and semblance of natural butter. The object of the statute being to protect purchasers against fraud and deception, the power of the legislature, the court said, following the previous decision in Pierce v. State (63 Md., 596), was too plain to be questioned.

The sale of this article, which the Wadsworth substitute seeks to foster, is forbidden in New Jersey:

In Waterbury v. Newton (21 Vroom, 534), the New Jersey supreme court sustained the validity of an act that forbade the sale of oleomargarine colored with annato. In response to the suggestion that oleomargarine colored with annato was a wholesome article of food, the sale of which could not be prohibited, the court said:

"If the sole basis for this statute were the protection of the public health this objection would be pertinent and might require us to consider the delicate questions, whether and how far the judiciary can pass upon the adaptability of the means which the legislature has proposed for the accomplishment of its legitimate ends. But, as already intimated, this provision is not aimed at the protection of the public health. Its object is to secure to dairymen and to the public at large a fuller and fairer enjoyment of their property by excluding from the market a commodity prepared with a view to deceive those purchasing it. It is not pretended that annato has any other function in the manufacture of oleomargarine than to make it a counterfeit of butter, which is more generally esteemed and commands a higher price.

"That the legislature may repress such counterfeits does not admit, I think, of substantial question. Laws of like character have of late years been frequently assailed before the courts, but always without success." It was further held by the court that the statute of New Jersey was not repugnant to the clause of the Constitution empowering Congress to regulate commerce among the States, but that the package there in question, and which had been brought from Indiana, became upon its delivery in Jersey City subject to the laws of New Jersey relating generally to articles of that nature. (50 N. J. L., 535, 537.)

And I should have said that in pronouncing the New Hampshire law constitutional the supreme court of that State said:

So in State v. Marshall (64 N. H., 549, 551, 552), arising under a statute of New Hampshire relating to the sale of imitation butter, the court said:

"Butter is a necessary article of food of almost universal consumption, and if an article compounded from cheaper ingredients, which many people would not purchase or use if they knew what it was, can be made so closely to resemble butter that ordinary persons can not distinguish it from genuine butter, the liability to deception is such that protection of the public requires those dealing in the article in some way to designate its real character. * * *

"The prohibition of the statute being directed against imposition in selling or exposing for sale artificial compounds resembling butter in appearance and flavor, and liable to be mistaken for genuine butter, it is no defense that the article sold or exposed for sale is free from impurity and unwholesome ingredients, and healthful and nutritious as an article of food."

The State laws of Delaware forbid the sale of this colored compound. Virginia has legislated against it. Ohio has since 1894 excluded it so far as a State enactment could, and a year ago so flagrant became the violations of its laws and so defiant these manufacturers of counterfeit butter that the supreme court of the State annulled the charter of the Capital City Dairy Company upon quo warranto proceedings instigated by the attorney-general upon grounds of flagrant and repeated violations of the law. This company appealed to the Supreme Court of the United States, and on the 6th of last month Mr. Justice White handed down an opinion, in which is the following:

The supreme court of Ohio, however, having before it the evidence introduced upon the issues of fact made in the pleadings, held that oleomargarine was an article which might easily be manufactured so as to be hurtful, and thus result in fraud and injury to the public, and that the inhibition of the use of coloring matter in oleomargarine was a reasonable police regulation tending to insure the public against fraud and injury. The purpose of the legislation in permitting the use of harmless coloring matter in butter and requiring that oleomargarine be sold in its natural state was declared not to be for the purpose of discriminating in favor of butter, but to provide a ready means by which the public might know that an article offered for sale was butter and not oleomargarine.

It can not in reason be said, as a mere matter of judicial inference, that such regulations for such purpose were a mere arbitrary interference with the rights of property, denying the equal protection of the laws or that they amounted to a taking of property without due process of law. It follows that the legislature of Ohio had the lawful power to enact the regulations.

Kentucky does not permit the legal sale of this colored article. Michigan forbade it in an act passed three years ago, which through a technicality in passage was invalidated in the courts, but the law was promptly reenacted last winter.

Illinois, the home of oleomargarine, has forbidden this traffic, and while the law is rendered inoperative as the result of a decision of a lower court wherein three judges sat en banc and one upheld while two condemned the law, it has not gone to the supreme court. These colored goods can not legally be sold in Wisconsin, Minnesota, Iowa, Nebraska, North Dakota, South Dakota, Utah, Colorado, Oregon, Washington, California, and your boasted live-stock State of Montana established a precedent by passing a law in 1895 which reads:

Dealers must pay a license of 10 cents a pound on each pound sold.

Nor has this legislation been confined to the North, thus making it, as has been attempted to prove, a sectional issue. What do the laws of the State of our friend from Alabama provide?

It was approved in 1895 and provides that—

No article which is in imitation of pure yellow butter, and not made wholly from pure milk and cream, shall be manufactured, sold, or used in any public eating place, hospital, or penal institution.

And what is the law of the State from which comes our distinguished friend, the leader of the minority? The State of Tennessee provides that—

Any article which is in imitation of yellow butter and not made exclusively from pure milk or cream is prohibited.

This law was enacted seven years ago, and has not been repealed. In 1896 South Carolina passed a law forbidding the sale of oleomargarine colored in semblance of butter. Missouri has had such a law upon its statute books since 1895, and

In State v. Addington (77 Mo., 110, 118) the court, referring to a statute prohibiting the manufacture and sale of oleaginous substances or compounds of the same in imitation of dairy products, said:

"The central idea of the statute before us seems very manifest; it was, in our opinion, the prevention of facilities for selling or manufacturing a spurious article of butter resembling the genuine article so closely in its external appearance as to render it easy to deceive purchasers into buying that which they would not buy but for the deception.

"The history of legislation upon this subject, as well as the phraseology of the act itself, very strongly tend to confirm this view. If this was the purpose of the enactment now under discussion, we discover nothing in its provisions which enables us, in the light of the authorities, to say that the legislature, when passing the act, exceeded the power confided to that department of the government; and unless we can say this we can not hold the act as to be anything less than valid."

Just analyze this proposition. The people come to us for legislation to aid in upholding the laws of their States. The minority frames a bill, reported originally from a subcommittee, of which the admitted champion of the oleomargarine traffic was the chairman, proposing the giving of a stone where bread is asked, to further weaken State laws and give oleomargarine a fresh grip through lessening penalties, making smaller packages original packages, which retailers at $48 per year license can sell, instead of their sale being confined to wholesalers in lots of 10 pounds at a license of $480 per year. A law differing not at all from the already ineffectual statute on the books, except that it makes a crime of commission instead of omission; a law where there is no more incentive for the revenue department to enforce its provisions than in the present act.

What about incentive to punish violations of the 10-cent tax bill? The Internal-Revenue Department does not permit revenue to escape. What is the fate of the illicit manufacturer? One A. T. Dow, of Chicago, conducted an illicit establishment in an out-of-the-way place and, as is almost universally the case, the revenue officers in time detected it. What did the Government do to Dow? He was fined $10,000, to make up the revenue he had dodged, and sent to jail for six months.

An ignorant German woman in Story County, Iowa, mixed a few pounds of tallow in a 40-pound firkin of butter, becoming under the law a manufacturer of oleomargarine, the same as a retailer or restaurant or hotel keeper would under the provisions of House bill 9206, should he mix coloring matter with uncolored oleomargarine and dispose of it. What did the Internal-Revenue Department do to this farmer's wife? Went hundreds of miles, sought out the offender, and assessed her husband $600 manufacturers' license, as provided by the act of 1886, and in addition $300 penalty for engaging in the manufacture of oleomargarine without first taking out a license.

And in going to the train to look up this adulterator of 40 pounds of butter, which was the full amount shipped per week, these revenue officials passed at least thirty places in the city of Chicago where the regulations of the department were being violated hundreds of times every day, and the public defrauded, but no revenue lost to the Government because the goods had already paid the tax.

If we stop for a moment and consider the fact that the Internal Revenue Department of the Government is one of those arms of the public service charged with the function of collecting the revenue of the Government, and that it does not possess the necessary facilities for policing the manufacture and sale of any product beyond the enforcement of the revenue provisions of Federal laws, we will readily see why the present oleomargarine law has failed to accomplish some of its most important purposes. As the late Commissioner of Internal Revenue often said to me, "My department of the Government is a revenue-collecting department, not a police department. So that when the revenue is collected this department does not and can not see to the enforcement of those provisions of this law and the regulations intended to protect the public from fraud and deceit."

Does the Wadsworth substitute propose anything in the interest of the poor man, about whom its advocates pretend to be so concerned? Does it make it possible for the poor man to get the nourishing ingredients any cheaper than now? No. It provides no reduction in tax on the uncolored article; and why? Because the manufacturers of oleomargarine, who are the real advocates of this bill, do not want to encourage the sale of the uncolored article. While they pretend to encourage it, they really fear its advent into the field, knowing that their big profits are gone when the business is put on its own bottom and it is possible no more to palm off oleomargarine as butter. [Applause.]

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, I move that debate on the pending amendment be closed.

The motion was agreed to.

The question having been taken on the proposed substitute of Mr. WADSWORTH,

The CHAIRMAN. The noes appear to have it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. To save time, let us have tellers at once.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. WADSWORTH and Mr. HENRY of Connecticut were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 116, noes 146.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. I move that the committee now rise and report the bill as amended.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Connecticut sent up a few moments ago a proposed amendment to the title. If there be no objection, that amendment will now be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill to make oleomargarine and other imitation dairy products subject to the laws of any State or Territory or the District of Columbia into which they are transported, and to change the tax on oleomargarine, and to amend an act entitled 'An act defining butter, also imposing a tax upon and regulating the manufacture, sale, importation, and exportation of oleomargarine,' approved August 2, 1886."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. I now renew my motion that the committee rise and report the bill with the amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. LACEY reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 9206) to make oleomargarine and other imitation dairy products subject to the laws of the State or Territory into which they are transported and to change the tax on oleomargarine, and had directed him to report the same back with sundry amendments, and to recommend that the amendments be agreed to and the bill as amended passed.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded upon any amendment?

Mr. TAWNEY. I demand a separate vote on the second amendment—the one in reference to renovated butter.

The SPEAKER. If no other separate vote is demanded, the Chair will submit the remaining amendments in gross.

The question being taken, the amendments reported from the Committee of the Whole, with the exception of amendment numbered 2, were agreed to.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, the amendment on which I ask a separate vote is the amendment in relation to renovated butter.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the second amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all the proviso in section 1, in line 7, page 2, after the word "otherwise," and substitute the following:

"Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed to forbid any State to permit the manufacture or sale of oleomargarine in a manner consistent with the laws of said State, provided that it is manufactured and sold entirely within the State."

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, I move to reconsider the vote just taken. There was a misunderstanding.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Regular order!

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Connecticut moves to reconsider the vote last taken by the House.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I make the point of order that you are now considering the question of voting on amendment numbered

2, and that it has passed the point where we can reconsider whilst this motion is pending.

The SPEAKER. The motion to reconsider is always in order. The Chair overrules the point of order. The question is on the motion to reconsider.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to reconsider the vote by which the amendments were adopted in gross.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York moves to lay that motion on the table. That is in order.

The question being taken, there were on a division (demanded by Mr. UNDERWOOD)—ayes 140, noes 143.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The yeas and nays.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut moved that the House do now adjourn, but subsequently withdrew the motion.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I have demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were refused, 43 members (not a sufficient number) rising in support of the demand therefor.

Accordingly, the motion to lay on the table a motion to reconsider was rejected.

Mr. HAUGEN. Now, Mr. Speaker, I demand a separate vote on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Connecticut.

The SPEAKER. That is not the question. The question before the House is on the motion of the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HENRY] to reconsider the vote which was taken on the amendments in gross.

The question being taken on the motion to reconsider, on a division there were—ayes 148, noes 93.

So the motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. TAWNEY. Now, Mr.Speaker, I ask for a separate vote on the amendment relating to renovated butter, the number of which amendment I do not know. I ask the Clerk to specify it. It is a new section that was inserted in the bill on the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. ALLEN].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota demands a separate vote on the section which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. That the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized and required to cause a rigid sanitary inspection to be made from time to time, and at such times as he may deem necessary, of all factories and storehouses where butter is renovated; and all butter renovated at such places shall be carefully inspected in the same manner and to the same extent and purpose that meat products are now inspected. The quantity and quality of butter renovated shall be reported monthly. All renovated butter shall be designated as such by marks, brands, and labels, and the words "Renovated butter" shall be printed on all packages thereof in such manner as may be prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture, and shall be sold only as renovated butter. Any person violating the provisions of this section shall, on conviction thereof, be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall be fined not less than $50 nor more than $500, and imprisoned not less than one month nor more than six months.

The Secretary of Agriculture shall make all needful sanitary and other rules and regulations for carrying this section into effect. And no renovated butter shall be shipped or transported from one State to another, or to foreign countries, unless inspected as provided in this section.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi and Mr. WADSWORTH demanded the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi demands the yeas and nays.

Mr. FLEMING. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The Chair will first put the question. The question is on agreeing to the amendment just reported by the Clerk.

Mr. FLEMING. I desire to offer an amendment to that amendment. I understand the previous question has not been ordered. I desire to amend by adding at the end of that section the following words:

And the tax of 2 cents per pound shall be levied and collected upon each pound of renovated butter, under the terms and provisions of this bill.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

Mr. TAWNEY. I make the point of order that the amendment is not in order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the point of order. No previous question has been ordered or asked.

Mr. FLEMING. I have the floor, have I not, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has the floor. The Clerk will report the amendment first.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to the section the following words:

"And the tax of 2 cents per pound shall be levied and collected on each pound of renovated butter, according to the provisions and terms of this act."

Mr. FLEMING. Now, Mr. Speaker, unless we put some kind of a revenue tax on this, I see no way in which to enforce the provisions of the section.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Why, we inspect meat every day without it. This is an exact copy of the law under which we inspect meat. I suggest to the gentleman that he withdraw his motion.

Mr. FLEMING. I withdraw my amendment, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia withdraws his amendment.

Mr. PAYNE. I move the previous question on the bill and amendments to the final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Division! Mr. Speaker, what was the question? Gentlemen around me did not understand. They thought they were voting upon the amendment of the gentleman from Georgia, which I understand the gentleman has withdrawn.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia withdrew his amendment, and the question before the House is on agreeing to the amendment which has been read recently by the Clerk in full.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Very well.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I make the point of order, Mr. Speaker, that we had not voted on the amendments in gross, which is usually done before the vote is taken on an amendment on which a separate vote is demanded.

The SPEAKER. It may be done either way. The Chair is submitting the question on this amendment.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I call for a division on the last vote. We might as well have the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman calls for the yeas and nays.

The question was taken; and the yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment last reported by the Clerk.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Pending that motion, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York moves that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Several MEMBERS. Division!

The House divided; and there were—ayes 150, noes 106.

The SPEAKER. Pending the announcement, the Chair submits the following report of the Committee on Enrolled Bills:

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bill of the following title:

Mr. CLAY. I present a petition of Star Division, No. 323, Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, of Augusta, Ga., praying for the passage of the so-called Hoar anti-injunction bill, to limit the meaning of the word "conspiracy" and the use of restraining orders and injunctions in certain cases. I ask that the petition be printed in the RECORD without the signatures and that it lie on the table.

There being no objection, the petition was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas there is pending in the Senate of the United States, introduced by the Hon. GEORGE F. HOAR, Senator from the State of Massachusetts, a bill to limit the meaning of the word "conspiracy" and the use of "restraining orders and injunctions" in certain cases, commonly known as the "Hoar anti-injunction bill," the full text of which is as follows:

"Be it enacted, etc., That no agreement, combination, or contract by or between two or more persons to do or procure to be done, or not to do or procure to be done, any act in contemplation or furtherance of any trade dispute between employers and employees in the District of Columbia or in any Territory of the United States, or may be engaged in trade or commerce between the several States or between any Territory and another, or between any Territory or Territories and any State or States or the District of Columbia, or with foreign nations, or between the District of Columbia and any State or States or foreign nations, shall be deemed criminal, nor shall those engaged therein be indictable or otherwise punished for the crime of conspiracy if such act committed by one person would not be punishable as a crime, nor shall such agreement, combination, or contract be considered as in restraint of trade or commerce, nor shall any restraining order or injunction be issued with relation thereto. Nothing in this act shall exempt from punishment otherwise than as herein excepted any person guilty of conspiracy for which punishment is now provided in any act of Congress, but such act of Congress shall as to the agreements, combinations, and contracts hereinbefore referred to be construed as if this act were therein contained;" and

Whereas said bill is in the hands of the Senate Judiciary Committee, to which it was referred for consideration, and it appearing that Hon. A. O. BACON, who is a Senator from the State of Georgia, is a member of said committee:

Resolved, That he be respectfully requested and earnestly urged to give to said measure the most earnest attention and careful investigation and consideration and lend his vote and influence and great abilities in securing its passage.

Resolved further, That Senator A. S. CLAY and the Representatives of Georgia in the lower House of Congress be also requested to assist in having this measure of such vital importance enacted into a law.

Resolved further, That a copy of this preamble and these resolutions be immediately forwarded to our Senators and Representatives, respectively.

The foregoing resolutions were unanimously adopted at a meeting of Star Division, Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, No. 323, held at Augusta, Ga., February 9, 1902.

Mr. TURNER. Mr. President, I hold in my hand a memorial to Congress from the American Anti-Trust League of the United States. The memorial sets forth the existence in this country of certain trusts and combinations, the organization, system, and conduct of which are in conflict with the prohibitions of the act of Congress of July 2, 1900, known as the Sherman anti-trust law.

The memorial also represents that the fact of the existence of these organizations has been brought to the attention of the Attorney-General with the request that the machinery of the law provided by the act of Congress in question be set in motion for their destruction, but that thus far no such action has been taken, and that the league have been unable to secure any assurances that any such action will be taken in the future.

The memorial prays that Congress may investigate these matters and take such action as it may deem proper to secure the vindication of its own laws.

There are certain allegations in the memorial concerning the former business connections of the present Attorney-General and the motives which they think have operated to secure nonaction upon his part, concerning which I know nothing. There are also similar allegations concerning his predecessor in the office of Attorney-General.

In consenting to become the medium of presenting these grievances to the Senate I do not wish to be understood as holding any views whatever concerning those matters, but because of the gravity of the questions presented and the high character of this organization, which I understand to be strictly nonpartisan, I present the memorial, and for the same reasons I ask that it may be referred to the Judiciary Committee and printed in the RECORD as a part of our proceedings.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Washington asks unanimous consent that the memorial which he presents be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, it seems to me that if the Senator should ask that it be printed as a document it would be better. I have not often objected to matters going into the RECORD, and yet, inasmuch as the Senator admits that the memorial contains certain allegations against the present Attorney-General and the late Attorney-General, I do not think it ought to go into the RECORD. I shall object to it, Mr. President.

Mr. TURNER. I stated that the memorial makes certain allegations concerning the former business connections of the Attorney-General and concerning the motives which are supposed to have induced him to take nonaction. I do not think that it would subserve any good purpose to print it as a document. My object in asking for its insertion in the RECORD was that it might go to the country with the daily presentation of the doings of Congress, in order that the country might have information upon this subject. Of course, if the Senator from New Hampshire objects, I suppose that is the end of the matter.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The memorial will be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. HANSBROUGH presented a petition of Louis McLean Hamilton Post, No. 15, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of North Dakota, of Grafton, N. Dak., praying for the enactment of legislation authorizing the construction of war vessels in the navy-yards of the country; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. CLARK of Montana presented a petition of Henry W. Lawton Camp, No. 24, Spanish-American War Veterans, of Butte, Mont., praying for the enactment of legislation for the relief of volunteer officers and soldiers who served in the Philippine Islands beyond the period of their enlistment; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, it is probably within safe limits to say that during the past year the boll weevil destroyed 300,000 bales of cotton in Texas. The extent of its ravages in the past few years——

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator be kind enough to speak a little louder? He is not very well heard on this side of the Chamber.

Mr. CULBERSON. I stated that it would probably be within safe limits to say that the boll weevil during the past year destroyed 300,000 bales of cotton in Texas. On account of the ravages of this pest, grave apprehension is felt for the future as to the cultivation of cotton, particularly in the central, southeastern, and southwestern portions of our State.

It is, of course, impossible to say at this time what may be accomplished toward arresting the operations of this pest, but something, perhaps, is being done. In line with what is being done by the Department of Agriculture I present, at the request of the Representative from the Tenth district of Texas, a petition signed by a number of citizens of that district, asking relief from Congress on the subject, and in consequence of its importance I ask that it may be printed in the RECORD, without the signatures, because it is short and will not occupy a great deal of space.

There being no objection, the petition was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE STATE OF TEXAS, County of Jackson:

To the Congress of the United States:

We, the undersigned citizens of said county and State, respectfully ask the privilege of submitting for your consideration a question of vital importance to the cotton industry of the South, to wit:

We live and do business in a section of country where cotton, our staple crop, is stricken and ravaged by the Mexican cotton weevil. It is only those who live in the weevil-infested districts and have seen and experienced the disastrous effects of this pest upon the country who can fully appreciate the importance of finding a remedy for exterminating or controlling this enemy of cotton.

In 1896 the weevil first made its appearance in our country, but did little damage to the crop in that year. Up to that year our lands yielded variously from one-half to 1 bale of cotton per acre. In 1897 the weevil had so multiplied, developed in such force, that the same lands with the same cultivation required from 6 to 10 acres to produce 1 bale bale of cotton. Cold weather seems to have but little effect upon them, and in sections of heavy and frequent rainfall they increase and spread with greater rapidity.

The rapidity with which they are extending over the cotton belt of Texas is alarming, and we feel justified in predicting that unless they are checked or exterminated they will in a comparatively short period spread over the entire cotton belt of the United States, and in the event of that direful calamity we will see our own country importing instead of exporting cotton.

Aside from the value and importance of this crop to the cotton factories of the country and to the commerce of the United States, and aside from the value of the cotton-seed products, such as oil, meal, etc., the value of the crop as it is sold by the farmer entitles it to the highest consideration.

The Government's estimate for 1901 is 9,674,000 bales. If an average of $25 per bale was paid to the producer, $223,850,000 would be distributed among the masses in the cotton-producing area of the United States. The value of the seed product almost equals in value that of the staple itself.

Let the cotton industry be destroyed, or let the total yield be reduced even 50 per cent, and incalculable disaster must follow.

Having great confidence in the ability of the scientific force of the Agricultural Department of the United States to find us relief from this pest, we respectfully ask for the passage of the bill introduced in the House of Representatives by Hon. GEORGE F. BURGESS, seeking an appropriation of $100,000 to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to solve the problem of the Mexican weevil and other pests afflicting material interests in our section of the country.

Mr. HOAR. What is the number of copies for distribution by the Senate?

Mr. PLATT of New York. One thousand for the Senate and 2,000 for the House.

Mr. HOAR. It seems to me that that is an unusually small number. We shall have a great mass of applications for copies.

Mr. PLATT of New York. I would not care to increase the number.

Mr. HOAR. Very well, I will not insist on it.

The concurrent resolution was agreed to.

Mr. MCCUMBER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 577) granting an increase of pension to Joseph W. Burch, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

SPANISH TREATY CLAIMS COMMISSION.

Mr. CULLOM. I am directed by the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3654) to vest in the Spanish Treaty Claims Commission certain powers possessed by circuit and district courts of the United States, to report it favorably with a small amendment, and I ask that the bill be now considered. The members of the Spanish Treaty Claims Commission are very anxious for immediate legislation on the subject, and I think there will be no objection to the bill. I hope it will be put on its passage.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read in full to the Senate for its information.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Spanish Treaty Claims Commission, being a Commission created by an act entitled "An act to carry into effect the stipulations of article 7 of the treaty between the United States and Spain concluded on the 10th day of December, 1898," approved March 2, 1901, in addition to the powers vested in said Commission under and by virtue of said act, be, and is hereby, vested with the same powers now possessed by the circuit and district courts of the United States to compel the attendance and testimony of parties, claimants, and witnesses, to preserve order and to punish for contempt, and to compel the production of any books or papers deemed material to the consideration of any claim or matter pending before said Commission.

That said Spanish Treaty Claims Commission is also vested with all the powers now possessed by the circuit and district courts of the United States to take or procure testimony in foreign countries. The testimony of witnesses so taken or procured shall be given only before officials where the laws of the place of taking enforce the attendance of witnesses and provide for the punishment of persons who may be guilty of perjury before such officials.

That said Commission is hereby authorized to designate any suitable persons connected therewith to serve all process issued by said Commission in the District of Columbia, preserve order in the place of sitting, and execute the orders of the said Commission; and outside of the District of Columbia the writs of said Commission shall be executed by United States marshals or their deputies in their respective districts.

When testimony is to be taken before any commissioner appointed by said Commission within any district or Territory, the clerk of any court of the United States for such district or Territory shall, on application of either party, or of his agent, issue a subpœna for such witness, commanding him to appear and testify before the commissioner at a time and place stated in the subpœna; and if any witness, after being duly served with such subpœna, refuses or neglects to appear, or after appearing refuses to testify, not being privileged from giving testimony, and such refusal or neglect is proven to the satisfaction of any judge of the court whose clerk issues the subpœna, such judge may proceed to enforce obedience to the process, or punish the disobedience, as any court of the United States may proceed in case of disobedience to process of subpœna to testify issued by said court; and the production before such commisssoner of any paper or writing, written instrument, book, or other document, may also be required in the manner prescribed in section 869 of Revised Statutes of the United States.

Mr. HOAR. I think I should like to have that bill stand over. If I may be allowed before objecting to make one suggestion, I will state that it vests in a tribunal which is not a court the power to punish witnesses for contempt. That involves the power to sentence to imprisonment without limit absolutely, as I understand it, unless there be some statute regulation of that power which I do not recall now. It seems to me very questionable—I do not wish to express an opinion now—that we should inaugurate, or if we ever have inaugurated, that we should extend the policy of giving the power of commitment for contempt to tribunals which are not judicial tribunals within the constitutional sense. Therefore, I should like to have the matter stand over.

Mr. BATE. Mr. President, I rose to ask that the bill might go over, because from the reading I see how important and far-reaching it is. It proposes to give the Commission the power of a court to punish persons for contempt and other offenses. I also want to have the bill go over. It is one of that character of bills that should not be allowed to pass without critical examination and being understood.

Mr. CULLOM. I, of course, can not object to its going over, but I hope the Senators who object now will allow us to take it up for consideration as soon as possible, because the members of the Commission are very anxious to have some such bill passed in order to prosecute the work of the Commission.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. HOAR subsequently said: Mr. President, I have read carefully the bill for which the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM], from the Committee on Foreign Relations, a while ago asked present consideration, and I desire to withdraw my objection. The bill seems to be very carefully guarded and to pursue the course followed in other bills in regard to such matters.

Mr. BERRY. The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. BATE] also objected to the consideration of the bill. I do not now see him in his seat, and I am not willing to have the bill taken up in his absence. I shall, therefore, object to its consideration until the Senator from Tennessee comes in.

Mr. CULLOM. Let the bill lie over until the Senator from Tennessee comes in. I shall then ask that it be taken up.

ARIZONA EXHIBIT AT ST. LOUIS EXPOSITION.

Mr. BURNHAM. I am directed by the Select Committee on Industrial Expositions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3090) to approve and ratify an act of the legislative assembly of the Territory of Arizona, entitled "An act to provide for the collection, arrangement, and display of the products of the Territory of Arizona at the international exposition to be held in St. Louis in 1903," approved March 21, 1901, to report it with an amendment in the nature of a substitute.

Mr. VEST. I ask the Senate to consider the bill at this time. It is a mere formal matter.

The Secretary read the bill; and, by unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The amendment of the Select Committee on Industrial Expositions was to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That act numbered 86 of the legislative assembly of the Territory of Arizona, approved March 21, 1901, entitled "An act to provide for the collection, arrangement, and display of the products of the Territory of Arizona at the international exposition to be held at St. Louis in 1903," be, and the same hereby is, approved and ratified.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Why is it necessary that Congress should approve an act of the Territory of Arizona? Is it not the law that all acts of Territories are valid unless disapproved by Congress? I should like to have an explanation from the Senator.

Mr. VEST. There is a provision in the organic act of the Territory of Arizona which requires that when they appropriate money by an act of the Territorial legislature for other than the necessary routine expenses of the Territory Congress shall give its approval.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. That is all right.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read:

A bill to approve and ratify an act of the legislative assembly of the Territory of Arizona, entitled "An act to provide for the collection, arrangement and display of the products of the Territory of Arizona at the International Exposition to be held at St. Louis in 1903."

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed and bound in cloth 10,000 copies of Senate Report No. 166, Fifty-seventh Congress, first session, being the report on the improvement of the park system of the District of Columbia, 4,000 copies for the use of the Senate and 6,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives.

PHILIPPINE CUSTOMS TARIFF.

Mr. LODGE submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That there be printed for the use of the War Department 1,000 copies of Senate Document No. 171, Fifty-seventh Congress, first session, entitled "Correspondence relating to the Philippine customs tariff."

THE CENSUS OFFICE.

Mr. LODGE. I submit a resolution, for which I ask present consideration.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to send to the Senate a list of the persons employed at the present time in the Census Office, stating the nature of the duties performed and the date of appointment in each case.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to ask about how many employees there are in the Census Office.

Mr. LODGE. That is what I want to find out.

Mr. COCKRELL. The resolution simply calls for a list of the employees.

Mr. LODGE. It does, and when appointed.

Mr. COCKRELL. I did not understand that it said when appointed.

Mr. LODGE. The date of appointment. If desired, I will add the amount of the compensation.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the resolution be read again.

The Secretary again read the resolution.

Mr. GALLINGER. I suggest that the resolution shall call for the date of appointment and compensation in each case, if the Senator does not object.

Mr. LODGE. Certainly not. I want to make it as full as possible. I suggest that the resolution be modified by making it read "the date of appointment, the State whence appointed, and the amount of compensation."

Mr. GALLINGER. That will do.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be so modified.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is, to put in the date when appointed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. And the compensation.

Mr. COCKRELL. And the State from which the appointment was made and the compensation?

Mr. ALLISON. There may be some appointed from the District of Columbia, and it might be well to say "including the District of Columbia."

Mr. LODGE. Yes; "the place whence appointed," so as to include the District of Columbia.

Mr. GALLINGER. And the Territories?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the resolution as modified.

The Secretary read the resolution as modified, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to send to the Senate a list of the persons employed at the present time in the Census Office, stating the nature of the duties performed, and the date of appointment, place whence appointed, and amount of compensation in each case.

The resolution as modified was agreed to.

ADELBERT AMES.

Mr. PRITCHARD submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections:

Resolved by the Senate of the United States of America, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and hereby is, authorized and directed to pay to Adelbert Ames, formerly a Senator from the State of Mississippi, the sum of $4,876.71, due him as a Senator of the United States in the Forty-first Congress, from the 4th of March, 1869, to the 22d of February, 1870, to be paid from the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate.

SCHOOLS OF MINING AND METALLURGY.

Mr. SCOTT. I move that the bill (S. 634) to apply a portion of the proceeds of the sale of the public lands to the endowment, support, and maintenance of schools or departments of mining and metallurgy in the several States and Territories in connection with the colleges for the benefit of agriculture and the mechanic arts established in accordance with the provisions of an act of Congress approved July 2, 1862, be recommitted to the Committee on Mines and Mining.

The motion was agreed to.

PERMANENT CENSUS OFFICE.

Mr. QUARLES. I desire to give notice that to-morrow morning after the routine business I shall ask the Senate to take up for consideration during the morning hour the bill commonly known as the permanent census bill.

Mr. LODGE. I want to say, in regard to the notice just given by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. QUARLES], that I appreciate the importance of the bill which he desires to bring up. I know there is a great pressure to have it immediately acted upon, but it is a bill that is going to give rise to a good deal of debate and is going to consume, in my opinion, a great deal of time. I shall be forced, therefore, though very reluctantly, to oppose its being taken up at the expense of the unfinished business of the Senate.

I will also say to the Senator from Wisconsin that I have this morning asked for information in regard to that matter, which I think we ought to have furnished before we take up the bill for discussion.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, my attention was attracted by the suggestion made by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. QUARLES] to the fact that I reported a bill on the 16th of January, which has been four times favorably reported from the Committee on Commerce, and has twice passed the Senate without division, to promote the efficiency of the Revenue-Cutter Service. I am very desirous to have that bill considered at an early day, and will now say that if an opportunity presents on Friday at the conclusion of the morning business I shall ask the Senate to consider it. I think it will take but very little time.

Mr. QUARLES. As the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] has well observed, there is a very great pressure brought to bear upon me, and I presume upon other Senators, for the speedy consideration of the permanent census bill. I need not mention the reasons which prompt that pressure. They are obvious to every Senator.

Of course, when this matter is presented—and I shall try to present it at an early day to the Senate—the question will be, whether we shall not, after all, be expediting business on the whole by using the morning hour for other business and allowing the regular order of business to be taken up every afternoon at 2 o'clock. I think the experience we have had already in this discussion will demonstrate that we are making a mistake by confining the attention of the Senate to the regular order of business during the morning hour. We can transact here every morning a considerable amount of business and not materially interrupt or impede the general discussion. I shall hope that when the time comes the Senate may consider the proposition favorably.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. 946) to amend section 4400 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relative to a reciprocal recognition of boiler-inspection certificates between the several maritime nations having marine-inspection laws:

A bill (H. R. 9315) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1902, and for prior years, and for other purposes; and

A bill (H. R. 10076) to receive arrearages of taxes due the District of Columbia to July 1, 1900, at 6 per cent per annum, in lieu of penalties and costs.

PHILIPPINE TARIFF BILL.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of what is known as the Philippine tariff bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill named by him.

Mr. COCKRELL. Will not the Senator consent to run a half hour on the Calendar?

Mr. LODGE. I hope the Senator will not ask that now. I am very anxious to get on with the Philippine tariff bill. I yielded yesterday. I want to make progress with the bill and get it out of the way. We are going to take an hour on Friday for pension bills.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the Philippine tariff bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 5833) temporarily to provide revenue for the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. PATTERSON].

Mr. TELLER resumed the speech begun by him yesterday. After having spoken one hour and ten minutes—

Mr. MALLORY. Will the Senator from Colorado permit me to interrupt him for a moment?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. MALLORY. I desire to submit an amendment to the pending bill, and I ask that it be printed and lie on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PATTERSON in the chair). The amendment will be printed and lie on the table.

Mr. VEST. I ask for the reading of the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the amendment.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out all of section 3 and to insert in lieu thereof the following:

SEC. 3. That until July 1, 1903, the same tonnage taxes shall be levied, collected, and paid upon all foreign vessels coming into the United States from the Philippine Archipelago, and in addition to any tonnage dues or taxes now imposed by the government of the Philippine Islands upon all foreign vessels, except vessels of Spain owned by Spanish subjects engaged in traffic between the ports of the Philippine Archipelago, which are required by law to be levied and collected, and paid upon vessels coming into the United States from foreign countries: Provided, however, That until July 1, 1903, the provisions of law restricting to vessels of the United States the transportation of passengers and merchandise directly or indirectly from one port of the United States to another port of the United States shall not be applicable to foreign vessels engaging in trade between the Philippine Archipelago and the United States, or between ports in the Philippine Archipelago; and thereafter such provisions shall not apply to vessels of Spain owned by Spanish subjects entering the ports of the Philippine Islands until the expiration of the ten years mentioned in article 4 of the Treaty of Paris of December 10, 1898.

And further provided, That the Philippine Commission shall be authorized and empowered to issue licenses to all vessels or other craft now engaged in lighterage or other exclusively harbor business; but after the passage of this act such licenses, except as herein provided, shall be issued only to vessels or other craft built in the Philippine Islands, or in the United States and owned by citizens of the United States or by inhabitants of the Philippine Islands.

And it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury, as soon after the approval of this act as practicable, to make and promulgate such rules and regulations as may be necessary for the nationalization of all vessels built in the United States or in the Philippine Islands and owned, at the date of the approval of this act and thereafter, by inhabitants of said islands not subjects or citizens of any foreign nation; and no inhabitant of said Philippine Islands, not the subject or citizen of any foreign nation, possessed of the other qualifications required by existing law to act as an officer of a merchant vessel of the United States, shall be disqualified as an officer of any vessel nationalized in accordance with the provisions of this act by reason of not being a citizen of the United States.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, after I surrendered the floor yesterday there was some discussion which was foreshadowed by the question the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] had asked me about the sentiment of the people of the Philippine Islands. Before I take up any other proposition I want to say a few words on that point and also a few words about the statement made by the Senator from Connecticut in the course of a speech. I can not put my eye at the moment on the part of the Senator's speech to which I refer, but I recall it very well. He said that I had said that the United States is rightfully in the Philippine Islands. I have never said that, Mr. President. What I said was that by international law we were undoubtedly there under its terms.

I also said the other day that there was nobody who would contest our right there except the Filipinos. No nation in the world is going to raise any question with us if we take the entire sovereignty and insist on the right to subjugate and oppress the people of those islands who came to us by our cession from Spain. I have said, therefore, that our rights in the Philippines did not seem to me to be a very practical question in considering the proposed legislation.

I said a year ago in the Senate that it was apparent that the party in power intended to keep and hold those islands while that party remains in power, and that it was therefore certain that the islands would be held by the United States for the next four years, if not longer.

I find no trouble about our title now—none whatever. I know that it may be properly questioned, but it is not going to be questioned, except here and in the Philippine Islands. It has been determined, so far as it can be determined through the military branch of the Government, that we are in possession. As I recall it, Cicero once said in one of his orations that matters which had been settled in a military tribunal by a military adjudication would never be reversed in a court of law, and this proceeding is not likely to be reversed in a court of law. We know already that the courts have decided that the Philippines are a part of the United States. I do not mean to say, nor did I mean to say yesterday or the day before, that I agree with all the statements of the court, but I accept the court's conclusion. I would not be understood as saying that I consider it so binding upon me that I could not rightfully cast my vote against it if I had an opportunity and it were proper to do so.

OUR RIGHTS IN THE PHILIPPINES.

But recognizing the fact that the court apparently had to make an effort to reach the conclusion that it did reach, and which it reached by devious ways, I do not mean to use that word offensively, but to say that by a curious method, no two of the judges quite agreeing on all of the propositions, but a majority agreeing in the final conclusion, a decision was reached. I do not think, as I said a year ago, that morally we are rightfully in possession of those islands, because I do not myself believe—I want that to be distinctly understood—that when we took the sovereignty we took it with a right to hold it against the will of the nine or ten million people there.

But, more than that, I now say that I do not believe there is any court in the world now established, or any set of judges in the world now constituted, who would declare that those Filipinos who resist our domination are technically or actually guilty of treason. They have never owed any allegiance to us. They did owe allegiance to Spain, but Spain had no right to transfer that allegiance. She transferred by treaty her sovereignty over the soil, but she could not sell to us the 9,000,000 or 10,000,000 people there. They were resisting Spain at the very time that we made this treaty, were in arms against her, and were believed by most people to be capable of maintaining that position against Spain and of winning their independence if we should let them alone. Hence I say that I do not believe that they are technically guilty of treason. I do not feel toward them, and I do not believe the people of this country generally feel toward them, as we feel toward men who owe allegiance by birth, or by their voluntary submission to it, and afterwards decline to observe the duties of citizenship toward the Government under which they live.

As I have before said, every Senator who discusses this question, differing with the Administration or the dominant party, discusses it under embarrassment and in some respects under restraint, and subjects himself to criticism, and is likely to be put into a false position by impassioned appeals of Senators differing with him by eulogies of the flag, by a very beautiful piece of oratory where a Senator declares, for instance, that the flag always stands for all that is good and that opposition to whatever is being done under it must be opposition to that good. All that may be very pretty, but it is not argument.

Then, I am sorry to say that it seems to me that in this debate there is not that exactness and fairness that ought to characterize a debate in the Senate. I want to speak of that when the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] comes in, if he shall come in while I am speaking. If not, I shall have to speak of it in his absence.

DO THE FILIPINOS WANT US?

The issue last night raised by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] was whether the people in the Philippine Islands wanted our domination. Whenever the Senator can show they do want it, I will be with him; whenever he can prove here, with a fair degree of evidence, that three-fourths of the people there want it, I will be for compelling the other fourth of them to submit, because I know that the doctrine that the consent of the governed is necessary to proper government does not mean that every individual must indicate his consent. Whenever the majority of those people shall say they want the Government of the United States, then the others must submit to it.

But, Mr. President, is there any Senator on this floor who really believes that three-fourths of the people of those islands want us there? I am now speaking of three-fourths of the Christians, and do not include the heathen and wild men, who can not have a conception one way or the other, and we will let them go. Indeed, does anybody believe that any considerable number, much less three-fourths, of those people are anxious for our domination—that is, that they are so attached and devoted to the Government of the United States that they would not willingly see our soldiers vacate the garrisons and our ships sail out of their harbors? I do not think that anybody believes so except the Senator from Connecticut, and, knowing that Senator to be a lawyer of long experience, I am utterly unable to understand how he can believe it. But I must assume that he does; that he believes three-fourths of those people are panting and anxious and waiting for the other fourth to quit fighting, so that they may enter into the full joys of the autocratic government that you have established over there.

I can understand if you had a government there of the people and by the people, or if you were promising, as I have proposed in the amendment which I have offered to this bill, and which will be voted down I fear—if you were promising at some time, it might be in the dim and distant future, but at some time, to give those people a government of their own, I might understand, I say, that there might be hopeful men there who would be willing to wait and hope, and meantime accept our domination. But under the circumstances the statement that our sovereignty is now demanded taxes my credulity.

In the first place, there is a population over there absolutely unlike our own; there is a civilization there absolutely distinct from ours. It is true they are Christians; but, as one writer says of them, they are Christians with even more superstition than faith.

They are stanch adherents to one of the great Christian churches, and they are not savages, as I am going to show before I get through. They are civilized people, mainly—I am speaking now of the Christian people—and yet they never had a line of thought on any question that was in accordance with ours, except the single one of devotion to liberty, which somebody has said the Almighty had planted in the heart of every man to a greater or less degree, and probably in a lesser degree in the Asiatic mind than in that of some other races of the world. They have that idea in common with us. That is admitted by everybody. It is admitted by the Commission and it is contended by the three Filipino members of the Commission who tell us of the conditions there. They say they are devoted to liberty. They go on to explain why it is that the trouble arose, and they say very frankly that it was because they doubted our purpose, that they did not believe we were going to give them the liberty which they wanted, and that is the reason they were in hostile array against us.

We do not need any argument to show that these people wanted independence against Spain when it had control of the islands. They went to war. Indeed, they have always been at war with Spain. They were at war with Spain when we went there, and we encouraged them to continue the war with that country. They gathered an army, though it is said they had no government, and that there was not much I admit. But still there was an army there bigger than ours when we took Manila. There was an army there without a commissary; an army without any means of being clothed, and no compensation was being rendered to them. It was a volunteer army seeking freedom from Spanish domination and Spanish cruelties; and that fact of itself ought to show that they wanted freedom. And freedom, Mr. President, never existed in any country where the people who proposed to enjoy it were not the managers and controllers of their own affairs and their own destiny. You can not have freedom when somebody commands obedience.

Up to this hour there is not a Filipino alive who has any reason to say that we are to give those people a free government, unless he may have heard that declaration here in an unofficial manner. The Government of the United States has absolutely declined during three straight years and a few days more now of war to say to those people that even in the distant future we will give them a government of their own. We have said to them, "When we can fit you for self-government, when we can educate you up to our ideals, then we will give you a government." Mr. President, to say that three-fourths of those people will welcome our domination under such circumstances is to say that they are unfit for government of any kind. But everybody knows that is not true.

COURTESY IN THE SENATE.

I do not want to say anything offensive in this debate if I can help it, and if I do so accidentally I suppose I shall have to take it back. I said the other day that every Senator on the other side of the Chamber knew a certain fact. Thereupon half a dozen Senators called me to order, when I was absolutely and strictly within parliamentary rules in making the statement. I singled out no Senator; but I was as much in order when I said that as if I had said that the Republican party, composed of six or seven million men, believe this or do not believe that, and I challenge the parliamentarians in this body to deny that I was in order. Not wishing to seem to be unfair, I took it back, and said "everybody ought to know," not because it was out of order, but I did not wish to offend anyone.

Mr. SPOONER. That was more polite.

Mr. TELLER. That might have been more polite, Mr. President, but not more parliamentary. It is a good deal more so than when Senators stand on the floor and charge us with treason, or even charge us with a less interest in public affairs than they claim to have.

I want to call the attention of the Senator from Connecticut to the colloquy between him and some other Senators last night.

Mr. CARMACK. I should like to ask the Senator what he would think if he finds it to be true that all the military officers have exactly the opposite opinion from the opinion held by the commissioners?

Now, what was the Senator's answer?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I have no evidence that all the military officers hold a different opinion.

The Senator was not asked that. He was asked what he would say if all the officers did say so, and he replied, "Well, I have no evidence that they did say so." The Senator is a lawyer, and he knows that does not answer the question. I want to ask him now what he would say if all the officers did say so? Suppose my premises are false, then what? The Senator can answer my question now, or he can answer it after I get through.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Mr. President, I do not know that I am called upon to answer a purely hypothetical question.

Mr. TELLER. No, it is not a hypothetical question, Mr. President. We assert that that is a fact. I assert here and now that every military officer, so far as I know, who has been in the Philippine Islands, or who is there now, is asserting that the condition is absolutely different from what it is asserted to be by the Philippine Commission. That is a question for proof, and the Senator——

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. TELLER. The Senator can bring the proper officers before him and find out, when I make that statement, whether or not it is true. It would not be belied or contradicted if he could find somebody who should come here from the islands and who, under the terrorism which prevails in Army circles, should say that he thought the people were different.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Colorado yield?

Mr. TELLER. In a moment.

What is the public sentiment of the commanding men of the Army? That is the question. I did not mean to put the Senator off, but I wanted to finish my sentence. If he desires to say anything, I will yield.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. If I deem it important, Mr. President, I shall reply to the Senator in the future.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, the Senator from Connecticut said:

I have no evidence that all the military officers hold a different opinion, and I do not believe it is true; but I think the Senator from Tennessee himself will scarcely go to the extent of trying to discredit in the United States Senate and before the American people the honesty, integrity, patriotism, and ability of Luke Wright, of Tennessee.

Nobody has attempted to discredit any man connected with the Commission; but who has the best opportunity to form opinions—the officers of the Army or the members of the Commission? That is the question, and it is not any answer at all to say, "Why, these are men of high character." We admit they are men of high character.

PRESENT CONDITIONS.

Here is another rather remarkable statement made by the Senator from Connecticut, and I do not know what it means:

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. We have some officers out there. We have Generals Chaffee and Hughes and Davis and Bell and Grant, and if those five officers, gallant and brave, could have stood in this Chamber last week and heard what Senators have said about the condition in the Philippine Islands, I think they could not have refrained from taking part in that debate themselves.

Now, does the Senator mean to say that all those men agree with the Commission? Does he say here or will he say, in view of General Chaffee's report (which I have never been able to get except that I have seen it in the newspapers, but I have no doubt the Senator can get it), that General Chaffee agrees with the Commission?

Mr. PROCTOR. Will the Senator from Colorado allow me?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. PROCTOR. I happen to have received this morning a letter from Manila. It is very short, merely a page or so, and I will read part of it.

Mr. TELLER. The Senator can read it all.

Mr. PROCTOR. I will read everything that concerns this matter. The letter is dated at the Headquarters Division of the Philippines, Manila, P. I., December 27, 1901.

The first page refers solely to some friends of mine who were traveling, and then the writer says:

I may say to you that I believe we are progressing fairly well in stamping out what remains of the insurrection in the Philippine Islands, and, without promising anything, I believe that we shall have the matter fairly settled in two or three months. If you note the map of the archipelago occasionally you might pay particular attention to the provinces of Batangas, Laguna, and Tayabas, in the island of Luzon. They are now the scene of what hostilities remain in this island, and military operations there are extremely active; so much so, in fact, that we hear things are getting very uncomfortable for the insurrectos themselves and for others who have by every means in their power—deception, money, and supplies—aided the parties conducting this guerrilla warfare. I think in a short time, Senator, they will get tired; it is certain they will get tired before I do. It is a good sign when men of influence, heretofore quietly resting on their oars, are stepping to the front and endeavoring to prevail on the leaders of the insurrection to give up.

In the island of Samar the insurrection is still on. The force is not large, but sufficiently so to keep up disquiet in that island. The island itself is an awful place, by nature, for campaigning; is a very difficult spot, indeed, for troops to operate in. A couple of hundred men at the present time are setting at defiance the best endeavors of about 3,000 of our troops. Of course, it is only on rare occasions that our soldiers find any of the hostile force, but we must occupy all the towns in order to prevent supplies getting to the enemy, if possible.

On the island of Mindoro there is also a small force, possibly 75 or 100 rifles, but I am not distressed over that island just yet. They will easily come into the fold when the other sections referred to have been restored to quiet.

From what I have stated, you can readily see that the territory mentioned is but a small part of the Philippine Archipelago. In nearly all the rest of it comparative quiet now prevails.

Wishing you, Senator, a happy New Year, believe me,

Yours, truly,

ADNA R. CHAFFEE.

Mr. HOAR. May I ask the Senator from Vermont one question? Does he understand the stamping out, to which his correspondent alludes, to be the equivalent exactly of reconciling a people to our rule?

Mr. PROCTOR. Stamping out what remains of the insurrection is his expression.

Mr. CARMACK. Will the Senator from Colorado allow me? I desire to understand one thing in the letter. The writer speaks of men of influence coming to the front and prevailing on the leaders of the insurrection to surrender. I understand that refers to the provinces of Batangas and Samar. I so understood from the reading of the letter.

Mr. ALLISON. Laguna is also mentioned.

Mr. PROCTOR. He was speaking of those provinces, but in that sentence he does not specifically confine it to them. It might fairly be interpreted as meaning the insurrection in those provinces.

Mr. CARMACK. If the Senator from Colorado will allow me, I wish to say that it is not at all surprising that men of influence in those particular provinces should be coming to the front to induce the leaders of the insurrection to surrender, because by the orders issued by General Bell and by General Smith, in those provinces, their subordinate officers are commanded to arrest all men of influence who do not prove their loyalty within a certain time by inducing some leaders of the insurrection to surrender, and if within ten days they can not accomplish that then they are to be deported from the island, their wives and children driven into the mountains, and their towns destroyed. So it is not at all surprising that some of them under that inducement should be acting as the letter indicates.

Mr. TELLER. I will come to what General Chaffee says before I get through. That is a letter which shows, I think, just what the condition there is. You may "stamp it out." I have not yet said you could not "stamp it out," but I do not believe you can keep it stamped out. We compelled by force of arms the Filipino army to disband. The War Department says—and if there is any question about it I will read the statement, although I suppose there will be none—that they did not disband because they were defeated. They did not come into conflict with us, so that we could defeat the whole army, but they disbanded because they thought it was a better way to conduct the war, and undoubtedly it was for them, making it more difficult for us. They pursued the course which has been wisely pursued for many thousands of years by other people when they are acting on the defensive. I do not suppose Fabius I was the first that ever practiced that system of military defense, although we have given it his name.

There has been some complaint—of which I shall speak before I get through—of the cruelties that are practiced. I have spoken of them once before, a year ago. They have been continued more or less ever since, and will be continued just as long as you have natives in your Army. The Senator from Connecticut continued:

But right here as I progress I wish to say that if we have been by force and wickedness disarming a people, and the evidence shows that in twelve months after disarmament there exists no latent hostility to the Government of the United States, but everywhere a desire to submit to its sovereignty and to come under the benificence of its sway, it is certainly evidence of very remarkable progress toward that condition of things which we all desire shall prevail in those islands.

If that desire for American domination does exist, it is remarkable. I would to God that it did exist. Nobody would be better pleased than I would to know that it existed. The question at issue is, Does it exist? The Senator assumes that it does. If that is true, if three-fourths of the people there are in full sympathy with us, anxious to recognize our sovereignty and obey our laws, there is not any reason in the world why we should not reduce our army to a very much smaller number than they talk about, and there is not any reason in the world why we should continue to practice those things which we have been practicing and which I say are contrary to the law of nations and the laws of war.

I doubt whether you can find anywhere in the annals of history anything quite equal to General Bell's order, of which my friend the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. CARMACK] has just spoken, when you consider the condition; when you consider that these are not and have not been our subjects; when you realize that to-day there is not a Filipino alive who can state what is his relation to this Government. You withhold from him citizenship; or if you have conferred it upon him, you have done it in such a way that he has no proof of it. He would have a very different relation and owe a different allegiance, under the law of nations, if he had been a citizen or even a subject of ours. He has been neither, unless you can buy allegiance when you buy territory.

I stated the other day, and I want to repeat it, for you can not repeat it too often, that under international law the people of a country which you subject by force of arms are entitled to the country in which they live, and are entitled to have the laws that existed there under the former government, or they are entitled to have laws made by the conqueror for them. You have not done either. You have ignored the laws there. You have not legislated for them, except in a way that, if they have any idea of liberty and law, must be very offensive to them. And your legislation is not only offensive to them, but it is offensive to the moral sense of every man on the face of the earth who has any knowledge of the rights of man. If you have three-fourths of them, then your statutes are still more infamous, and the conduct of the Army to them in many respects has been more infamous than we had supposed.

I do not intend to waste any time over the eloquent words of the Senator from Connecticut, in which he declared that—notwithstanding what the Senator from Colorado has said, notwithstanding the frequent remarks we hear on the other side that there is no moral obligation, no Christian duty resting upon us to do anything more in the Philippine Islands than to return from them, I do think that we are under the obligation and direction of a higher power with reference to our duty in the Philippine Islands.

If I believed that to be true, I should still say that Providence could not sanction the methods we are pursuing, even to secure the ends that Providence had declared we should secure.

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. TELLER. Oh, certainly.

Mr. SPOONER. Has the Government of the United States done anything in the Philippine Archipelago which meets the approval of the Senator or which he regards as right or beneficent?

Mr. TELLER. That question it is hardly proper for the Senator to ask.

Mr. SPOONER. I have listened to the Senator and I have not in his speech discovered an opinion upon his part that anything that has been done over there by the Government was right or beneficent, and I thought perhaps I was doing him injustice in my mind.

Mr. TELLER. I will try to make this speech from my standpoint. I am not the subject of catechism from the Senator from Wisconsin, who assumes now by his question that I am simply here as a fault-finder. Either he does not realize that I am here as an American Senator or he thinks I do not realize that fact.

We have done beneficent things there of which it is not necessary that I should now speak. We are accomplishing some things. We are attempting some things I do not believe we can accomplish, although the object and the purpose were beneficent and good. But I am here to complain of those things that I think we ought not to do. That question is another proof of what I stated a little while ago, of the embarrassment and limitations under which we must address the Senate and the country upon this question. If a Senator with whom I have associated so many years has so ill an opinion of me as to believe I am here simply to find fault because I do not happen to be in accord with the policy of this Government, I do not think he has thoroughly made my acquaintance, or else I do not know myself. I know that I have no desire to make any political capital out of this unfortunate position. I know, and my record in this body ought to satisfy the Senator from Wisconsin of it, that I follow what I believe to be my own conscience and judgment.

I have stood by his Administration when it was absolutely necessary that it should have my vote, not because I was a member of it, not because I was in sympathy with its general purposes and ends, not but that I believed that its domination over the country would in the end be hurtful—I am not now speaking of material interests—but because I believed it was right and just and proper that I should; because on more than one occasion I believed it was to the interest of the people of the United States that I should do so; and I have never, since I have been in the Senate, been afraid to differ from the political organization with which I was connected whenever in my judgment it was right and proper that I should do so.

I am not addressing the Senate as a fault-finder. I am speaking because I believe, in the first place, that the policy we are pursuing toward those people is a wicked and unfortunate policy; because I believe it is a policy that can not succeed; because I believe that if you want to hold the islands, it is a policy you ought to abandon. Mr. President, I hope I have not been led into saying anything I ought not to say. I may be a little too sensitive about those things.

THE PHILIPPINE TREASON CODE.

I was in hopes the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] would be here this morning. He is not. I have not before me the speech he made yesterday when he interrupted me, and I can speak only from memory, but if I do not do him justice I will be very glad if anybody will correct me.

The Senator called our attention to section 10, which he said was the code of Tennessee. Substantially that may be true, but he did not read all of the section of the Tennessee code. He did not read that part of it which provides substantially that no man shall be punished except by a jury of his countrymen. Can not he and can not the Senate see the difference between the case of men who are subject to the arbitrary control of a court and men who have the right, first, to be presented to a grand jury; secondly, to have a jury of their own peers, and, thirdly, to have a judge who knows the people and who is in sympathy with them.

To my surprise, the Senator from Ohio also read the ninth section—a question that I understand he, as well as the Senator from Connecticut, is willing to indorse and defend. I said yesterday that there was not, I thought, anywhere in the world a counterpart of that section. The Senator said it was the Maryland statute. I want to say, with the Maryland section before me, in the very document which the Senator had, and the Philippine section 9, that the very offensive portion, the most offensive portion, that which violates the rights of men more certainly than any other, is not in the Maryland provision at all. The Philippine statute first provides:

> All persons who shall meet together for the purpose of forming, or who shall form, any secret society, or who shall after the passage of this act continue membership in a society already formed having for its object, in whole or in part, the promotion of treason, rebellion, or sedition.

That portion might be fairly said to be a repetition of the Maryland act, although it is not entirely so. But the Philippine law continues:

> Or the promulgation of any political opinion or policy.

I repeat that that clause is not in the Maryland statute. It is not in any act that the Senator has brought here. In my judgment it is not in any act ever before written in the English language.

I said the only counterpart I knew of was in Mexico, but that was not a counterpart, for there the person complained of had to have arms in his hands and be in opposition to the Government. I am not going to spend much time on this point, for I know other Senators will discuss it fully and critically.

The Senator from Connecticut attempted to make some explanation of that provision, but his explanation was very lame; and it only shows that when a man is determined to sustain a bad cause, he will always make a bad argument.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator from Colorado allow me in this connection? I dislike very much to interrupt him, but I have not heard in the debate what seems to me a very important matter. I think the Senator, when I was out, alluded to it, but I will ask him a question on that point, as he has just spoken on the subject. I refer to the United States statute and the constitutional definition of treason. The Constitution of the United States provides that no person shall be convicted of treason without the testimony of two persons to the same overt act. That is not only a rule of evidence, it is a definition of the crime. Nobody can commit treason against the United States but by an overt act.

Now, the Philippine Commission in undertaking to copy it has provided for treason without that limitation anywhere, so that under its enactment a person may commit treason by words, by inciting other persons to do it, committing no overt act, and can be found guilty on the hearsay evidence of a single witness—that is, the evidence of the man who heard what he said. It seems to be that among all the gross, indefensible provisions of this code this is on the whole the worse.

I beg pardon of the Senator from Colorado, but I wish that that may go in connection with the statement he has just made.

Mr. TELLER. The Senator has no occasion to beg my pardon. I am glad to have him make the statement. He might even have gone further.

Section 10 is not quite so offensive as section 9, and it may have in some of the laws of the States a counterpart, in part at least, although it has not as a whole. That is a section which makes it a crime for the people of the islands—

> To advocate, orally or by writing or printing or like methods, the independence of the Philippine Islands or their separation from the United States, whether by peaceable or forcible means, or to print, publish, or circulate any handbill, newspaper, or other publication advocating such independence or separation.

I will leave that question. I have before me the United States act of 1862, passed with reference to the then existing war in the United States, when, as I said the other day, the passions of the people, North and South, were aroused to a degree perhaps never before witnessed in any community, and it is merciful compared with the most merciful part of this wonderful statute, so called, concerning sedition in the Philippine Islands. If any Senator wants to look at it, he will find that it was enacted on the 17th of July, 1862.

Mr. President, we are told now that there is a state of practical peace over in those islands, and that all we have got to do is to keep on a little longer, and, as General Chaffee says, they will stamp it out. Before I get through I will show how they are stamping it out.

EFFECT ON ORIENTAL TRADE.

The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] makes the whole matter turn upon the question of the elevation of that race and our submission to a duty imposed upon us by Deity that we can not avoid.

In 1900 there were the same prophecies made. We were told then that peace was practically secured in the Philippine Islands. I notice that in the address of Mr. LODGE, the permanent chairman of the Republican national convention held in Philadelphia in June, 1900, in speaking of this question, he said:

> It is for the American people to decide this question. Our position is plain. The restoration of peace and order, now so nearly reached, in the Philippines shall be completed. Civil government shall be established, and the people advanced as rapidly as possible along the road to entire freedom and to self-government under our flag.

I will not read all of it.

Mr. LODGE. I should be delighted to have the Senator read it all. I think it is pretty good reading.

Mr. TELLER. I have no objection to reading further.

Mr. LODGE. I did not mean that the Senator should read the whole speech.

Mr. BACON. You do not think it is all good, then?

Mr. TELLER. I desire to read another paragraph necessary to fairly state his ideas.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator is welcome to read any part of it. I was only joking.

Mr. TELLER. The chairman then goes on and says "we will not retreat." I do not know of anybody who has asked them to retreat or has asked the Government to retreat. The chairman then said:

We make no hypocritical pretense of being interested in the Philippines solely on account of others. While we regard the welfare of these people as a sacred trust, we regard the welfare of the American people first. We see our duty to ourselves as well as to others. We believe in trade expansion. By every legitimate means within the province of government and legislation we mean to stimulate the expansion of our trade and to open new markets. Greatest of all markets is China. Our trade there is growing by leaps and bounds. Manila, the prize of war, gives us inestimable advantages in developing that trade. To-day when our legations are in danger, when our missionaries are assailed and our consuls threatened, it is well, indeed, that we have ships in the bay of Manila and troops that we can send to protect our own.

Mr. President, I am willing to agree with the Senator that was one possible advantage we got out of this condition; but I am not willing to agree with the statement in the next sentence, which I want to read:

Manila is the corner stone of our Eastern policy, and the brilliant diplomacy of John Hay in securing from all nations a guaranty of our treaty rights and of the open door in China rests upon it.

That I do not believe, Mr. President. I do not believe our policy rests upon Manila. I do not believe that Manila will ever be a particularly advantageous port for us through which to secure the Asiatic trade. I wish to repeat that the advantage of holding Manila is that somebody else shall not have it to our detriment, and not that we can make it the basis for Asiatic trade.

I have in my hands here a speech made by Mr. HILL of Connecticut, a distinguished member of the House belonging to the political party which has control of the Government, published in the National Geographic Magazine, with reference to our trade with China, to which I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Massachusetts and to the attention of the Senate, because it accords exactly with my ideas about this matter, and I have not been a careless observer of affairs in the Asiatic world for the last twenty years. Mr. HILL had made a trip around the world, and these are his conclusions:

There is no sphere of influence for us there, and to look upon Manila as a base for Chinese trade is like chasing rainbows for a pot of gold, for commercial bases are not established 600 miles at sea and where storage and reshipment charges would be more than the direct freight to the destined market. The integrity of China can not be preserved by a protectorate of the powers, and if it could the people of this country would not permit our Government to be a partner in it. China must reform herself or go to pieces speedily.

My judgment is that her destiny is slow but sure absorption by Asiatic Russia, and that the world will be the gainer by the change.

I agree to the first proposition, that there is every probability that Asiatic Russia will absorb China, but I do not believe China will be the gainer, nor do I believe the world will be a gainer, although I think China will suffer less, practically, than we and the other peoples.

I do not know what the late treaty between Japan and England, by which it is said they have agreed to enter into an alliance to protect the autonomy of China and hold it, may result in, but I hope that the report that China's autonomy is to be maintained is true. I said in the fall of 1897, and a little later, in the first month of 1898, that that was a very desirable thing to secure, and that I believed it was the duty of Great Britain and the United States to say to Russia, "Hands off of China." But we did not do that and Russia has moved into Manchuria. No matter what may be said about its being a temporary lodgment, it is a permanent appropriation of that great section of the Chinese Empire, and it is to be held and controlled by Russia, and to be the vantage point from which she will sally out upon the balance of that great Empire, and I greatly fear she will dismember it in spite of the new alliance of Great Britain and Japan. That compact may have the effect of retarding it for a time, but I believe it is almost inevitable now that dismemberment will be the result. But this is somewhat foreign to the subject under discussion.

Mr. President, I wish to read another statement that the chairman of the conveution made in Philadelphia in 1900:

We take issue with the Democrats who would cast off the Philippines because the American people can not be trusted with them, and we declare that the American people can be trusted to deal justly, wisely, and generously with these distant islands and will lift them up to a higher prosperity, a broader freedom, and a nobler civilization than they have ever known. We have not failed elsewhere. We shall not fail here.

I would be delighted if I knew that that was a prophecy which would be fulfilled, but I do not see that the steps are being taken which it seems to me will bring about that desirable end. That, I want to say, is why I complain. I am in accord with that sentiment if it can be put into execution; I should like to see it done; but I know enough of the human race to know that these noble ends can only be accomplished with the consent and approval of the Philippine people themselves.

If you would put into this proposed statute the amendments which I offered the other day and modify and change them, if you think they are too drastic or not sufficiently elastic, and with those provisions in the bill send it over to them, I believe you would take a great step in the direction of the aspirations of the chairman of the Republican national convention as he uttered them in 1900 at the convention in Philadelphia. I am sorry the statement the Senator made as chairman of his party's convention, when he said peace was practically accomplished, has not been borne out by the facts.

THE SPANISH WAR.

I have been reading from the Republican campaign book of 1900, and while I have the book in my hands I wish to turn to the Republican platform of 1900. It is in some respects a statement of facts, not of principles, and here is one of its statements:

Its armies were in the field, and the quick and signal triumph of its forces on land and sea bore equal tribute to the courage of American soldiers and sailors and to the skill and foresight of Republican statesmanship.

That assertion hardly comports with the declaration in another place which was made the other day, that the Democratic party forced the Administration into that war. I do not agree with that statement myself, for I do not believe the Democratic party did force the Republican party into the war. We went to war because the American people were excited on the subject of Spain's treatment of the Cubans, and I should like to say now, although it may seem to be a little foreign to what I have been saying, that before we voted on the bill which brought war, and which everybody knew would bring war, I expressed my opinion on this floor that we might avoid war. Everything that has happened since has convinced me that if we had taken the right steps under Mr. Cleveland's Administration or under the Republican Administration and declared the belligerency of the Cuban people alone, without a recognition of the Republic, they would have taken care of the islands themselves.

Mr. President, if there has been any instance in our long history when we failed to do what we ought to have done, this is such an instance, and we are punished for not doing our duty. We are being punished for a failure to do our duty in 1896, 1897, and the early portion of 1898.

I have not finished reading from the platform. Here is another extract:

To ten millions of the human race there was given "a new birth of freedom," and to the American people a new and noble responsibility.

It looked, I suppose, to the American people that that was a feat, and if we had accomplished it, it certainly would have been a great thing, and would have commended this party to the public confidence and support. But, unfortunately, it was not true. It is true that the American people had assumed a new responsibility. It may be a noble responsibility. That would depend exactly upon how we execute that responsibility. If we execute it in righteousness and justice, it will be all right. If we do not, it will be disastrous to us.

I now turn to another prophecy:

Now for the Philippines. The insurrection still goes on because the allies in this country of the bloody insurrectionary oligarchy in Luzon have taught their foolish dupes to believe that Democratic success at the polls next November means the abandonment of the islands to the savages, who would scramble for the bloody plunder until some other strong civilized nation came in to do the work that we would have shown ourselves unfit to perform. Our success in November means peace in the islands. The success of our opponents means an indefinite prolongation of the present bloody struggle.

That is from the speech of Hon. Theodore Roosevelt, who seconded the nomination of McKinley in the Philadelphia convention.

Now let me read what the distinguished Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] said in his address in that gathering. Remember at that time we were being told that the war was practically over, as we are now told that it is over. He said:

In one hundred days we drove Spain from the Western Hemisphere, girdled the earth with our acquisitions, and filled the world with the splendor of our power.

Mr. President, that is oratory.

The Senator continues:

In consequence the American name has a greater significance now. Our flag has a new glory. It not only symbolizes human liberty and political equality at home, but it means freedom and independence for the long-suffering patriots of Cuba, and complete protection, education, enlightenment, uplifting, and ultimate local self-government and the enjoyment of all the blessings of liberty to the millions of Porto Rico and the Philippines. What we have so gloriously done for ourselves we propose most generously to do for them.

There are some other things in the address of the Senator from Ohio that might be read, because they were very good, but the trouble with the whole of it was that the premises were false and the conclusions therefore erroneous. There was no condition there that justified the statement, in the first place, made in the platform that we had lifted 10,000,000 people from slavery to freedom.

THE PHILIPPINE PEOPLE.

The Philippine inhabitants are composed of Christians, heathens, and Mohammedans; of civilized, highly educated, and cultured, and those with practically no culture, scarcely above savagery and barbarism. And yet 6,000,000 of them, said Dean Worcester, are not only Christians, but, he said, you may fairly say that they are homogeneous. There is the foundation for a government. If there are 6,000,000 worshiping at the same altar, believing the same great moral truths, practically speaking the same language, though not all of them, but not more diversified than in many of the European countries, there is, I say, a homogeneity that can be made the basis of a government.

I know that it is in some places common to charge that these people are all simply savages. I read a speech, made not long ago in another place, where they were pronounced to be the lowest possible of all humanity. That there are some such on the islands there is not any doubt, but that there are any considerable number is denied by everybody who has been there, particularly by Professor Worcester and by Mr. Forman, an observing Englishman who spent eighteen years there. It is also contradicted by our knowledge acquired since February 6, 1898.

The other day we had quite a discussion here as to the lecture which Professor Schurman had delivered at Boston. Since that time he has done me the honor to send me the full text of his address, which I have found very interesting and very instructive. I wish to read portions of the lecture, composed largely of extracts which he quoted from the report which he assisted in making as one of the Philippine Commissioners. He says:

The first reform—that on which all others depend—is the admission of the Filipinos themselves to a participation in the functions and control of government.

Now, Mr. Schurman is not an anti-imperialist. He is not a Democrat; nor is he a demagogue. I believe that sentence commends itself to every intelligent, thinking man. Every man who has studied history must know that you can not deny to those people participation in the government and maintain it except by absolute force. I continue to quote from Mr. Schurman:

They have reached a state of progress and civilization, at least in Luzon and the Visayas—

And that will take more than half of them—

which entitles them to representative institutions; and the constitution of the Philippine republic was responsive to popular demand in providing for a representative legislature, which was designated an assembly. Had Spain granted the reiterated demand of Philippine reformers for representative institutions, it is highly probable that her flag would to-day be waving over the archipelago. And in this connection I must reiterate what I have elsewhere said of our own obligation to understand, appreciate, and sympathize with the ideas and sentiments of the Filipinos:

"The United State scan succeed in governing the Philippines only by understanding the character and circumstances of the people and realizing sympathetically their aspirations and ideals. A government to stand must be firmly rooted in the needs, interests, judgment, and devotion of the people, and this support is secured by the adaptation of government to the character and possibilities of the governed—what they are, what they have in them to become, what they want, and, not least, what they think they are entitled to have and enjoy."

Mr. President, I think that is excellently well put, and if it should subject him, if he had been in the Philippine Islands, to the penitentiary, or some other place, he certainly would have my sympathy. There are so many good things here that I should like to read them all, but I will not attempt it; it would make my remarks too long. This is what he stated to the audience:

I conceived an exceedingly high opinion of the educated Filipinos, who, however, form a small minority, possibly 10 per cent at most, of the people. And I recognize that the popular tendency to admire and almost worship their educated men rendered these favored individuals the natural leaders of the people.

When the masses of a community look up to the men of educasion, does it not indicate an aspiration to secure an education themselves?

To meet them in a sympathetic and appreciative spirit, to satisfy their natural aspirations and ambitions, and to enlist them actively in the support of American sovereignty seemed to me the most important object for American authorities in the Philippines.

I approve of that.

For myself, I can say with all sincerity that to have met and known these educated Filipinos, to have had social intercourse and official relations with them, I count one of the pleasantest and most interesting recollections in my life. I described to them and indicated the service they might render us in the establishment of civil government in the Philippines in the following terms:

Now, this comes from his report:

The educated Filipinos, though constituting a minority, are ar more numerous than is generally supposed, and are scattered all over the archipelago; and the Commission desires to bear the strongest testimony to the high range of their intelligence, and not only to their intellectual training, but also to their social refinement, as well as to the grace and charm of their personal character. These educated Filipinos, in a word, are the equals of the men one meets in similar vocations—law, medicine, business, etc.—in Europe or America. It is scarcely an exaggeration to say that these picked Filipinos will be of infinite value to the United States in the work of establishing and maintaining civil government throughout the archipelago. As leaders of the people, they must be the chief agents in securing their people's loyal obedience to the new government, to which, therefore, the dictates of policy, as well as plain common sense and justice, require us to secure their own cordial attachment. And it has been a leading motive with the Commission in devising a form of government for the Philippines to frame one which, to the utmost extent possible, shall satisfy the views and aspirations of educated Filipinos. They believe that the Territorial system herein set forth will accomplish that object.

Here is another extract:

In the Malay States Great Britain set up a protectorate because they had sultans and she had no sovereignty.

I do not know what Professor Schurman means by that statement, because Great Britain had asserted sovereignty over the Malays for many years. She had not actual control; she had been wise enough not to attempt to inaugurate a government there until Sir Andrew Clarke, I think about eighteen years ago, disregarding absolutely the instructions given him when he went there, organized a government of the Malay people themselves, and for eighteen years there has been none of the disturbance in the Malay Peninsula which occurred yearly before Sir Andrew went there. Great Britain holds merely a nominal control over the Malays, and she holds it without an army.

In Luzon and the Visayas there are no sultans, and the United States has sovereignty. The conclusion in favor of an American protectorate over the Christianized Philippines is certainly not derived by parity of reasoning.

I must, however, acknowledge that the policy of an American protectorate was very dear to the hearts of the insurgents.

When they talked about independence they meant local independence, and the principal men repeatedly declared that they had expected the United States to maintain a general protecting care over them. They realized that if we had withdrawn our army before the treaty was ratified it was likely that Germany, or Russia, or Japan, or some other power would have entered there, and their condition would probably have been but little, if any, better than it was under Spain.

But in citing the example of the federated Malay States they were playing with a two-edged weapon. For each of the Malayan States has become a veiled crowned colony in which, though everything is done in the name of the Sultan (who flies his own flag and enjoys increased income)— the British authorities have exclusive control of taxation and expenditures, give "advice" which the Sultan must adopt, and even push their dominion to the extent of deposing the Sultan and settling the succession, or ordaining a general manumission of slaves.

That is precisely what we have done in the Sulu Archipelago—

Mr. President, I want to say that that is not an accurate statement. I took some pains some time ago to look into that matter. While Great Britain does reserve to herself the right of intervention and interference, she has not intervened, and it has not been necessary for her to do so. The right of taxation is exercised by the Malays themselves, as well as the maintenance of order throughout the peninsula. This I will read, because it is explanatory of what Professor Schurman said to the Commission:

The idea of a protectorate entertained by the insurgent leaders, under which they should enjoy all the powers of an independent sovereign government, and the Americans should assume all obligations to foreign nations for their good use of those powers, would create an impossible situation for the United States. Internal dominion and external responsibility must go hand in hand. Under the chimerical scheme of protection cherished by Aguinaldo, if a foreigner lost his life or property through a miscarriage of justice in a Philippine court, or in consequence of a governor's failure to suppress a riot, then the United States would be responsible for indemnity to the foreigner's government, though without possessing the power of punishing the offenders, of preventing such maladministration, or of protecting itself against similar occurrences in the future.

That is not a correct statement of international law. We can create a government there that will be practically a State to all intents and purposes, except that it would not be entitled to representation in Congress. We are not responsible when foreigners are injured in a State. It is true that we have paid some bills in such cases in order to maintain good-fellowship, but international law never requires us to pay, as we did pay for the killing of Chinamen in Wyoming before it became a State and in Washington after it became a State.

I read a statement here last year that I can not turn to now without taking more time than I care to occupy. I read at length the statement of an Englishman, a consul in the Philippines for many years, in which he paid the very highest tribute to the Filipinos; and the Commission themselves pay a high tribute to those people.

You are not dealing with savages; you are dealing with a people who have some idea of their rights and some idea of the character of our Government. I want to read just a little from this report of the Federal party signed by three native members of the Commission:

The successes of the Union Army in the war convinced the Filipinos that there was a superior force which would annihilate them; but these successes could not prevent the people—bleeding and without strength—from tenaciously continuing a suicidal struggle to escape the new slavery which they so greatly feared, even though it were at the cost of death.

That extract does not indicate that they are savages, Mr. President. That is a tribute to those people, who are acting, of course, under a false impression and who are misinformed as to our purposes, for I do not charge that we intend to do the wicked things we are apparently doing over there.

WHAT WE SHOULD DO.

Somebody will tell me, when I express sympathy with those people and anxiety that they should have all the blessings of a free government, that I would give them the American Constitution and American law. Mr. President, I would proclaim to them in tones that the world would understand that they were to suffer nothing at our hands, that if for a time it did appear that we were not looking to their interests, yet the great American heart is with them, and that there is no purpose of subjugation or destruction.

Why not do it, Mr. President? Why not say it? Are we afraid? Do we distrust ourselves? If we mean to give those people a government of their own, in God's name let us say so now and stop this cruel war. And you can stop it, in my judgment. I believe we can send a commission there and arrange terms easily. I would not send members of the Senate or of the House, but I would call private citizens into the public service and send them over there. I believe I can name, and you can name, a half dozen men who would go over there, who, in my judgment, would bring peace out of disorder and do away with the confusion that reigns. Is it not worth the effort, Mr. President, or are we to do what Spain attempted to do in Cuba—subjugate the people, and, if you can not do that, kill them off? Let me read a little more of what is said about the Federal party in the petition of that party to Congress:

The Federal party is constantly laboring to show to the Filipino people that nothing will benefit them as much as an unconditional adoption of American civilization, in order that they may at the proper time constitute a State similar to others of the Union. This is the final purpose of its platform, which clearly explains the aspirations of the party, which are, briefly, as follows: A steadily increasing autonomy, the separation of church and state, representation of the Philippines in the Federal Congress, and the adoption of the American Constitution, culminating at last in the admission of the islands as one of the States of the Union.

I think their aspirations are impossible of realization. I know that there has been at least here very little, if any, encouragement of that idea. I myself have no desire to see those people incorporated into the Union as a State. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] a year ago declared in the most unequivocal terms that he did not so desire, and I presume he still does not. We do not want 10,000,000 people, or 8,000,000 people, or whatever the number may be, who are not homogenous, and who can not be harmonious with us. It would be infinitely better to say to them, "Form your own government; create your own establishment; take care of yourselves locally; maintain order, and we will see that the world does not disturb you." If anything is to be gained by holding them, we should gain it in that way. If commerce is our purpose, we can not gain it with a hostile people. Our imports from the islands have fallen off in the last year $1,000,000, while Great Britain has increased hers. The most desirable article of Philippine export, which is hemp, has gone largely to Great Britain, and we are getting very much less of it than we got last year. While our whole trade with the islands is $4,500,000, that of Great Britain is very nearly four times as great as that sum, amounting to seventeen millions and some hundreds of thousands of dollars.

Let me conclude what these people say:

The Filipino people is ardently desirous of education; it thirsts for justice, and it was only through the fear of a perpetuation of the era of abuse and oppression which characterized the old sovereignty that it was impelled to a tenacious resistance against the sovereignty of the United States. When the Government of the United States shall have organized public education, and when the organization of justice shall give complete satisfaction to all who demand the defense of their rights, then will it be possible to see the true sentiments that our people harbor to the new sovereignty.

Then they go on and say that they hope substantially to establish the English language as the language of the people. Mr. President, I have not any idea that the three native members of that Commission ever supposed that it was possible to establish in the Philippipe Islands the English language as the general language of those people. Such an effort would be futile. That is the Asiatic method of pleasing us, from whom they hold their positions and from whom they get their pay. It means nothing. You can not force upon those people an education. They may be anxious to acquire an education, and some of them may be anxious to adopt the tongue of their invaders and conquerors, but it is not in the nature of things that a whole people should adopt our language nor even our civilization, and any attempt to make them do so will be a failure.

We have 835 teachers now there teaching English. One-half of their time is devoted to instructing the Filipino teachers, so the superintendent says. I do not know how many Filipino teachers are there, but without being definite in the report, it is said there are several thousand. They have schools all over the islands and have had for some years. They have not been well supported nor well attended because the system of financial affairs has been such that there was not pay for the teachers under Spanish rule.

I always want to pay a tribute, Mr. President, where I think it is deserved, and I want to say I think it is one of the best things that this Administration has done, save one, which I meant to speak of when I was dealing with China a while ago, and I will speak of it now. I think the policy of furnishing the Filipinos with English teachers was most excellent, in that it must be a purely voluntary movement on their part, for no nation in the world has ever been willing to have forced on them the tongue of another nation. You can see that going on now in Finland and in Poland; you can see where the Germans are attempting to force the German language upon people, and they are being resisted very vigorously.

DIPLOMACY IN CHINA.

When I spoke of Manila and the fact that we did have some advantage by sending our ships there, I meant, had not my attention been distracted, to say one thing with reference to our foreign diplomacy with China. I do not know who is entitled to the credit; I do not know whether it is the late President of the United States or whether the policy emanated from the present Secretary of State, but I want to say for myself, as I said before, somewhat connected with this great problem, that the action of the Government of the United States in that connection is the most beneficial and the most statesmanlike that has occurred in our history for many years, and the world owes us an obligation because of our position on the Chinese question that it will be most difficult to discharge. I do not know, I repeat, whether our course was due to the late President or Mr. Hay, or to both; but they, or one of them, is entitled to the greatest possible credit for the great good which was accomplished. If there could be as much statesmanship and as much mercy and justice applied to this Philippine question, we would get out of it, and there would not be much trouble with it.

A PARALLEL CASE TO THAT OF THE PHILIPPINES.

General Chaffee in his report declares that there is no instance in history in which a whole people had been in opposition to a government, to the powers existing, as was the case in that country. He told us that those people would take the oath of allegiance to the United States, and the next day they would be found fighting with the Philippine forces. Mr. President, that was exactly what happened during the Revolutionary war in this country. It was stated in Parliament that four-fifths of all the Americans were in favor of British control and were likely to give up the contest. In connection with that debate, Mr. Wilkes, in a speech delivered in the House of Commons in November, 1777, said:

I am aware, sir, that it will be said the Americans will, in case of general success on your part, give up the contest and submit to the terms prescribed. The late experience of General Burgoyne is the fullest answer to this objection. He tells us that the very provincials who were most forward to profess themselves loyalists and take the oath of allegiance, submit to Lieutenant-Colonel Baum, were the first to fire on him. Baum was defeated and surrendered to these so-called loyalists.

If anyone has the curiosity to examine that speech he will find it in the Parliamentary History, volume 19, pages 420 and 421.

Wilkes then proceeds to defend the conduct of the provincials on the ground that their oaths were not given voluntarily, but were given under force. He then says:

Nor is it to be considered treachery. It was a compact not originating from free will or mutual consent, but founded mainly on force and dissolved in the same manner. (P. H., vol. 19, p. 421.)

So when General Chaffee complains of the people of Manila he but repeats history.

I have a letter here from Mr. Schurman, which he wrote a day or two after the controversy here in the Senate, which I desire to read:

BOSTON, MASS., January 21, 1902.

Editor of the Tribune:

The report that I have joined the anti-imperialists, and that at a dinner last night I said, "The Filipinos must have their independence," and that "McKinley so intended," is not correct. I have not joined the anti-imperialists. I was a guest of the Boston Reform Club last night, and after dinner spoke on the Philippine question. My speech was a part of a long address recently given before Cornell University, which is now in the press of Charles Scribner's Sons.

I have the book here now.

I must refer for details to that publication, which will appear in a few days. In the meantime I would say this to the Tribune: When President McKinley invited me to accept the presidency of the first Philippine Commission he said the sole object of taking the Philippines was the humanitarian one of carrying them the blessings of liberty. Our Commission reported that the intelligent Filipinos, though recognizing the need of temporary American intervention and tutelage, all desired and hoped for ultimate independence. I said last night that these two objects coincided. The Filipinos want ultimate independence, and our progressive grants of liberty and home rule must eventuate in independence, and it is American sentiment and Philippine sentiment that must finally settle the question.

JACOB GOULD SCHURMAN.

He also said in his Boston speech:

Both Americans and Filipinos desire the political enfranchisement of the Filipinos; there can be no issue between them except in regard to the time when an independent and sovereign Philippine republic should be established.

In the course of his speech he made this comment upon the American administration in the Philippines:

Those Americans, patriotic, but unversed in history, who desire to recreate the Filipinos in their own similitude will always be able to demonstrate that Oriental clay is still without shape and seemliness in the American potter's hand, and that, for a perfect product, a vessel of honor and glory, the American wheel must be kept going for years, or perhaps for generations, or possibly even for centuries. Heaven save the Filipinos from such an impertinent and meddlesome earthly creator. The Filipinos are to develop along their own racial lines, not along ours, and it is colossal conceit and impudence to disparage them because they are different from ourselves. Any decent kind of government of the Filipinos, by the Filipinos, is better than the best possible government of Filipinos by Americans.

He says further:

If the Filipinos are to learn to govern themselves in the manner of the really free nations, the sooner they get at it the better.

Mr. SPOONER. From whom is the Senator reading?

Mr. TELLER. I have been reading from Professor Schurman in his Boston address. I have here and am going to read a dispatch in relation to General Chaffee, dated Manila, January 28:

MANILA, January 28.

General Chaffee curtailed his trip and returned here this morning. He says he found the conditions satisfactory everywhere except at Samar, where continuous rain during the past two months has retarded the campaign, especially against such an elusive enemy.

The condition of Capt. David D. Porter's marines, who took part in the expedition into the interior of Samar, is much worse than previously described. They suffered fearful hardships, and were without food for several days. The natives who accompanied the marines claimed they were unable to distinguish the edible roots, which the marnes did not believe. The anger of the marines against the natives is intense. None of the latter returned with the marines.

The marines suffered so acutely from starvation that they ate raw the flesh of two dogs.

When Captain Porter and the first three of his men staggered into camp they were delirious, and difficulty was experienced in ascertaining the whereabouts of their companions.

Mr. President, there is also a report regarding some captures, which I do not care to insert in the RECORD. Some of those men never returned. I want also to read another dispatch from Manila of the same date, January 28:

MANILA, January 28.

The criticism of the Senate minority report on the Philippine tariff bill has been general, both in public and private, here, though many people admit the statements made in the report are correct.

General Wheaton's vigorous criticism referred entirely to Professor Schurman's speech at Boston, though he holds the professor in high personal esteem. The statement that a person who made such remarks here as those credited to the professor during his Boston speech would be sent to jail referred merely to the recent sedition law.

COMPLAINTS OF THE FILIPINOS.

Mr. President, I have several matters here which I propose to put in the RECORD without reading. The Filipinos recently addressed a petition to the President of the United States, in which they said:

The committee, having authority to act from the general in command of the Filipino forces, beg to submit for your earnest attention an appeal, the objects of which are to secure permanent peace in our country and the establishment of such relations between the two countries as shall meet the approval of the American Government and satisfy the legitimate aspirations of our people.

I shall insert the remainder of the appeal in my remarks without reading.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Owing to lack of knowledge of the real cause of opposition to American authority many conclusions have been reached which have since proved to be erroneous. Any one of these prophecies might have been fulfilled if the grounds upon which they were made had been true. But all these prophecies have failed because they did not take into account the intense and universal desire of our people for independent national life. A review of the present situation also will show that this aspiration has lost none of its force. All the reverses which our people have met, and all the rigors of a war in which, in many respects, mercy has not been conspicuous, have not lessened their determination to continue the defense, at whatever sacrifice. The hope that the American rule would find favor with our people, owing to the establishment of civil government, has not been realized. We have evidence that during the last three months discontent has been growing more intense.

In support of these statements we point to the pronounced recrudescence of the armed resistance to American control; to the fact that three provinces have been returned to military rule, and to the equally significant fact that of the three Filipino political parties in the Philippines two are working, by peaceful means, for ultimate independence, and the third for admission as States of the Union, all rejecting the colonial idea. But we wish to state distinctly that our war is waged in the spirit of the Declaration of Independence. Our objects are the same as those which animated the founders of the country with which we are now in conflict, and from whom we received moral "aid and comfort." And we are fortunate in finding our justification written upon the brightest pages of American history.

It is natural that there should be mutual distrust, but this distrust has been increased by the continued refusal of the United States to give assurance that the rights of the Filipino, as they understand them, will receive ultimate recognition. It is true that we have been promised many good things, but accompanying these promises there has been a demand for unconditional surrender, without any assurance that the one thing which we value most will ever be granted to us. When the bread of national life is asked for, it will not suffice to offer a stone, even though the stone be a diamond. In view, therefore, of the remoteness of a settlement of the conflict, and in view of the impending serious loss of life and property to both parties, we appeal for a reconsideration of the situation in the hope that a way may be found, mutually satisfactory, of ending this conflict, by giving such intimation to our countrymen as will assure them of the ultimate recognition of their legitimate rights.

Apart from contending claims, the chief difficulty to a settlement lies in the contention that negotiation with those who offer armed resistance to the authority of the United States would result in loss of prestige to America. The popular form of this contention is: "We must first teach these Filipinos to respect us and to submit to our authority." The "respect" of a people who have been battered into submission is a respect which ought to be regarded by every free American with pity, contempt, and scorn. Our real respect can be obtained by other and more dignified means. We do not require any further lesson to teach us the immeasurable superiority in power of a nation free for more than one hundred years, ten times as great in population, and incalculably greater in wealth. In our present condition our forces are limited in monetary resources, very inadequately armed, and imperfectly organized. We therefore consider it no discredit to acknowledge, and we hereby authoritatively acknowledge, that American power is supreme and that the prestige of American arms has been vindicated throughout this conflict.

A second difficulty is the assumption that, if internal control were given to the Filipinos, those who had supported American authority would be liable to maltreatment. Such an assumption is hardly in harmony with the belief, held by many Americans, that a majority of our people are in favor of American rule. A majority ought surely to be able to defend itself. But we contend that the supposition is groundless. A large proportion of those who openly support American authority do so only to avoid suspicion, and their heart is with their countrymen in arms. At the proper time satisfactory undertakings could be given of protection, and of amnesty to those who have taken up arms against our people for all acts done under American authority, America to have the right, as she has the means, to enforce such contracts.

A technical difficulty arises out of the fact that the Philippine government has never received recognition, and the consequent contention that there is no Philippine authority with which the American Government can negotiate, even if it had the desire. We claim to have authority on behalf of the Philippine people—authority which, having been properly conferred, is acknowledged and would be obeyed. But if there is technical validity in the above contention, our people would accept indirect assurance of the ultimate recognition of their rights, either by the proclamation to our people, by annunciation of policy to the American people, or by such other method as may be deemed proper. The object of this appeal would thus be achieved, without giving recognition to any real or so-called Philippine authority. As soon as peace has been established a constitutional convention could be convened similar to the one in Cuba, with which future relations could be held, and by which all differences could be adjusted.

Finally, with the earnest prayer that this appeal may meet a favorable response, we respectfully represent that no way can be found of putting an end to this unhappy conflict which does not include an adequate assurance to our people of some form of ultimate national life. We ask in all sincerity: Is not this aspiration both legitimate and laudable? And if so, what other course would you have a self-respecting people adopt? What greater proof of our sincerity and devotion could there be than the prolongation of resistance even after the complete supremacy of American arms has been established? The armies of America can march unresisted from end to end of our country, but wherever they are not present our people unite, drawn together by a common desire. The American amies can defeat our troops, but they can not defeat or destroy this desire, unless by the destruction of those who hold it—and such an act as this we can never believe the American people would knowingly authorize. And if it prove that yours should be the hand to liberate our people, a name, honored in your country, will be beloved and ever memorable in ours.

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator give the date of that?

Mr. TELLER. There is no date to it, but it is recent. It was promulgated this fall, probably two months ago; perhaps less than that.

THE WATER CURE.

I am going to read some part of this, although it is not pleasant reading. This is an extract from City and State, published in Philadelphia, by Herbert Welsh:

If anyone had said just previous to the Spanish-American war that torture was about to become an accepted means of producing a military or political result under our flag, he would have been laughed at as a fool or a madman; but it now looks very much as though what we state is a literal truth, without exaggeration, so far as our Philippine possessions are concerned. And we may say, moreover, that in these tropical islands torture of a very horrible description has been used under the authority of the United States flag as a means to produce a military or political result.

Either this is actually the case or else a large number of persons have entered into a conspiracy, through a period of two years, to defame the honor of the United States flag by trying to make it appear that torture has been so used. If we adopt this theory, we must also conclude that Mr. George Kennon, the distinguished Siberian investigator, a man of high character and standing, has been a party to this conspiracy or a victim of it, and that the New York "Outlook," one of the most influential and respectable of imperialist or expansion papers, has been an instrument for spreading the libel. Let us look at the facts. A year from last June the editor of City and State, while attending the arbitration conference at Lake Mohonk, had some conversation with Mr. Howard M. Jenkins, the editor of the Friends' Intelligencer, relative to a quotation that had appeared in that journal from an Omaha paper—a letter of a soldier in the Philippines—giving an account of what was called the water-cure torture. This, the writer said, was inflicted on Filipinos in order to make them reveal hidden guns. The account, republished in our issue of June 21, 1900, is as follows.

I presented perhaps not the same facts, but I have heretofore made a statement on this subject, and now, if there is any member of the Committee on the Philippines here he can say whether I am correct or not. But I understand that Commissioner Taft has stated before the committee that that torture has been inflicted. I do not know how much he said had been done, but that there have been instances of it he admitted.

Mr. CARMACK. I do not know that Governor Taft exactly admitted it. I am not quite sure that he exactly admitted that it had been done. But he did not deny it.

Mr. TELLER. I was told by a member of the committee that he had admitted it.

Mr. CARMACK. I do not know whether or not he admitted it in so many words.

Mr. TELLER. The account I wish to bring to the attention of the Senate is as follows:

A. F. Miller, a member of the Thirty-second United States Volunteers, writing from the Philippine Islands to the Omaha World, under date of March 5, describes the means used by the United States soldiers to compel captured Filipinos to give up their concealed arms. He says:

"We go out on a hike, catch a negro, and ask him if he has a gun. He will give us a polite bow and say, 'No sabe,' and then we take hold of him and give him the 'water cure,' after which he can get us two or three guns. Now, this is the way we give them the water cure: Lay them on their backs, a man standing on each hand and each foot, then put a round stick in the mouth and pour a pail of water in the mouth and nose, and if they don't give up pour in another pail. They swell up like toads. I'll tell you it is a terrible torture.

"We went up the bay the other day to get some robbers, and secured three. They would not tell where they had their guns. So we gave them the water cure (salt water), and two of them gave us their guns. We gave the other one so much water we nearly killed him, yet he would not tell. Guess he was an old head; they have lots of grit. They will stand and see you half kill one of their friends, and won't tell a thing. When it comes to their time to take the cure, they will take their clothes off, lie down, and take two or three pails of water before they will say a word. One of them said, 'You can kill me, but you can not make me tell.'"

The editor of the paper, who is a Republican, not a Democrat, says:

This seems to us incredible. Upon our return to Philadelphia, a few days later, a gentleman known to us stepped into our office and placed in our hands a long letter from another soldier in the Regular Army in the Philippines addressed to relatives in this city. It had every evidence of being sincere and genuine. This letter described events as they appeared to the writer, and was wholly without any tone of exaggeration or sensationalism. It described the "water-cure" torture just as did the letter quoted above. We give the following extract:

——, PHILIPPINE ISLANDS,
April 25, 1900.

MY DEAR ——: As this is the last day for some time that I will have a chance to write, I thought this would be a good time to begin one. We are still at it, and making preparations for the rainy season, which is expected about the middle or latter part of June. Any of the natives who have a gun can turn it in to us and get $30 Mexican (Mexican money) for it, so a good many are bought in that way. We have a company of Macabebe scouts here who go out with white troops, and if they can not get any guns voluntarily they proceed to give the fellow the water cure—i. e., they throw them on their backs, stick a gag in their mouths to keep it open and proceed to fill them with water until they can hold no more, then they get on them and by sudden pressure on the stomach and chest force the water out again. I guess it must cause excruciating agony, as they nearly always disclose where guns are hidden. Of course there is no pay for guns got in that manner. It is rather a harsh way for us to use them. I wonder how we would feel were we used in such a manner? The soldiers who look on think it is a huge joke.

These Macabebes are a people who have always been held in contempt and subjection by the Tagals. They are not very numerous and not the equal of the latter in anything except ferocity. Had the former known a year ago that they would take arms for us, I think they would have exterminated them.

That is, if the Filipinos had known it, they would have exterminated the Macabebes.

Mr. BATE. Who inflicted that punishment, and for what? I did not quite catch the statement.

Mr. TELLER. It is inflicted because they do not give up guns. The soldiers ask if they know where there are any guns hidden. They say no, and without waiting to know whether they do or not, they inflict the torture.

Mr. BATE. Who?

Mr. TELLER. The American soldiers.

Mr. BATE. On the Filipinos?

Mr. TELLER. On the Filipinos. I have a statement somewhere, although I do not know whether I have it here, that nearly one-half of all on whom this torture is inflicted die.

Between the two there is little to choose, except that the Macs. are more cowardly, and indulge their craven ferocity under the protection of Americans.

I will put in the remainder of that column, and then I wish to call attention to what Mr. Kennon says:

I saw two American prisoners who came in here a few days since; one is a Fourth Cavalry man, the other from the Twelfth Infantry. They were with General Macabolas' command. They say they got used pretty well, on the whole. They stole away in the night and arrived here after five days' travel. They looked pretty tough. They say that Macabolas has 4,000 men, all armed, with plenty of ammunition, and that they can get all the food and clothing they want from the people through whose districts they pass. He is presumably waiting for the rainy season to start in. It looks like a concerted plan on his part to make it warm for us. If there is fun, we will not be surprised. I am sorry to say that we will have to call for more troops.

Without giving the name of the writer, which we were not authorized to do, we published in City and State the part of this letter given above. We also sent it to the Springfield Republican, and it was published in that paper. The matter seemed to attract but little attention. One of our subscribers, however, wrote to us a letter, which we published, expressing incredulity. Later, during the same summer, the question was revived by the appearance of another letter from a soldier in the Philippines—John E. White, a sergeant in the Ninth United States Infantry—in the pages of the Atlanta Constitution, in which the water-cure torture was described much in the same way. This letter was as follows:

"These Macabebes have a novel treatment to make a prisoner 'habla.' They catch a Tagalo—their sworn enemies—and lay him flat on his back, put a club about 4 feet long in his mouth, and a man stands on each end of this club, which forces his mouth wide open. They then proceed to quench his thirst until his stomach looks like a hill of potatoes, and then they tap him gently(?) on the aforesaid stomach with the butt end of a gun. If the water does not spurt out of his mouth high enough to suit them they will playfully jump on him, which usually has the desired effect, and when they get through with him if there are any guns concealed or buried around there he will very promptly produce them. This may sound very shocking to you at home, but if you were here you would realize fully that extreme cases require extreme measures.

"We had been going on scouting parties nearly three months here day and night before a company of these Macabebes were sent here, and we never found a single gun. As soon as they came they went to every barrio where we had been and got from five to a dozen from every one of them by means of the hydraulic treatment. They had the Tagalos and Pampangos so stirred up that a great many of them brought in their guns without waiting to be told. We were surprised completely when the Macabebes found four guns in a house less than 100 yards from our outpost right here in the town."

Here is what Mr. Kennon says:

Later on Mr. George Kennon, the special investigator of the Outlook, wrote in the issue of that journal, March 9, 1901—

About a year ago—

on this subject as follows:

"For the practice of torture in the Philippines there is no excuse whatever, and yet that we have sanctioned, if not directly employed, the 'water torture,' as a means of extorting information from the natives seems certain.

"An officer of the Regular Army now serving in Luzon, from whose letters I have already made quotation, describes the 'water torture,' as practiced by Macabebe scouts in our service, as follows:

"'A company of Macabebes enter a town or barrio, catch some man—it matters not whom—ask him if he knows where there are any guns, and upon receiving a negative answer, five or six of them throw him down, one holds his head, while others have hold of an arm or a leg. They then proceed to give him the "water torture," which is the distension of the internal organs with water. After they are distended a cord is sometimes placed around the body and the water expelled. From what I have heard, it appears to be generally applied, and its use is not confined to one section. Although it results in the finding of a number of guns, it does us an infinite amount of harm. Nor are the Macabebes the only ones who use this method of obtaining information.

"'Personally, I have never seen this torture inflicted, nor have I ever knowingly allowed it; but I have seen a victim a few minutes afterwards, with his mouth bleeding where it had been cut by a bayonet used to hold the mouth open, and his face bruised whore he had been struck by the Macabebes. Add to this the expression of his face and his evident weakness from the torture, and you have a picture which, once seen, will not be forgotten. I am not chicken-hearted, but this policy hurts us. Summary executions are and will be necessary in a troubled country, and I have no objection to seeing that they are carried out, but I am not used to torture. The Spaniards used the torture of water throughout the islands as a means of obtaining information, but they used it sparingly and only when it appeared evident that the victim was culpable. Americans seldom do things by halves. We come here and announce our intention of freeing the people from three or four hundred years of oppression, and say 'We are strong, and powerful, and grand.' Then to resort to inquisitorial methods and use them without discrimination is unworthy of us, and will recoil on us as a nation.'

"It is painful and humiliating to have to confess that in some of our dealings with the Filipinos we seem to be following more or less closely the example of Spain. We have established a penal colony; we burn native villages near which there has been an ambush or an attack by insurgent guerrillas; we kill the wounded; we resort to torture as a means of obtaining information; and in private letters from two officers of the Regular Army in the Philippines I find the prediction that in certain provinces we shall probably have to resort to the method of reconcentration practiced by General Weyler in Cuba."

Coming down almost to date, we find the following testimony on the same subject in a letter from a correspondent of the Columbia (S. C.) State, written from Binan, P. I. This was quoted by the Springfield Republican December 24, 1901.

I need not say that the Springfield Republican is not a Democratic paper.

Mr. ALDRICH. What is it?

Mr. TELLER. I do not know that it is a Republican paper, but for at least forty years that I have been familiar with it it has been one of the leading journals of the United States. This is the letter:

The Americans are using the severest methods to put down the rebellion in Samar. General Smith has ordered everyone to come into the towns by a certain day, and all who are found in the country after then will be killed without question. In Mindoro, Samar, and Leyte the Americans are using fire and sword as the Spaniards used them in Cuba.

Mind you that is December 24, 1901.

This is part of a report from Mindoro: "Captain Bent applied the torch to the rebel quarter, went back to Monsolia, rounded up the horses and carabas and shot them, set fire to the town, watched it until it got well under way, marched back to the Monsol, did the same there, and then got on the Custer and sailed back. Like reports come every day from Samar—

That is where General Chaffee, in the letter read by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR], said the rebellion would be stamped out in a short time.

But no Americans over here blame the army for such measures, as these natives have no respect for anything short of torture. They are exceedingly cruel themselves, and they consider leniency a sign of weakness and fear.

The "water cure" is the favorite torture of the Americans to force the natives to give information concerning the insurrectos. The native is bound and gagged, and one soldier pours water and sand down his throat while another beats him on the stomach, which soon swells out like a drum. This torture is said to be horrible, and it generally makes the Filipino betray everything, but many of them are game to the last and carry their secret to the grave. A soldier who was with General Funston told me that he helped administer the "water cure" to 160 natives, all but 26 of whome died.

That statement is worse than I made it:

A soldier who was with General Funston told me that he helped administer the water cure to 160 natives, all but 26 of whom died.

Mr. President, if these horrible narrations are not true, the American Government owes it to itself to prove that they are not; and if they are not true the Administration can prove their inaccuracy. We are spending on those islands and on our Army not less than $250,000,000 a year, and while it may cost something to prove or disprove the accusation, we should be given the truth, even at the risk of adding somewhat more to the expense. I should be glad to know that it is a slander against the Army. But I am compelled to believe that after the attention of the country has been called to it for more than a year and no effort made to disprove it, that it is true.

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator permit me in this connection?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. BACON. I do not think the Senator properly guards his language in saying it is the work of the Army. I desire to say, from some little personal knowledge, that I do not think that is a proper charge, as the Senator unintentionally expresses it.

Mr. TELLER. I read the charge that a soldier under General Funston said——

Mr. BACON. The Senator will pardon me for a moment. He does not understand me. Conceding that everything that is charged is true, and that the occurrences are correctly narrated in the several articles and letters, I am quite sure that while an investigation may prove them to be true—and I do not wish to be understood as suggesting anything to the contrary—I am equally sure that it will be found that while the presence of the Army has given the opportunity to the vicious part of the Army for the perpetration of these atrocities, it is not the work of authorized persons.

Mr. TELLER. Oh, I do not suppose any order has been issued to that effect.

Mr. BACON. The Senator will not misunderstand me. As he knows, I am very much in sympathy with the contention which he makes, and I took the liberty of interrupting him for the purpose of making a statement with which I was quite sure he would agree; and the last statement he has made indicates that he does agree with the suggestion which I wished to make.

SAVAGES FOR SOLDIERS.

Mr. TELLER. I read the statement that a soldier accompanying one of our generals said he had assisted in applying the torture to 160 men, all but 26 of whom had died. I doubt whether General Funston himself would agree to that; but they send out a little corporal's guard somewhere, and they pick up what they call a negro, and they inflict the water torture on him. They do not, perhaps, go back and tell the officers that they did it, but what we are responsible for is the fact; otherwise we would have stopped it. And we are responsible for the Macabebes, who are our soldiers. They are under our pay. They have been enlisted under an act of Congress against which I voted, because I knew that we ought not to enlist that class of people.

Mr. CULBERSON. Bearing upon the question as to the truth or falsity of these charges, I will ask the Senator from Colorado to allow me to read a paragraph or so from the testimony of Governor Taft.

Mr. TELLER. Read it.

Mr. CULBERSON. On page 75 of the hearing Governor Taft said:

Governor TAFT. What I am trying to do is to state what seemed to us to be the explanation of these cruelties—that cruelties have been inflicted; that people have been shot when they ought not to have been; that there have been individual instances of water cure, that torture which, I believe, involves pouring water down the throat so that the man swells and gets the impression that he is going to be suffocated and then tells what he knows, which was a frequent treatment under the Spaniards, I am told—all these things are true.

At the bottom of page 75 we find this question asked by Senator PATTERSON and the answer of Governor Taft:

Senator PATTERSON. I do not think the charge of inflicting the water cure has been made against American soldiers as much as against the native troops who have been enlisted in the American Army, or as an appurtenance to the American Army. For instance, the Macabebes. Many letters have been published making statements of this kind, that Macabebes would be sent out for the purpose of securing the surrender of guns, and the persons would deny that they had any guns. Then the Macabebes would throw them upon the ground, one soldier on one hand and another on the other, secure their feet, pry open their mouths with a stick, and then pour buckets of water down their throats till they swelled up to an abnormal size, and then jumped upon their stomachs. It has been stated that invariably under that treatment guns were produced where there were no guns before; this with the knowledge of American officers, the Army getting the advantage of it in securing arms from natives, which they were seeking, without any serious reproof.

Governor TAFT. I have no doubt there were such instances—of course, a great many more than there ought to have been—but if the Senator will excuse me, dependence on private letters from private individuals as to what occurred is dependence on a very broken reed.

Mr. BACON. If the Senator from Colorado will pardon me for just one moment, I do not wish to be understood, by anything I may have said, as casting any doubt on the fact of the practice of these tortures. I have not a doubt of them. But I simply wished to say something which I was satisfied the Senator from Colorado himself would say: That while these acts were done by those who were under the general command of American officers, they were not, technically speaking, the acts of the Army.

Mr. TELLER. They are tolerated. I thought when the country's attention was called to the practice a year ago (it was about a year ago that I made some remarks and presented an array of evidence on that point) that it would be stopped. But I am satisfied from what I have read and what I have found since that it has been carried on ever since to some considerable extent, largely, doubtless, by the Macabebes, who never ought to have been taken into our service.

The enlistment of these people is as bad as the taking of Indians into their service by the British during the Revolutionary war, and that was condemned by nearly everybody in England in public life. They compelled every officer who had been in the service to give some excuse, and under the pretense that the colonists were about to do the same thing they said they had taken them in. Yet it was shown in the debates that we had never proposed to employ the savages, and that the British had taken them in and armed them and equipped them and allowed them to kill our wounded and scalp our dead. I could read, if I wanted to take the time, denunciations from at least a dozen public men of England, including the Earl of Chatham, on that very point—denouncing the wickedness of employing savages of that character in the English army. He declared it to be a disgrace to the English Government.

Mr. DUBOIS. Will the Senator from Colorado pardon me for a moment?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. DUBOIS. The whole testimony, including the testimony of Judge Taft, is that the Macabebes have never been friendly with their own people. They were the allies of Spain during all those wars, and they are utterly detested by the other Filipino people. They are renegades from their own people.

MILITARY PROCLAMATIONS.

Mr. TELLER. I am now going to read what Mr. Herbert Welsh calls an unparalleled proclamation. I think there is another proclamation as bad, but I can not put my hand on it. I refer to the order of General Bell. I shall read a reference to it. I have seen it, but I am not prepared to present it, because I do not know where I put it.

The following extract from General Smith's proclamation to the people of the island of Samar is taken from the Manila Freedom of November 10, 1901:

That is a paper in accord with the administration of public affairs by the civil Commission.

He desires to announce to all the influential natives of the district, and especially to those in the island of Samar, that up to and including the 10th day of November, 1901, those who desire to establish the fact that they are friendly to the American Government can do so in any one of the following ways:

I call the attention of the Senate to this:

1. By giving information as to the location of any guns used for purposes of insurrection.
2. By giving information as to the whereabouts of persons in insurrection.
3. By inducing persons in insurrection to present themselves, with their rifles or other arms, to the nearest American official.

They can not establish the fact of their friendship by protestations of any kind.

Those who fail to avail themselves of the opportunity presented will be regarded as distinctly unfriendly to the American Government, and will be treated accordingly.

In explanation of the last paragraph, General Smith says that all influential citizens of Samar who have not presented evidence of the kind mentioned of their loyalty to the American Government by November 10 will be deported from Samar to Guam or some other island, their wives and children sent into the mountains, and their towns destroyed. There will be no postponement or delay in fulfilling this promise.

Commenting on this, the Springfield Republican says:

The proclamation of Gen. Jacob H. Smith to the population of Samar and Leyte, which was dated November 1, and is printed elsewhere on this page, seems to have had no salutary effect in promoting pacification. No one, however, can well afford to say that General Smith's proclamation was lacking in severity. Indeed, it may easily be criticised as unwarranted by the precepts of civilized warfare, and as calculated to inflame resistance rather than break it. A well-known American statesman writes to say that "of all the events of war that have come under my notice" General Smith's proclamation "has no parallel."

I do not know what American that is. This is the Republican's editorial which I am now quoting. It continues:

A little study of the proclamation reveals its character. The general assumed that every inhabitant of Leyte and Samar was an active enemy of American rule, thus reversing the principle that an individual may be presumed to be living in obedience to authority so long as there is no evidence to show that he is hostile. And, acting on that assumption, General Smith called upon the inhabitants to prove their loyalty, and, remarkable to say, he restricted the proofs they could offer by arbitrarily setting up three tests, and then placed a limit of ten days upon the time in which such proof could be presented. These conditions really applied to the entire population, for although General Smith referred particularly to "influential" natives, he was the sole judge as to who might be or might not be "influential."

Now, it might easily be the fact that many well-disposed natives, living in the towns and occupied in peaceful pursuits, would be unable to furnish the special proof of their loyalty which the General called for. Any person, therefore, whatever the real facts in his case, who could not tell General Smith within ten days where a gun was located, or where an insurrecto could be captured, or who could not persuade some insurrecto to surrender, was liable to be exiled and to have his home and property destroyed.

It is clearly the duty of the opposition in the Senate to bring up for discussion the whole question of the methods now being employed in the conquest of the middle islands. Secretary Root has officially declared that a state of war exists in the archipelago, and it is at least desirable, under such conditions, that the conquest be conducted on the part of the United States with scrupulous fidelity to the rules of civilized warfare.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. TELLER. I do.

Mr. CULBERSON. I will state to the Senator that I have a full copy of the proclamation of General Bell with reference to reconcentration, and also his order to subordinate commanders. I think it is important in connection with the order just read from General Smith, and if it will not interrupt the course of the Senator's remarks I will be glad to have it read at this time.

Mr. TELLER. I think I will withhold it and read it a little later on.

The Evening News, of Plattsburg, N. Y., of January 20, 1902, published a letter from a soldier by the name of Joseph Woodville. Introducing the letter, the News says:

Charles Robinson, formerly a member of Company G, Twenty-first Infantry, now retired and living in this village, Monday received a letter from Joseph Woodville, who is still with the company in the Philippines. Mr. Robinson allows us to make the following extracts from the letter, which is dated December 15:

I will read only a part of the letter. It is from Batangas Province, and the following is an extract from it:

General Bell is in command here. He has surely got the niggers bluffed. He has issued an order that all must be in by December 25, and if not they will be killed and their houses burned. There are but a few houses left on the hills, all having been burned. We have had no pay in four months and it is hard telling when we will get any.

Wishing you and all the people in Plattsburg well,

I remain, your friend,

JOSEPH WOODVILLE.

TESTIMONY OF ATROCITIES.

I have another letter. All that I know about it is that it appeared in the Portland Oregonian of January 29, 1902, and is as follows:

SEATTLE, January 28.

Clarence Clowe, of Seattle, who recently arrived home from the Philippines, where he served as a private in Company H, Twenty-fifth Infantry, United States Volunteers, has authorized the publication of a letter written by him to Senator HOAR from the islands June 10, 1900. Clowe asks in the letter honorable discharge from a service that is outraging his conscience. In alleging inhuman treatment by American soldiers toward Filipinos he says in part:

"At any time I am liable to be called upon to go out and bind and gag helpless prisoners, to strike them in the face, to knock them down when so bound, to bear them away from wife and children, at their very door, who are shrieking pitifully the while or kneeling and kissing the hands of our officers, imploring mercy from those who seem not to know what it is, and then, with a crowd of soldiers, hold our helpless victim head downward in a tub of water in his own yard, or bind him hand and foot, attaching ropes to head and feet, and then lowering him into the depths of a well of water till life is well-nigh choked out and the bitterness of death has been tasted, and our poor, gasping victims ask us for the poor boon of being finished off, in mercy to themselves.

"All these things have been done at one time or another by our men, generally in cases of trying to obtain information as to the location of arms and ammunition.

"Nor can it be said that there is any general repulsion on the part of the enlisted men to taking part in these doings. I regret to have to say that, on the contrary, the majority of soldiers take a keen delight in them and rush with joy to the making of this latest development of a Roman holiday."

The Evansville Journal-News of January 31, 1902, contained the following:

Mrs. E. J. Felts, who resides at 929 East Illinois street, has received a letter from her son, H. H. Felts. He is at Laguan, P. I., on a United States battle ship. It was dated December 9, 1901, and it reads as follows:

"DEAR MOTHER: We are having a hot time here, but don't worry. I will take care of myself. We are fighting more or less every day. We are constantly cruising around these islands. The inland troops are driving the insurgents to the coast and we have the job of killing them. We have strict orders to kill every insurgent we catch between the towns and the coast, and it keeps us constantly moving almost day and night.

"A short time ago we landed 10 soldiers and they went about half a mile out to an old trench where they found 80 insurgents hiding. They opened fire on them and the negroes fought them with rocks, clubs, arrows, and bamboo guns, and one of the 10 men came back for reinforcements, which only left 9 to fight the 80. When reenforcements got there there was only 1 able to stand on his feet to shoot, and the others were lying on the ground wounded, but still firing. The 9 were holding the trench against the negroes.

"This looks almost impossible, but it is the actual truth. When the reenforcements got there they soon wiped them out, so none of the negroes got away to tell the story."

These were not negroes; they were natives.

"A few days later we landed 25 soldiers to go to an inland town, where they attacked 400 or 500 insurgents and fought them for twelve hours, when the dispatch messenger came for help to bring them back to the ship. There had been but two lives lost and most of them were wounded. Their lieutenant was killed and one private soldier, and they brought their dead bodies back to the ship. The men showed that they had had a terrible battle. Some of them were carrying the wounded and were not hardly able to walk themselves. Some of them had nearly all their clothes torn off, and some had even lost their shoes. These poor boys were a pitiful sight to see.

"H. H. FELTS,

"Cavite, Manila, U. S. S. Pampanga, Naval Station."

Mr. President, I do not vouch for these statements. I do not know that they are absolutely true; but I do know that charges made of this kind in the public press ought to be investigated. If false, it ought to be shown that they are false.

I have some clippings here that I have saved to indicate what has been said by the public. I am not going to read anything from a Democratic newspaper, because I know what would be said of it. I am going to read from Republican or independent newspapers.

[Detroit Free Press (Independent), January 21.]

Weylerism is Weylerism, whether it manifests itself in Cuba or in the Philippines. If it was a brutal, cowardly policy for Spain to adopt, it is a brutal, cowardly policy for the United States to adopt.

That is an independent paper.

[Boston Herald (Independent), January 21.]

This new order is * * * a new confession of the fact that a large part of the natives who have professed to be reconciled to our Government are not reconciled. * * * It puts an end to all statements that the people desire our sovereignty.

[Milwaukee Sentinel (Republican), January 22.]

The "zones" will not be "camps" in the Weyler or Kitchener sense, and there will be no privations and hardships of the kind connected by the hateful word "reconcentration." * * * Since the people of Batangas are not amenable to reason and good treatment, a measure of military severity will be resorted to which will doubtless prove effective. But General Chaffee's character is a warrant that there will be no Weylerism.

I have never charged that Weylerism to the extent of starving these people was to be connected with the reconcentration.

[Baltimore American (Republican), January 21.]

With what astonishment do we read that a general of our Army in the far-off Philippines has actually aped Weyler and Kitchener. * * * We have actually come to do the thing we went to war to banish. Our good name is dearer than all the islands of the sea. In the name of all that is best in our humanity, civilization, and patriotism, let the Government at Washington erase this stain before it becomes fixed and inerasable.

[Chicago Evening Post (Republican), January 22.]

After reading that General Bell had been forced to the extreme of adopting reconcentrado methods to suppress the insurgent Filipinos in the province of Batangas and then to-day perusing Governor Taft's optimistic "no war" report, the American people can not be blamed for feeling a trifle puzzled. Nor is it surprizing that they should say in their perplexity: "Let us have the truth about conditions in the Philippines; let Congress undertake a thorough investigation."

[Buffalo Enquirer (Independent), January 17.]

There has been altogether too much star-chamber business connected with the management of our affairs in the Philippine Islands, and the time has come when publicity should be given to Philippine matters.

[Springfield (Mass.) Republican, independent, January 17.]

The Maine explodes, and our Government has an investigation going in no time. This Philippine war, which began about three years ago, has been a great national calamity, having now cost the United States some $300,000,000 and thousands of American lives, while it has swept with fire and sword the land of the Filipino people, destroying their towns and villages and sending to their graves uncounted numbers of the native population. Why should not that, too, be investigated, in order that the full truth concerning the origin and the conduct of it may be known?

The City and State, of Philadelphia, Ind., is independent, but is published by a Republican.

[City and State (Philadelphia, Ind.), January 16.]

If Senator HOAR's resolution shall be favorably acted upon, and if the Senators appointed in accordance with its provisions shall perform their duties faithfully and impartially, we shall have an official statement of the utmost importance.

That is the resolution which did not pass.

[Chicago Record-Herald (Republican), January 18.]

To claim the Philippines as property of the United States and treat them as we treat foreign countries in the matter of the tariff is to advertise the forcible character of the ownership and to offend the national sense of what is right and fitting.

The rest of it is a reference to General Bell's order, and as the order is here I will not put it in. I have several extracts that I do not care to fill up the RECORD with. I will, however, read the following:

MANILA, January 1, 1902.

Lieut. Charles D. Rhodes, of the Sixth Cavaly, accompanied by two orderlies, when within 6 miles of Manila to-day, came across 20 armed insurgents in a cuartel or barracks. The insurgents shouted "Americanos," and Lieutenant Rhodes feigned a retreat. But in reality he took the cuartel in flank and drove out the insurgents, capturing two rifles, three revolvers, and some ammunition. Rhodes then burned the barracks down and proceeded to Manila.

General Wheaton's report from the island of Samar indicates that little has been accomplished there. The attitude of the natives is even more unfriendly than ever before. General Chaffee will probably visit the island in order to investigate the state of affairs prevailing there.

On the other hand, in Batangas Province, the organized campaign against the insurgents is progressing favorably, and speedy results are expected.

MANILA, December 18, 1901.

There were six skirmishes in various parts of Batangas Province yesterday. The insurgents did not make a single stand. Several Filipinos were killed. The Americans had only a few men wounded. Additional troops have been sent to General Bell, who is carrying on an aggressive campaign in Batangas, Tayabas, and Laguna provinces.

There are some other things in the article that are hardly worth putting in.

MANILA, December 5, 1901.

Colonel Winta's column has had a sharp brush with 40 insurgents in the Sipa Mountains, killing several of them and burning 14 cuartels. Advices from Catbalogan, capital of the island of Samar, report that the insurgent general, Lukban, has offered to negotiate terms of surrender with General Smith. To this offer the American commander replied that the time for negotiations had passed. Lieut. Commander James M. Helm, commanding the U. S. gunboat Frolic, destroyed during November 147 boats engaged in smuggling supplies to the insurgents. General Smith has ordered all male Filipinos to leave the coast towns for the interior. In order to be allowed to return, they must bring guns, prisoners, or information of the whereabouts of insurrectionists.

VICTORIA, B. C., December 19, 1901.

The Manila Times, referring to the plan of campaign in Samar, says:

"The Cavite marines to the number of 330 are stationed at Balangiga. These marines, in conjunction with the soldiers of the Eleventh Infantry, will operate from the south, scouring and burning the country northward until they meet and join hands with the Twenty-sixth, the Twelfth, the Seventh, and the Ninth regiments. This is the first part in the plan of campaign. When the southern part of the island is thoroughly cleaned up, operations will then begin from Luzon down to the southern line of troops, thus rounding up Lukban's army for final extermination.

"Samar Island will be made a desert where birds can not live. There is a bare possibility that, awed by the terrible punishment about to be inflicted, Lukban and his followers will decide to throw themselves on the mercy of the Americans, trusting to any terms which may be given them. Lukban's friends have become so terrified that they have beseeched General Hughes to postpone his measures of retaliation until the rebel chief can be advised of the situation and be given a chance to present himself to the American forces. These supplicants have received but slight encouragement from General Hughes, but they will be allowed to communicate with Lukban. He may possibly receive the treatment accorded prisoners of war, and the present measures of retaliation be thus avoided."

The English Fortnightly, in the last number, has a statement that the order had gone out that Lukban should be shot on sight if taken prisoner.

MANILA, December 5, 1901.

General Chaffee has issued orders for the closing of all ports in the Laguna and Batangas provinces. The quartermasters there will cease paying rents to the Filipinos for buildings used for military purposes, as it is known that a large proportion of the money so paid finds its way to the insurgents in the shape of contributions, and General Chaffee intends that no more Government funds shall find their way into the hands of the enemy. The reason for closing the ports is that too many supplies are found to be getting into the possession of the insurgents.

General Chaffee intends giving General Bell, commanding the troops in the Batangas province, every assistance he may require to subdue the insurrectos.

That is all that I need read. I do not care about putting it all in. There is some personal reference to Governor Taft which is unimportant here:

MANILA, December 10, 1901.

Thousands of people are leaving Batangas Province for places of safety.

Gen. James M. Bell reports an important engagement between a force of insurgents at Labo, province of Camarines, and a detachment of the Twentieth Infantry. Three Americans were killed. The loss of the enemy is not known, but it is believed to have been heavy. General Bell anticipates a speedy extermination of the irreconcilables.

A large force of insurgents recently attacked the town of Lipa, province of Batangas, killing 1 soldier and several Americanistas. Troop H, First Cavalry, killed 10 of the enemy before the remainder of the insurgent force escaped. The Filipinos evidently expected a victory, for they had cut the wires and carried off a hundred yards of the line.

The natives are stirred by the closing of the ports, and bitterly object to reconcentration.

A Filipino force consisting of 200 riflemen and 400 bolomen recently attacked Nagpartian, province of North Ilocos. Company M, Eighth Infantry, acting on the defensive, drove off the enemy, killing 11 of them with no loss to themselves.

Mr. President, I read these extracts to show that war is still rife in that island. I have here an article that appeared in all the public press of this country on the 20th of last December. It begins with the following from General Chaffee:

History affords no parallel of a whole people thus practically turning war traitors, and in the genius of no other people was ever found such masterful powers of secrecy and dissimulation; but it is needless to say that no powerful state was ever erected or ever can be erected upon such immoral and unenlightened foundations.

Then the article proceeds:

This statement is made by General Chaffee, military governor of the Philippines, in a review of one of a number of court-martial cases in the islands, the records of which have been received at the War Department.

The case which brought forth this comment from General Chaffee was one wherein seven natives were tried jointly on a charge of murder. The accused were soldiers in the insurgent army, and after defeat by the American army in the field abandoned even the show of open opposition of the half-uniformed guerrilla bands and took up their residence at Taytay, in Morong Province, Luzon, a place protected by an American garrison. Then, following the proclaimed policy of the insurgent chiefs, they proceeded to organize secretly a bolo band.

After the native population within the lines of the army of occupation had been authorized to establish civil government the band came forward under the leadership of a resident padre, dictated and secured their election as municipal officers of Taytay, and entered upon their duties under American authority. Then ensued a remarkable attempt to serve two masters. In all lawful matters they served with due appearance of loyalty the American Government, while at the same time they labored secretly and diligently in the interests of the insurrection. This dual form of government, says General Chaffee, existed everywhere, in strongly garrisoned cities like Manila, as well as the smallest barrio. The municipal officers of Taytay next entered upon a series of murders and continued their deadly work until the growing number of mysterious disappearances from the community led to the discovery of the perpetrators by the American authorities.

Mr. President, when you think that this is being done by the men who are placed over these Filipinos, you can see what the condition is there.

I have a letter here from an officer in the Philippines, received by a member of his family in this city. It is dated October 29, 1901, and is as follows:

CATBALOGAN, SAMAR, October 29, 1901.

* * * I don't want to alarm you about the conditions here, but they are very serious at present. You have probably read about the massacre of Company C, of the Ninth—48 men killed, including 3 officers; 12 wounded. I'll write you all the details later. It was an awful thing. A naval officer and four sailors were killed at a little place a few miles from here the day before yesterday. They have at least one fight on the island every day. The fact is that the niggers have our troops pretty well bluffed at present, and we are just about holding our own and waiting for reenforcements. There have been about 5,000 more troops ordered here.

All the women have been ordered away, and things are very lively. In the face of all this, of course, I would not leave here on a leave of absence, or in any other way, if I can help it. I do not know what you will think of me when I say I hope you have not done anything toward getting a leave for me. You must think I am very changeable, but, of course, when I wrote you that I would like to get a leave I did not know I was going to get into a hot box like this with my regiment. If you have moved in the matter and I do get a leave I shall certainly give it up, for, of course, I will stay right here with my regiment until it is all over.

The little town is right in a pocket, with hills all around it. It is fired into almost daily. Day before yesterday they opened up and wounded several men before they were driven out by the gunboat in the harbor.

This came from Manila December 29, 1901, and states what Governor Wright said:

Governor Wright said he was satisfied that the majority of the Filipinos recognize and appreciate what had been done, and that their leaders were doing all in their power to bring the remaining insurgents to a peaceful view of the situation.

Concluding, Governor Wright said the natives inhabiting the island of Samar had, during all their history, been an unmanageable race, and he was not surprised at their present hostility.

Maj. Henry Allen, formerly governor of the island of Leyte, and who was chosen chief of the insular constabulary, has left Manila for a tour of inspection through the islands of Leyte and Mindoro. He will report to the Commission of the conditions existing there, and particularly of the situation in the province of Misamis, Mindoro, where the military authorities have asked to have affairs returned from the civil back to their own control.

I think that has been done.

Five insurgent officers and 175 men, with 6 cannon, 51 rifles, and 17 shotguns, surrendered yesterday to the American authorities on the island of Cebu. It is now believed this island is pacified.

I have a dispatch here dated Atlanta, Ga., December 27, which reads:

ATLANTA, GA., December 27, 1901.

Joseph Ohl, special commissioner of the Constitution to the Philippines, has made a careful study of the military conditions existing there under American rule. Mr. Ohl is the Washington correspondent of the Constitution, and was sent East with the Congressional party which sailed for the Orient during the past summer on the United States transport. His arraignment of the military occupation in the Philippines is regarded here as a forerunner of what will be heard in Congress before the session is over. A portion of his letter follows:

"CEBU, P. I.—The highly civilized and humane methods that characterized the rule of Weyler in Cuba are being resorted to by the American Army in its efforts to subject the Viscayans of this island of Cebu, of Bohol, and would be put into effect in Samar if the conditions were favorable.

"Whole villages have been burned by the orders of the general commanding this district, and the concentrado policy of which we heard so much in Cuba is about to be put into operation here, if, indeed, it can not be said to have already been instituted.

"General Hughes believes that 'war is hell,' as Sherman said, and he is giving the people of Cebu a taste of the brimstone. Only a few nights ago an American officer boasted that he was known as the Weyler of the district where he is in command. He also said, although it may seem incredible, that he was proud of being so called.

"The people of the United States have no conception of the conditions prevailing down there. If they had, a howl would go up from one end of the country to the other. Army officers tell of these things in confidence, but nothing is said with the idea that it shall get to the outside world.

"The people are to be brought in from the country and cooped up in the towns. Those who refuse to come are to be hunted down. The only difference I can see between this and Weyler's methods, which brought down the wrath of the world upon the head of Spain, is that the Filipino reconcentrados will in all probability be fed better than the Spanish fed those in Cuba.

"A detachment of soldiers went the other day to a town where there had been prepared a feast, the occasion being a fiesta of a religious character. The soldiers ate all there was to eat, then burned the town.

"A man living in the country was surprised one day by a lot of Signal Corps men, under escort, stringing a telegraph wire near his little home in the country. He was gratified, because he believed this to be an evidence of advancement of his part of the country. He was not so happy when he was informed that he was expected to guard that wire religiously, and that if anything happened to it—if it should be cut—his house would be burned down. Some nights later the wire was cut, and investigation showed it had been cut near his house. When the wire was repaired, the soldiers made good their instructions and burned his house."

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator from Colorado allow me to ask a question of the Senator from Massachusetts?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. TILLMAN. I will address the chairman of the Committee on the Philippines. I notice that there is considerable complaint on the part of a large number of very important and interesting newspapers of a star-chamber investigation by the Committee on the Philippines; in other words, the absence from its sittings of the representatives of the press.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, that is as idle a story as was ever repeated. In the investigation being conducted by the Committee on the Philippines the Associated Press has a representative there every day; the Sun Association has a representative there every day; the Scripps-McRae Association has a representative there every day. Those are the three great press associations, which cover practically all the newspapers of the country, and which are the three represented here on the floor of the Senate. The hearings have been entirely open to them. The committee decided not to open the hearings to the public because their room is totally inadequate, and that would only serve to delay and protract the hearings. But, as I say, we admit the representatives of the press associations, which cover practically every newspaper in the country, and they have made very full reports of all that has been said there. Special correspondents have not been admitted, but, so far as I am aware, they have concurred in the wisdom of this arrangement, because all their newspapers are served by these press associations.

The testimony is printed every day as rapidly as possible, and is in the committee room in full for anyone who wants to consult it. The press associations give the fullest possible reports, and all the hearings are public in the widest sense.

Mr. TILLMAN. I simply wished to get information, because I saw the accusation made that the reports now being sent out are colored and garbled.

Mr. LODGE. If they are colored and garbled, which I do not agree to be the case, it is because the Associated Press, the Sun Association, and the Scripps-McRae Association garble and color them. In my judgment, they do nothing of the kind.

Mr. TILLMAN. I am not making the accusation. I am merely repeating what I have heard.

There is another question I propose to ask the chairman of the committee, and that is, What other witnesses are to be called or when will Governor Taft get through? In other words, will we be able to get any information from any source which we may want to present in an authoritative way before Congress adjourns?

Mr. LODGE. As soon as Governor Taft gets through——

Mr. TILLMAN. The Senator is pressing this bill with might and main, day and night, pushing and shoving to get to a vote; and yet Senators want to get all the facts in regard to the war in the Philippines and some data which we think should be obtainable if the committee would bring in some witnesses, but they do not seem likely ever to reach them.

Mr. LODGE. This bill has nothing to do with the conduct of the war. It is simply a tariff bill, as the Senator well knows. We have heard Governor Taft every day for ten days, and the minority of the committee will bear me out in the statement that the committee has been as diligent as it was possible to be in hearing him. His testimony naturally takes some time. The Senators on the committee, both of the majority and minority, have desired to ask him a great many questions. I should be very glad if his testimony could be finished at the earliest possible day, and of course it will be. Then we shall go on and call Army officers—that is the present plan—and call in witnesses whom any member of the committee desires who can throw any light on affairs in the Philippines. Of course, the first thing to do is to hear what Governor Taft, who is here temporarily, has to say. That course has been agreed to by the committee without dissent.

Mr. TILLMAN. I hope the Senator does not think I am finding any fault with the committee as to the conduct of the investigation. I just wanted a little light in order to be able to form some opinion as to when we might get some facts that would be acceptable, if we ever can get other witnesses before the committee.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, with reference to the admission of the press to the examinations before the Committee on the Philippines, I think it may be stated that the first proposition was to totally exclude the press. I think that proposition was made by the chairman of the committee. Some of us objected.

Mr. LODGE. I never made such a statement before the committee—never. I object very seriously, Mr. President, to this wholly unusual course of bringing the discussions of a committee into this Chamber. It is never done here. I simply deny for myself that I made any such proposition.

Mr. PATTERSON. Notwithstanding the denial of the chairman of the committee, I reiterate what I said. I was the first one to object on the committee——

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Colorado whether he reiterates that I asked to have the press excluded from the hearings by the committee?

Mr. PATTERSON. My recollection is that that was your proposition.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I have denied it absolutely. That is not the case. I made no such suggestion.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I rise to a question of order.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] rises to a question of order. The Senator will state it.

Mr. HOAR. My question of order is, that it is not in order to state what occurred in a committee except by the committee's authority.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Colorado.

Mr. HOAR. I ask for a ruling of the Chair on that point of order.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PETTUS] who sits by my side agrees with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] that referring to what has transpired in a committee is out of order. I want to say that I do not believe that simply admitting the representatives of the three press associations to the examinations before the committee gives that kind, degree, and character of publicity to examinations that are deemed by a great many Senators to be of the importance that these are, for the reason that the Associated Press and the other press associations necessarily curtail the reports, while if the correspondents of the press stationed at Washington had the opportunity to report the proceedings, the country would get every phase and every color of whatever was stated before the committee. They would have the opportunity to discuss, to enlarge, and to suggest.

Representatives of the Democratic papers would probably view the testimony from one standpoint and representatives of the Republican papers from another standpoint. It is only by that free and open discussion that the true bearing of the testimony that is elicited can be gotten to the public. I agree with the newspapers that are complaining of the exclusion of their regular correspondents, that this is to a certain extent a star-chamber investigation.

The principal newspapers of the country, through men who are particularly skilled in reports of that kind, should have the opportunity of being represented in this investigation and in every other investigation of like character by their own chosen representatives. Being thus represented, no harm could come, but, on the contrary, the greatest good would result; for then the testimony, the facts, and the circumstances would be discussed before the public in the different lights and from the different standpoints that the newspaper men of the country would occupy toward them.

I simply say so much because I, as one member of the committee, do not wish to stand before the public as favoring the arrangement by which only the representatives of the Associated Press, the Sun newspaper, and the Scrips-McRae Press are admitted to the room of the committee.

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. TELLER. I do.

Mr. CARMACK. I know the Senator from Colorado [Mr. PATTERSON] does not mean to charge, and I do not think any Senator of the minority would charge, that there has been any effort on the part of the committee to suppress information in regard to the investigation that is going on. I do not think there has been any intention of that sort on the part of any member of the committee, whether of the majority or the minority.

I think it was agreed among us that it would be impossible to hold our sessions in the small room occupied by the committee, and it was thought by some of us—I believe I myself made the suggestion—that admission to the three press associations would be ample and would relieve us from the charge of conducting a star-chamber investigation.

I must say, Mr. President, that I have been disappointed in the reports of the press associations. I think they have sent very meager and imperfect and not very well edited reports of the examinations. I do not think that has been the intention at all, but that it is simply due to the fact that the Associated Press and these other press associations always send meager reports of such matters because the majority of the newspapers they serve would not want full reports; but I think some means could be arranged by which the special correspondents should be given early access to the testimony before the committee. I do not know exactly how it can be arranged; but if the newspapers that want a fuller report than is given by the press associations can be very early given access to the testimony, I think it will answer the purpose. It is not practical in the room where the committee now sits that access should be given to all the correspondents.

As I have said, I do not think there was any intention on the part of anyone to hold a star-chamber investigation.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. PATTERSON. Will the Senator from South Carolina yield to me for a moment?

Mr. TILLMAN. Certainly.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, I want to disclaim any desire or any purpose of charging that it was proposed by any member of the committee that there should be what is termed a star-chamber investigation. If I had not been stopped by the point of order, it would have been entirely proper to say that the explanation was made that the testimony would be printed from day to day, and then the entire press of the country could have access to it. I objected to a thing of that kind for the reason that then the news would be a day old and the press of the country would have no use, as it never has, for stale news.

I want to disclaim all purpose of suggesting that there was an inclination upon the part of any member of the committee to keep from the public the testimony, whatever it might be. The question arose, Mr. President, from the size of the room and the discomfort that would necessarily follow from a very crowded attendance. If I had not been arrested by the point of order, that matter would have been made perfectly clear before I took my seat a little while ago.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, if the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] will permit me——

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. TILLMAN. I would suggest, if I may be permitted to suggest, that we have a very commodious room in the Library for the use of Senators, where this committee could hold its investigations and give access to such members of the press as chose to attend the sittings.

I expect later on there will be some rather startling evidence given, and if it is to be sifted by these three press associations in the way Governor Taft's evidence has been sifted, or rather condensed, I do not think it will be satisfactory to the Senate or to the people of the United States.

While, of course, I have no intention of criticising the committee, it does seem to me that the utmost publicity should be given in an investigation involving such vital questions; in other words, the whole issue of the Philippine situation, as to what we are to do and how we are to get out of that thing with honor. We have got hold of them, and some men say we can not let loose. I concede that their contention has great force. We certainly can not hold on and continue Weyler's methods with any degree of satisfaction to anybody. I think we owe it to the people of the country to give them the full account of everything that is brought before the committee of investigation. Here we are expressing opinions; there we will get witnesses, and the credibility of those witnesses will, of course, depend upon the character of the men.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Colorado is entitled to the floor and will proceed.

THE QUESTION ABOVE PARTISANSHIP.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I have not concluded all I desire to say on this subject, but I think I have talked as long as I ought to be required to do to-day, and I shall ask the Senate to allow me to proceed for a very short time to-morrow morning.

Before I sit down I want to say to the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] that if he thought I seemed to exhibit more irritation than was necessary about what he said, I have not the slightest feeling regarding it, and I know he did not intend any disrespect or discourtesy to me.

Mr. President, I have tried to approach this question simply from the standpoint of justice. I feel that the honor and reputation of my country are at stake. I can not but feel that we are entering upon a course that must, if persisted in, be absolutely disastrous to us, not simply in the point of money, but in point of morals.

I have myself never been so active a partisan that I would allow my country to suffer in the interest of any party whatever. I hold that country is above party and that duty is above party, Mr. President. In my service in this body, when in accord with the party now in power, I found myself not infrequently compelled to differ from it and to vote practically alone. That I have sometimes done when sitting on the Republican side of the Chamber because I did not approve of the policies that party adopted. If I thought, Mr. President, that I was here as a partisan, if I thought I would present to the Senate one scrap of evidence or one attempted argument which I would not present if I were sitting on that side of the Chamber, I should feel that I was unfit for this public place. Hence, I could but feel it when the Senator from Wisconsin thoughtlessly put a question to me, which seemed to me at least, though I do not suppose he so intended it, to indicate that he thought I had forgotten that I occupied the highest possible position in American public life as a member of this body, and that I had a duty to my country that was greater than any possible obligation I could have to any political association. I am not of that temperament, Mr. President, that I am so anxious to exploit my own ideas and to force them upon other people that I can not see what is just and right.

If I exhibited more warmth, as I probably did, than the circumstances demanded or required or justified, I simply want to say that I felt I was doing a great public duty and a public service, and I was trying to perform that duty in the best possible manner, knowing full well that, however I might try, it would be weakly and improperly done, but that it would be done according to the best of my ability before my country and before my God.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, I want to say to the Senator from Colorado that I had asked leave to interrupt him. I did not intend to put any question which would be offensive.

Mr. TELLER. I know that.

Mr. SPOONER. And I think the Senator, on reflection, will not find anything in the question which I put to him which involved that. The Senator had made a long speech, to which I had listened attentively, as I always listen to his speeches, and nothing escaped him which manifested in any way an approval of what the Administration had done over there, and I thought it was a fair question to put to him whether his impeachment was an absolute and universal one. I did not mean to imply at all that the Senator was unpatriotic. I never imputed such a thing to him in any debate, and I had no intention of doing so when I interrupted him.

Mr. TELLER. I acquit the Senator of any such intention. I am willing to accept his suggestion that I was perhaps a little too sensitive, but I had intended as part of my remarks to say, if the Senator had not interrupted me, what I did about the Chinese affair. I had had it in mind for a long time that, when an opportunity presented, I should like to pay a merited tribute to the Administration for its management of affairs in China.

I mean also before I get through, unless I forget it—and such was certainly my purpose when I commenced this speech—to pay a tribute also to the attempt of our Government to institute and create an educational system in the islands of the Philippines. That I approve; that is probably one of the things, that if we should withdraw from the islands to-morrow, would still be left.

When anybody tells me that the teachers in the Philippines are safe, I will say that I should expect them to be safe when I read in almost every document I take up of the thirst, the anxiety, and the earnestness of those people for educational facilities. If they were savages I should expect them to kill the teachers; but I do not believe they will do so. I do not believe the teachers will be disturbed even in regions where it would not be safe for a soldier to travel. I believe a teacher may safely travel anywhere in the Philippines.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, which will be read.

The Secretary read the communication as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington, February 12, 1902.

SIR: I have the honor to forward herewith a copy of a letter from Hon. William H. Taft, governor of the Philippine Islands, to the Secretary of War, with an inclosure thereto, entitled "Federal Party Message to the Congress of the United States of America," dated at Manila, November, 1901.

Very respectfully,

ELIHU ROOT, Secretary of War.

Hon. WILLIAM P. FRYE,
President pro tempore, United States Senate.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, I ask that the entire communication may be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there is no objection, the Secretary will read the papers accompanying the communication from the Secretary of War.

The Secretary read the accompanying communication from Hon. William H. Taft and the petition, which appear later in the proceedings.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I do not wish to resume yesterday's debate at this hour in the afternoon; but it seems to me this document is a pretty extraordinary commentary on what was said yesterday. Senators read the provision in section 9, which prohibits membership in any society, secret or open, for the propagation or promulgation of any political opinion or policy. Now here is a political party, an association with by-laws——

Mr. ALDRICH. Oh, no.

Mr. HOAR. Oh, yes; it is a political party.

Mr. ALDRICH. I suggest to the Senator that he read section 9.

Mr. HOAR. Very well.

All persons who shall meet together for the purpose of forming or who shall form any secret society—

Now do not be rash about it—any secret society, or who shall after the passage of this act continue membership in any society——

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Secret society?

Mr. HOAR. No, it is not; of course.

Mr. GALLINGER. It means that.

Mr. HOAR. It does not mean that. It is absolutely distinct. The difference is emphasized. It says:

A society already formed, having for its object, in whole or in part, the promotion of treason, rebellion, or sedition, or the promulgation of any political opinion or policy—shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $1,000, or by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or both.

Of any sort or kind—

Here is a society with by-laws, according to the statement of that paper, established, promulgating certain political opinions; and this provision which I have read is followed by section 10:

Until it has been officially proclaimed that a state of war or insurrection against the authority or sovereignty of the United States no longer exists in the Philippine Islands, it shall be unlawful for any person to advocate, orally or by writing or printing, or like methods, the independence of the Philippine Islands or their separation from the United States, whether by peaceable or forcible means, or to print, publish, or circulate any handbill, newspaper, or other publication advocating such independence or separation.

Any person violating the provisions of this section shall be punished by a fine of not exceeding $2,000 and imprisonment not exceeding one year.

Mr. RAWLINS. Will the Senator from Massachusetts yield to permit me to read what Governor Taft recently said in his testimony in regard to the Federal party? It is very brief. I do not wish to interrupt the Senator.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator can read it now, if he pleases.

Mr. RAWLINS. I read from page 51 of Governor Taft's testimony:

Senator RAWLINS. If you will permit me in this connection, two members of your Commission, I believe, are members of the Federal party?

Governor TAFT. Yes, sir; three of them are.

Senator RAWLINS. Three. And the object of that party, as contained in its platform, is, first, territorial government, with representation in Congress, and, further away, statehood?

Governor TAFT. Yes, sir.

Senator RAWLINS. And that same promise, or an assurance of that description, is being made to the people to induce them to surrender their arms and submit to the Government?

Governor TAFT. If you are stating that "whereas" as coming from me, I will have to qualify it in certain respects.

Senator RAWLINS. That is the object of the party and the declaration of its platform. You agree with me?

Governor TAFT. Yes; that is true.

Senator RAWLINS. And the Federal party is, as stated in your report, an effective instrument in the pacification of the islands?

Governor TAFT. It is.

Senator RAWLINS. Is not that party holding out a promise in that way—I do not mean expressly—that those ends will be realized if the people submit to the authority of the United States?

Governor TAFT. The Federal party, if you will permit me to say so, is made up of a majority of the educated people in the islands. It is certainly the political organization most widespread in the islands. The Federal party formed their platform. They brought it to us to approve or disapprove. We said we could not approve or disapprove; that the question of statehood was a question so far removed in the future that it was none of our business to discuss it; and so we have reiterated through the island.

The statement in the platform is that. That is one of the aspirations of the party. It does not involve, and the platform does not state that it has ever been promised by anybody having any authority in the islands, and while its presence there may have united and may have brought people to the hope that it would be done, and it may be that some people have been misled by it——

Senator RAWLINS. Would it not necessarily have that significance to the people, ignorant to a degree, when three of the members of the Commission, officials under our own Government, are the most prominent leaders of that party?

Governor TAFT. It is possible that it has had some influence of that sort.

Senator RAWLINS. What I wanted to ask in this connection is, When that expectation, built up in that way, is disappointed, as it may be, what will be the effect upon those people?

Governor TAFT. To begin with, Senator RAWLINS, the question of statehood, like the question of independence, is so far in the future, in my judgment—I give only my judgment—and it is so understood by the people there, I think, that I do not regard that feature of it as very important.

The truth is that the Federal party included a good many who were not in favor of statehood, who were in favor of ultimate independence, and so expressed themselves. The Federal party was founded chiefly on the platform of peace, and now they have formed a party in Manila opposed to the Federal party and called the party of peace. I say opposed. It is taking different lines, hoping to bring about peace, and then looking to the future, as they may progress, either to statehood or to independence.

Mr. HOAR. Now, Mr. President, it is perfectly lawful, according to the interpretation of this statute, to publish political opinions when three members of the Commission happen to be members of the society for promulgating them and to continue members of that political society, provided—we want to have our scientific deduction of the general rule precisely coincide with the particular fact—provided they accompany their promulgation of their opinion with the expression of a marvelous admiration for the wisdom of the commissioners. That seems to be the result.

Let me repeat, Mr. President, here is a law or edict under the authority of the United States which, in the great question what shall be the fate of a great people, permits persons of precisely the way of thinking of rulers appointed by a foreign country to belong to political associations and to promulgate political opinions at their discretion, and makes it a penal offense to belong to any society or to print or publish or in any way circulate in newspaper or other publication any other political opinion whatever. They tell us the Philippine Islanders do not want independence, and they point to their expression, when it is a penal offense to express any desire for independence whatever.

Mr. SPOONER. If the Senator from Massachusetts will pardon me, he wants, in what he says, to be fairly accurate. The section reads:

All persons who shall meet together for the purpose of forming, or who shall form, any secret society, or who shall, after the passage of this act, continue membership in a society already formed.

The Senator read it "any." It is "a."

Mr. HOAR. I read it aright, but I may have been repeating it; I do not know.

Mr. ALDRICH. In the first reading the Senator read "any" instead of "a."

Mr. SPOONER. It was a pure inadvertence, and the Senator would want to be correct; that is all.

Mr. HOAR. What I said will be printed unchanged in that particular. The Senator will find, I think, that I read it exactly. It may be that when I repeated it more than once I translated it. but it means exactly the same thing.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. What shall be done with the rest of the paper? The reading of it has not been completed.

Mr. SPOONER. I ask that it may be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. HOAR. I thought it had been read.

Mr. ALDRICH. Had not the reading of the petition been finished?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary finished the reading of the petition, but there are other matters in the paper.

Mr. HOAR. Let them be printed as a document also.

Mr. SPOONER. I ask that all the matters sent by the Secretary of War be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wisconsin asks that the remainder of the paper which has not been read and which was submitted to-day be printed in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. BACON. I inquire whether the names are appended or not?

Mr. SPOONER. They are not.

Mr. BACON. I thought if the names were appended it might be well to omit them.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection to the printing of the papers in the RECORD.

The papers referred to are as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington, February 12, 1902.

SIR: I have the honor to forward herewith a copy of a letter from the Hon. William H. Taft, governor of the Philippine Islands, to the Secretary of War, with an inclosure thereto, entitled "Federal party message to the Congress of the United States of America," dated at Manila, November, 1901.

Very respectfully,

ELIHU ROOT, Secretary of War.

Hon. WILLIAM P. FRYE,
President pro tempore United States Senate.

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 8, 1902.

The SECRETARY OF WAR, Washington, D. C.

SIR: Just before I left Manila I was requested by representatives of the Federal party to present to the two Houses of Congress a memorial of the Federal party to those Houses which accompanies this communication.

Very respectfully,

WM. H. TAFT.

Federal party—Message to the Congress of the United States of America accorded in extraordinary assembly, November, 1901, Manila.

To the Congress of the United States:

The Federal party, assembled in extraordinary convention, called pursuant to its by-laws, resolved under this date to transmit to the Congress of the United States a memorial of the tenor following:

The Spanish-American war ended with the treaty of Paris, dated December 10, 1898, article 9 of which, last paragraph, lays down the following: "The civil rights and political status of the native inhabitants of the territories hereby ceded to the United States shall be determined by the Congress."

The performance of this international obligation of the United States has been deferred to this time because of the unfortunate fact of the Filipinos having attacked the sovereignty of the United States, a hostile act which the Federal party regards as having been brought about through misunderstandings and not through hatred of the American sovereignty. It is a demonstrated fact, nevertheless, that at this time out of the 60 provinces and districts into which the Philippine Archipelago was formerly divided in two only (Batangas and Samar) does war exist, and it may be asserted that the remaining 58 are completely pacified. In the majority of these the Federal party has committees professing the ideals set forth in its platform, and they are duly represented in this convention.

It is likewise a notorious and demonstrated fact that the pacified pueblos anxiously desire the prompt appearance of a definitive civil rule, as is shown by the obvious fact that they joyfully accepted the provisional civil régime which the United States Civil Commission, presided over by the Hon. Mr. Taft, has established in all the pacified pueblos and provinces, it being pertinent to add here that the Commissioners were received everywhere with sincere and splendid manifestations of enthusiasm, demonstrative of the ardent desire to enjoy as soon as may be civil rule.

It is, lastly, a fact, likewise admitted, that those who are still in arms allege the lack of a civil régime, agreed upon and promulgated by the Congress of the United States, as a weighty pretext for their belligerent attitude, which régime shall determine at once the political status and civil rights of the native inhabitants of the Philippine Archipelago, pursuant to the said article 9 of the treaty of Paris.

From the foregoing facts are deduced the timeliness, advisability, and necessity for Congress at its next session to carry into effect the intention expressed in the treaty of Paris to define the future of the Philippines in its relations with the United States, as well as in those which affect the individual and internal existence of the archipelago.

On the other hand, from the moment that the great majority of the Filipinos accept and recognize American sovereignty there is no reason for not replacing the military régime by a civil rule of a popular character, in conformity with the decisive words of the never to be forgotten President McKinley, recorded in this message addressed to the Congress on December 5, 1899, and transmitted in the instructions given to the Secretary of War, Mr. Root, who, on April 7, 1900, in turn communicated them to the Hon. Mr. Taft, president of the United States Civil Commission in these islands, for his guidance and that of his colleagues on the Commission.

The civil commission has officially proclaimed that the civil régime, with the implantation of which it was charged, is merely of a provisional character, with a very decided tendency toward a liberal evolution for the future. (Speeches of Mr. Taft on July 4 and September 2 of this year at the inauguration of the provisional civil rule.) The Federal party invokes the above-cited words to justify before Congress the propriety of this memorial, which, moreover, is based on article 1 of the amendments to the Constitution of the United States of December 17, 1787, which consecrates the rights of people peaceably to assemble and petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

Entering now into the substance of this memorial, the Federal party divides it into two parts, following the order of the importance and transcendency of the petitions contained therein.

FIRST PART—PETITION FOR ANNEXATION AND FORM OF GOVERNMENT.

The Federal party has made an exhaustive study of the sentiments of the Filipino people, as well as those animating the American people, with respect to determining the future of these islands.

From the mass of data which the Federal party has had before it, and seriously and formally considered, it is clearly deduced that the intention of the Americans and Filipinos is to constitutionally join the Philippines to America in such a way that the former may never be separated from the latter, nor the latter disunited from the former.

"In order to form a more perfect union, establish justice, insure domestic tranquillity, provide for the common defense, promote the general welfare, and secure the blessings of liberty" are the principles in which the policy which should be followed in the Philippines should be inspired without the loss of a moment.

To make of the Philippines a colony of the United States or to grant independence to the Philippines would be to hand the islands over to disorder and to anarchy, to destruction and to chaos.

In effect the colonial system involves the principles of difference of citizenship, inequality of rights, and other consequent abuses and injustices, of all of which we Filipinos were surfeited under the Spanish Government, and for this reason we reject everything which tends toward a colony.

Philippine independence, with or without a protectorate, means the holding of power by all the terrible elements of the sects which predominate, and would predominate still for some years, until the anger of Filipinos toward Filipinos shall have been completely calmed, education become more general, and the fananticism we have inherited from Spain exiled.

Federation or annexation would settle all these difficulties by concentrating the interests of the Filipino people upon education and labor, the most efficient means for bringing about a prompt uplifting.

The Federal party can assure the Congress that the foregoing is the true opinion of the best elements and greater part of the Filipinos, as is evidenced by the annexed report of the Federal party, which was made by direction of General MacArthur, and which has all the character of an official document.

In behalf, then, of the Federal party, this convention has the honor to very respectfully present to the Congress the following petition praying a declaration by the Congress of the United States to the effect that Philippine Islands as they are described in the treaty of Paris and subsequent conventions with Spain, are an integral part of the Republic of the United States of North America, the said Philippine Islands constituting a Territory with the rights and privileges which the Constitution of the United States grants to the other Territories, such as that of becoming eventually a State of the Union.

Therefore the Federal party proposes the following form of Territorial government:

(a) Executive power.—A governor appointed by the President of the United States, with a veto power over the chambers similar to that which the American Constitution grants the said President of the United States, assisted by four secretaries—of the interior, of the treasury, of public instruction, and of agriculture, industry, and commerce—who shall be appointed by the governor, with the consent of the Filipino senate.

All appointments made by the governor in the exercise of his authority to offices the salary of which shall exceed $3,000 a year shall be made with the consent of the Filipino senate.

(b) Legislative power.—To be composed of two chambers, a senate and a chamber of representatives.

The senate shall be composed of 30 members, of which 14 shall be appointed by the governor and the remaining 16 elected by suffrage by each of the existing 14 judicial districts, at the rate of 1 senator for each district, except the district of Manila, which shall have 2 senators.

The requirements for senator are: To be a Filipino or American citizen, with a residence for the latter in the country of a year at least prior to the election or appointment; to be 30 years of age; to be a landed proprietor to the value of $5,000, or to have an income of $500 per annum prior to election or appointment.

The senatorial elections shall be made by the municipalities of the respective judicial districts, and elections for senators of the judicial district of Manila by the members of the advisory board of the said city, and two additional representatives from each of its districts to be chosen by suffrage.

The number of representatives shall not exceed 1 for every 100,000 inhabitants.

Until a census shall be taken there shall be 1 representative from each province and district and 6 for the city of Manila, all to be chosen by popular vote.

In order to be a representative it is necessary to be a Filipino or American, the latter with a residence of three years and of lawful age.

To be an elector it is necessary to be a Filipino or American, with a residence of one year in the locality, to be 21 years of age, and to be able to read and write.

The office of senator or representative shall be incompatible with any other office remunerated by the government.

The term of office of senator or representative shall be for four years and two years, respectively, with the right to reelection.

One-half of the members of the senate shall be renewed every two years.

The sessions of both chambers shall not exceed ninety days in each year.

The senators and representatives shall be paid $25 for each day of session attended.

Each chamber shall make its own rules and elect its own presiding officer.

The presiding officer of the senate shall in all cases be the substitute of the governor.

(c) Judicial power.—There shall be a Federal court for the trial of Federal matters, following the established usages in other recognized Territories, the members of which shall be appointed by the President of the United States.

The supreme court, the courts of first instance, and other inferior courts shall continue as at present until the Filipino congress shall otherwise determine.

Representation in the Congress of the United States.—The Filipino Archipelago shall be represented in the Congress of the United States by two representatives of the Philippines in joint session assembled.

The foregoing form of government, which we believe to be in keeping with the social and political conditions of the country, is based upon the democratic principles contained in our platform and on the desire of the Filipinos to be educated in the governmental usages of America. For these reasons we hold as sacred the principle of the complete separation of the powers and the office of secretary and legislator as incompatible.

We facilitate the admission of Americans to the legislature by recognizing the authority of the governor to appoint 14 members of the 30 who are to compose the senate, for the purpose, already mentioned, of educating ourselves in American legislation.

SECOND PART.

In this second part the Federal party suggests to the Congress the fulfillment of other great aspirations of the country of a social and economical character by recommending the adoption of adequate measures within the sovereign attributes of the Congress.

The principal of these aspirations relates to the remedy for the ancient evil known as the friar, under which denomination are included all the religious orders now existing in these islands.

In the preamble to the great American Constitution fundamental benefits of every civilized society are clearly defined, and they are:

"To form a more perfect Union, establish justice, insure domestic tranquillity, provide for the common defense, promote the general welfare, and secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and our posterity." These are likewise the earnest desire of the Filipino people, but the religious orders constitute an element which are visibly opposed to the Filipino people securing such noble ends.

It seems unnecessary to record here that the abuses committed by the religious orders against the Filipino people were what brought about the bloody struggles of the past, and are the cause of the deep hatred existing between the Filipinos and the friars, continuously and at this very time fed by two very serious reasons, which are the contentions with respect to the administration of the wealthy Filipino parishes, and the controversies as to the ownership of the great estates situated in several provinces of the archipelago.

Through the causes above set forth there occurred a short time ago several mobs or disturbances, which were settled peaceably, thanks to the tact and prudence of the American authorities, especially of the civil governor, Mr. Taft, but such disturbances may be repeated with frequency and be converted into violent commotions, as has happened in the past, so long as the cause of the evil shall continue.

For this reason the Federal party believes it to be its duty to make known to the Congress the existence of so grave and transcendental an evil, in order that, acting within its sovereign authority, it may be pleased to take the steps best suited to attacking them at the root, especially recommending the course suggested by Governor Taft in his various reports, without prejudice to the rights asserted by the pueblos.

Another of the great aspirations of the country is the obtention of a general and complete amnesty.

In the pacified portions of the Philippine Islands there are to-day thousands of prosecutions brought against the revolutionists who have surrendered and submitted to American sovereignty, for acts of violence committed by the said revolutionists while they were in the field and prior to their surrender

Clear it is that the said prosecutions are taken cognizance of by the military as well as the ordinary courts, and it is also clear that in the trials thus instituted the apprehending and arrest of the accused are ordered.

This legal procedure, which at the beginning did not cause any uneasiness, is now, by reason of the great number of accusations, beginning to be a menace to peace, because a majority of the ex-revolutionists, becoming alarmed by the news of approaching prosecution spread by the periodicals inimical to peace, came in under the protection of the authorities, but some have already taken refuge abroad, and others have taken themselves to the field, to the extent that one insurrecto general who had previously surrendered (General Lacuna) hid himself again in the forest because of the news published by said periodicals that he was to be rearrested. Thanks to the wisdom of the authorities, General Lacuna was prevailed upon to come back within the law.

The Federal party ought to add to the foregoing that there are many revolutionists who have submitted themselves to the American sovereignty, who are now deported to distant islands or are undergoing sentences in jails and prisons, the families, relatives, and friends of whom are now suffering the greatest sorrow and many are in want.

All this accumulation of evils, some justifiable and others not, likewise produce a very great obstacle to complete pacification, by reason of which there has been awakened a general aspiration for the complete amnesty and the forgetfulness of the past, excepting, of course, for crimes of murder of women and children.

The Federal party also complied with its duty by bringing to the notice of Congress this desire of the Filipino people and recommending its granting.

The third great aspiration of the Filipinos is to secure a prompt and efficacious remedy for the want of money, which shall respond, under the best possible conditions, to the requirements of agriculture.

Agriculture is the sole basis of the private and public wealth of the Philippine Islands, where industry and commerce have not had favorable opportunities to grow in the past.

The five years of war through which the country has passed, together with the great evils of the rinderpest and floods, have destroyed the best and most necessary aids of the splendid agriculture of the Philippines by exhausting the money of the pueblos, the majority of which have been burned.

We have to-day the field fallow, and the field hands inactive, for there are no working animals, nor money to buy them; nor is there money to defray the other expenses of cultivation and farm work. This lack of money and the resultant paralyzation of agriculture occasion the evils of highwaymen and famine, which produce personal insecurity in unpopulated places, evils that can only be remedied through the undertaking of great public works, such as the construction and repair of roads, bridges, and public buildings, and the establishment of agricultural banks under the direction and responsibility of the provincial governments themselves, which shall make loans under the favorable conditions of long terms, small payments, and low interest, secured by mortgages.

For this reason the Federal party believes it also to be its duty to suggest to the Congress, in order to remedy this evil known by the name of the metallic crisis, the granting of authority to the present government to negotiate a loan at a fair interest, amortizable gradually within fifty years, to be secured by the insular, provincial, and municipal revenues of the Philippines.

The fourth of the great aspirations of the country is to obtain from the Congress the approval of all the acts of the Civil Commission of the United States in these islands, presided over by the Hon. Mr. Taft, because the country is convinced of the great benefits accruing to the pueblos and provinces through the laws enacted by the said Commission.

In fact, when it is remembered that in a little over a year the honorable Commission has personally visited and organized the principal provinces of the archipelago, endowing them with the provincial and municipal codes; that it has, moreover, reorganized the courts of justice, promulgating a new Code of Civil Procedure, and is now engaged in wisely spreading the civil rule which it established on the 4th of July of this year by order of the Secretary of War, the Hon. Mr. Root, we Filipinos would be very ungrateful were we not to recognize in the honorable executors of the never to be forgotten Mr. William McKinley the blessings of liberty so often promised to the Filipinos by that unfortunate and ever loved President.

The last general aspiration is based on the intentions of the American Government to apply the money captured from the former Filipino government to the purposes most beneficial to the people of the Philippine Islands, the real providers of such money—an intention which seems evident from the annexed "concessions" granted Señor Felipe Buencamino on June 28, 1900, by Major-General MacArthur, commanding general and military governor in the Philippines—in order to secure the pacification of the insurgents in arms.

The Federal party suggests to the Congress the creation with said money of a trust fund, to be devoted to encouraging higher education among the Filipinos in the most practical and advisable way.

A board of trustees selected from among the most prominent Filipinos should administer the said fund, applying it to the said purpose.

ORIGIN AND GROWTH OF THE FEDERAL PARTY.

MANILA, May 14, 1901.

Maj. Gen. ARTHUR MACARTHUR,
Military Governor in the Philippines, Manila, P. I.

GENERAL: After the outbreak of hostilities between the American and the Filipino troops, in February, 1898, those of us in Manila sought to constitute a party which, accepting American sovereignty, could bring about peace and permit the Filipinos under those conditions to petition the United States for such rights and privileges as they might desire, by the employment of lawful means.

At that time a sort of delirium possessed all minds; men who reasoned dispassionately were rare, and the majority, almost the entirety, of Filipinos believed that their ideals of independence were of easy realization.

The Filipinos did not know the United States, except through the proclamations, the speeches, and the orders of the Spanish authorities, and articles published in the Spanish press, in all of which the United States were presented as a threatening peril, not only to liberty, but also to civilization, religion, and the family. These means were also used for inculcating a belief in the debility and impotence of the United States for a struggle with the Filipinos.

This was, as you are aware, the reason for the immense lack of confidence felt toward the United States by the Filipinos, and their feeling of absolute security that they could overcome their great adversary in a struggle.

In order to bring about peace it was necessary to wait with patience and confidence for the course of events to demonstrate to the Filipinos how erroneous were their beliefs. The lesson so experienced was long, and, unfortunately, cost the ruin of this country and many human lives.

The abuses of the men who wielded power in the Philippine camp and the injustice and discontent which prevailed everywhere demonstrated the impossibility of organizing an independent government; the triumph of American arms showed that the accusation of cowardice, which had been spread broadcast through the country in the time of Spanish domination, was nothing but a stupid calumny, and finally, the conduct of the Americans after their victories showed that they were not the cruel and wicked men they were accused of being by the Spanish civil, military, and religious authorities in official documents.

To some of us it appeared that this was an opportune occasion for forming a political party, and the preliminaries of the preparation of our platform were commenced. The principal civil leaders of the insurrection and some of the generals were already in Manila, some of them having surrendered and others having been captured by the Union forces, and had already acknowledged the sovereignty of the United States. This fact was favorable to the work undertaken, convincing the people that peace was an absolute necessity and that it would be the origin and starting point of a period of justice, during which liberty would gain the rights which could never be attained by force of arms.

Messrs. Buencamino, Dr. Frank S. Bourns, Ner, Argüelles, Dancel, Fabié, Yangco, Torres, Arellano, and others, full of faith and confidence in their success, undertook this work. Their efforts were crowned by the convocation of a meeting which was held on the 23d day of December, 1900. In that meeting, over which Mr. Florentino Torres presided, the manifesto of the Federal party was read, and a numerous gathering, among whom were numbers of Filipinos known for their anti-Americanistic tendencies and irreconcilable attitude toward American sovereignty, was informed of the nature of the platform of the party. The platform was adopted by all, and thus the Federal party was established.

I must confess, however, without desiring to offend the loyalty of anyone, that this brilliant result did not cause me a great deal of satisfaction.

We were living in Manila under a military régime, and it was but reasonable to suppose that many would associate themselves with the party in order that they might not appear publicly as enemies of the American Government. However, I was soon convinced of the real influence of the party and the sincerity of its members, not only on account of the rapidity of its growth in the provinces, but also by the more significant fact of the surrender of arms subsequently by many nationalists, who, after acknowledging the sovereignty of the United States, identified themselves with us, declaring that they were giving up the armed struggle by reason of powerful influences exercised over them by the Federal party. Of these facts your excellency is doubtless fully aware.

For the purpose of forming committees in the different towns we sent into the provinces delegates with proper instructions for the purpose in hand, but so great was the effect produced by our party that in many towns committees were formed prior to the arrival of the delegates, and enthusiastic adhesions were spontaneously made on every hand.

The first material demonstration of the importance of the Federal party was brought to my notice while accompanying the Civil Commission on its journey through the provinces of Pampanga, Tarlac, and Pangasinan, where, thanks to the preparatory work of the party, a representative element composed of the best classes of those provinces made for the first time a public manifestation of sympathy, confidence, and adhesion to the sovereignty of the United States. And these demonstrations were of great utility, for, in addition to spreading in the Philippines a new sentiment, they served to convince other Filipinos that it was already possible to demonstrate their loyalty to the new sovereignty without endangering their lives.

On the 22d of February last your excellency had evidence of the Americanized sentiments of the Federals in Manila when you were present at that memorable manifestation on the Luneta, where more than 7,000 men of every class of society joyfully hailed the name of Washington and rendered homage as enthusiastic as sincere to the American banner.

In the journeys which the Commission subsequently made to the two provinces which had been most obstinately insurgent, Bulacan and Bataan, we were able to observe at that time that our party had established peace and confidence among their inhabitants. On the journey made through the southern part of the archipelago by the Civil Commission, in which I was invited to join them as president of the Federal party, the honorable Commission saw—and you have also been informed, no doubt, of the same thing by your military subordinates—that our supporters have done all that they could or should do to assist the work of the government.

In provinces where but few or no foreigners are found our committees were formed rapidly, and they succeeded in overcoming the general disconfidence of the people; but in those provinces wherein foreigners (Spaniards) reside we have had to overcome not a few difficulties, for they are not only spreading ideas which tend to incite disconfidence, but, moreover, seek to convey to the members of our party a belief that when peace is reestablished the American Government will persecute the Federals in order to totally destroy a peaceful Philippine body politic after having annihilated their armed forces.

The name which we have given our party served the Spanish press of this capital as a pretext to stimulate the chauvinistic spirit of the Filipinos to the end that another party be organized to oppose us, which, instead of aspiring to federation, should look toward independence.

Such an attitude has strengthened our party and given us an opportunity to demonstrate to the Filipinos that nothing can be so beneficial to them as the complete adoption of American civilization with the hope of some day being admitted as one of the States of the Union.

After peace is established, all our efforts will be directed to Americanizing ourselves; to cause a knowledge of the English language to be extended and generalized in the Philippines, in order that through its agency the American spirit may take possession of us, and that we may so adopt its principles, its political customs, and its peculiar civilization that our redemption may be complete and radical.

Our undertaking will not be an easy one; the ancient domination inculcated in our spirit, customs, and habits, which can not be easily changed; but just as the Filipinos saw by experience that they had been deceived in supposing that independence was possible, and in believing the calumnies which were heaped upon the Americans, now they will also learn by experience that the progress and civilization of our country depends upon a complete assimilation of the American spirit.

The routine and spirit of tradition which is peculiar to countries not in an advanced stage of civilization and an erroneous idea concerning our own history are reasons which have led certain Filipinos to adopt the idea of retaining as useful and glorious the enervated form of civilization left us by the former domination. Nevertheless, when passions are somewhat allayed, common sense will not be long in showing that the past domination fell because it represented miserable vestiges of a worn-out and incomplete civilization, and that now only it can be said that the Filipinos have an opportunity of becoming completely civilized, guided by a nation truly capable of civilizing and of conferring upon other peoples the benefits of its institutions and customs.

The Filipino people have an insatiable thirst for learning, a thirst for justice, and their tenacious resistance to the sovereignty of the United States was due solely to the fear that the abuses and vexations of the ancient domination would be continued by the new. Whenever the Government of the United States organizes public instruction and the administration of justice gives satisfaction to all those who appear to defend their rights, then we shall see what the feelings of our people will be toward the new sovereignty.

The Federal party believes in America. It believes in the Philippines. It rests assured that America, in a day not far distant, will give to the Filipinos all the rights which are enjoyed by the inhabitants of the Columbian continent, and also trusts that the Filipinos, within a very short time, will realize their true interests and will enter without reserve or suspicion upon the path which the Federal party has pointed out to them. Inspired in the American spirit, adopting the English language, reading and thinking as Americans, unto them it is given to demonstrate sooner or later to the Republic of the United States that they are capable and worthy of forming part of the great Federation.

The history of the American people, the aptitude of Filipinos for civilization, and the observation of events which have taken place in the Philippines from 1896 to the present time justify the assertion that the Americanization of the Philippines will be more rapid than is believed by the most optimistic, and that as a consequence the triumph of the ideal of our Federal party will be complete.

I send herewith a statement which shows the organization of the committees day by day from January to the latter part of April. There are many committees which have been organized in the provinces of the existence of which we have not yet received in the secretary's office any official notification, because they forward the notification of the organization of their committee to the headquarters of the province, and the latter does not always notify Manila as promptly as we would like.

I also send you a note of the approximate number (exact minimum figure) of our members, as also résumé of the surrenders of armed men which have been accomplished through the efforts of the party.

Your very respectful servant,

H. PARDO DE TAVERA.

OFFICE OF THE UNITED STATES MILITARY GOVERNOR IN THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS,
Manila, P. I., July 2, 1900.

The military governor is prepared to assure the native citizens of the Philippine Islands that the following provisions will be embodied in any form of civil government established in the archipelago by the United States:

1. No person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law.

2. Private property shall not be taken for public use without just compensation.

3. In all criminal prosecutions the people shall enjoy the right of a speedy public trial; to be informed of the nature and cause of the accusations; to be confronted with the witnesses against them; to have compulsory process of obtaining witnesses in their behalf, and to have assistance of counsel in their defense. Excessive bail shall not be required; excessive fines shall not be imposed, nor cruel or unusual punishments inflicted.

4. No person shall be put twice in jeopardy for the same offense, or be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself.

5. Unreasonable search and seizure shall not be practiced.

6. Neither slavery nor involuntary servitude shall exist except as a punishment for crime.

7. No bill of attainder or ex post facto law shall be passed.

8. No law shall be passed abridging the freedom of speech or of the press or of the rights of the people to peacefully assemble and petition the government for a redress of grievances.

9. No disqualification to holding office, either civil or military, in the government hereafter to be established under the sovereignty of the United States in these islands, shall arise from service in the insurgent army.

10. As, under the Constitution of the United States complete religious freedom is guaranteed, and no minister of religion can be interfered with or molested in following his calling in a peaceful or lawful manner, and there must be complete separation of church and state, so here the civil government of these islands hereafter to be established will give the same security to the citizens thereof and guarantee that no form of religion shall be forced by the government upon any community or upon any citizen of the islands; that no minister of religion in following his calling in a peaceful and lawful manner shall be interferred with or molested by the government or any person; that no public funds shall be used for the support of religious organizations or any member thereof; that no official process shall be used to collect contributions from the people for the support of any church, priest, or religious order; that no minister of religion, by virtue of his being a minister, shall exercise any public or governmental office or authority, and that the separation of church and state must be complete and entire.

In his individual capacity the military governor makes himself responsible for the following:

1. Upon the complete cessation of hostilities and the surrender of all arms now in the hands of the Filipino army, the private property now in the possession of the United States shall be returned, upon due identification, to the individual owners or adequate rent paid for the use thereof, provided that the owners in each case take the prescribed oath of allegiance. This shall not involve the payment of damages for property heretofore used, destroyed or consumed.

2. All money now held in these islands or in the hands of any Filipino agent in Hongkong or elsewhere for the use of the insurgent army shall, upon being deposited in the United States treasury in the city of Manila, become a trust for the benefit of the widows and orphans of insurgent soldiers killed in battle or who may have died from disease contracted in the service since the 4th day of February, 1899, and for the assistance of the disabled soldiers of such army. The said trust fund shall be distributed by a committee of Filipinos, to be appointed by the United States military governor upon the recommendation of General Aguinaldo or such other high authority as may be satisfactory to all concerned.

The committee thus appointed to hold its meetings and perform its functions under the advice and control of the military governor, the action of the committee in all particulars to be subject to the approval of the military governor. In consideration of the deposit of the funds as described above, the commanding general of the United States forces and military governor will release all claim to the possession and enjoyment of such funds in behalf of the United States, and further agrees to turn over to the committee above described, for the same purpose, the money which the Army of the United States has captured from the insurgent forces, provided that the amount so turned over by the military governor shall not in any event exceed the amount captured by the United States forces during the period of hostilities.

ARTHUR MACARTHUR,
Major-General, United States Volunteers,
Military Governer in the Philippines.

Mr. HOAR. Let it be printed also as a document.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts asks that the papers be also printed as a document. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. LODGE. I will state to the Senator from Georgia that the signed memorials are at the War Department. I will ask to have them sent down. They fill a large packing case.

Mr. BACON. I do not wish to be misunderstood. Under the motion which was made, if there were a large number of names, it might unduly encumber the RECORD. That was the only object I had in view.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, I think it but right that the significance of this communication should be especially called to the attention of the Senate. It is a communication from the Federal party of the Philippine Islands, named "A message to the Congress of the United States of America accorded in extraordinary assembly, November, 1901, at Manila."

It may be regarded as the utterances of three members of the United States Philippine Commission. It is recognized, and has been stated by General Taft, that this Federal party has been the chief mainstay of his Commission in securing peace, so far as peace exists, in the Philippine Islands, where the Army has done its work and surrendered the islands or a portion of the islands to the control of the civil authorities.

The statement made by the Federal party is a part of, or at least is printed in connection with, the report of the Philippine Commission to the Secretary of War. It is signed by three members of the Philippine Commission. Being the mainstay of the peace party in the Philippine Islands, being the chief instrument in securing consent on the part of the Filipinos to American rule, it is of the utmost importance to understand what the Federal party declares, what its platform is, and what it holds out to the Filipino people.

To the members of the Federal party the position of an independent State in the American Union is the equivalent of an independent government; and I am inclined to think that if the American Congress was to declare that the archipelago would be given statehood, with all the rights and privileges and protection that are given to American States and the inhabitants thereof, it would have almost as soothing an effect as a declaration that they should be granted their independence.

This Federal party has met with the success that has attended its efforts, has brought accessions to the peace party in the islands under a declaration and a pledge that it stands for statehood in the American Union; and I take it that if the Republican party should make known their purpose that in this generation and probably in the next they do not intend to give statehood to the Philippine Islands, you would find that the Filipinos who have rallied to the American standard and to the cause of peace in the Philippine Islands would leave as rats desert a sinking ship.

Mr. President, let me call your special attention to the declaration of the Federal party, the declaration that has brought into its ranks the boasted numbers as described by gentlemen upon the other side. Under the head of part first comes the petition for annexation and for a government.

The Federal party has made an exhaustive study of the sentiments of the Filipino people as well as those animating the American people with respect to determining the future of these islands.

From the mass of data which the Federal party has had before it, and seriously and formally considered, it is clearly deduced that the intention of the Americans and Filipinos is to constitutionally join the Philippines to America in such a way that the former may never be separated from the latter nor the latter disunited from the former.

"In order to form a more perfect union, establish justice, insure domestic tranquillity, provide for the common defense, promote the general welfare, and secure the blessings of liberty" are the principles in which the policy which should be followed in the Philippines should be inspired without the loss of a moment.

To make of the Philippines—

Mark this language—

To make of the Philippines a colony of the United States or to grant independence to the Philippines would be to hand the islands over to disorder and to anarchy, to destruction and to chaos.

Either "to make of the Philippines a colony of the United States or to grant them independence"—this Federal party places both these propositions upon the same footing—"would be to hand the islands over to disorder and to anarchy, to destruction and to chaos." As I understand it, it is as a colony the Filipinos are to be held. Let the party declare that such is its purpose; let its course be such as to convince the Filipinos that that is the purpose of the Administration, then, in the opinion of three members of the United States Philippine Commission, it "would be to hand the islands over to disorder and to anarchy, to destruction and to chaos."

In effect the colonial system—involves the principles of difference of citizenship, inequality of rights, and other consequent abuses and injustices, of all of which we Filipinos were surfeited under the Spanish Government, and for this reason we rejected everything which tends toward a colony.

The party says—

Will the Senators upon the other side take warning by this notice? The chief mainstay upon which the peace party has rested in the Philippines is this Federal party, and this Federal party has told the Filipino people that there will be no colonial system, but that they will be the inhabitants of an independent State in the Federal Union.

Philippine independence, with or without a protectorate, means the holding of power by all the terrible elements of the sects which predominate, and would predominate still for some years, until the anger of Filipinos toward Filipinos shall have been completely calmed, education become more general, and the fanaticism we have inherited from Spain exiled.

The same thing they say by inference, if they shall be held as a colony or if the principles of colonialism shall govern the relations between the Philippine Islands and the United States.

Federation or annexation would settle all these difficulties by concentrating the interest of the Philippine people upon education and labor, the most efficient means for bringing about a prompt uplifting.

The Federal party can assure the Congress that the foregoing is the true opinion of the best elements and greater part of the Filipinos, as is evidenced by the annexed report of the Federal party, which was made by direction of General MacArthur and which has all the character of an official document.

In behalf, then, of the Federal party, this convention has the honor to very respectfully present to the Congress the following petition, praying a—

Declaration by the Congress of the United States to the effect that Philippine Islands as they are described in the treaty of Paris and subsequent conventions with Spain are an integral part of the Republic of the United States of North America, the said Philippine Islands constituting a Territory with the rights and privileges which the Constitution of the United States grants to the other Territories, such as that of becoming eventually a State of the Union.

I say to the Senators upon the other side, there is the alternative, a Territory under the Constitution, with all the rights that the citizens of the existing Territories now enjoy under the Constitution, eventually to become a State, or else the islands once more to revert to anarchy, to give life to the war party, to necessitate the enlisting of more soldiers and the sending of greater armies over to the islands for their ultimate and complete subjugation, if that is possible.

This country should be frank with the Filipinos. They should know whether they are intended for statehood, whether they are to receive a Territorial form of government under the protection of the Constitution, or whether they are to resort to the last avenue that is open to those who aspire for liberty and love independence.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. LODGE. Unless some Senator desires to go on at this time, I move that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, February 13, 1902, at 12 o'clock meridian.

CONFIRMATION.

Executive nomination confirmed by the Senate February 12, 1902.

POSTMASTER.

William B. McIlhenny, to be postmaster at Gettysburg, in the county of Adams and State of Pennsylvania.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, February 12, 1902.

The House met at 12 o'clock m.

The following prayer was offered by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.:

Almighty and most merciful God, whose ways are past finding out, yet who reignest supreme, we are carried back in thought to-day to those years of civil strife when the land ran red with blood, and we are reminded of that strong, rugged, patient, tender-hearted, loving man whom Thou raised up and brought in an opportune moment out of obscurity to be the nation's savior. We thank Thee for his life, for his deeds, and above all for his great sterling character. We thank Thee that that strife is over; that if there was malice it is gone, if there was animosity it is buried, if there was hatred it has passed away; that we stand a united nation, with all our longings, hopes, and aspirations centered in one country, one flag, one God and Father of us all. Help us so to live that we shall be missed by our fellow-men when we are gone, for Thine is the kingdom and the power and the glory forever. Amen.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

OLEOMARGARINE BILL.

The SPEAKER. The question as affecting the bill H. R. 9266, the oleomargarine bill, now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. ALLEN] on the subject of the renovation of butter. The previous question has been ordered and the yeas and nays ordered on this amendment.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. Speaker, may we have the amendment read? There are so many that do not know what the amendment is. I ask for the reading of the amendment.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the amendment will again be reported.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, let us have order while it is being read.

The SPEAKER. The House will be in order.

The amendment was read, as follows:

SEC. 4. That the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized and required to cause a rigid sanitary inspection to be made from time to time, and at such times as he may deem necessary, of all factories and storehouses where butter is renovated; and all butter renovated at such places shall be carefully inspected in the same manner and to the same extent and purpose that meat products are now inspected. The quantity and quality of butter renovated shall be reported monthly. All renovated butter shall be designated as such by marks, brands, and labels, and the words "Renovated butter" shall be printed on all packages thereof in such manner as may be prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture, and shall be sold only as renovated butter. Any person violating the provisions of this section shall, on conviction thereof, be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall be fined not less than $50 nor more than $500, and imprisoned not less than one month nor more than six months.

The Secretary of Agriculture shall make all needful sanitary and other rules and regulations for carrying this section into effect; and no renovated butter shall be shipped or transported from one State to another, or to foreign countries, unless inspected as provided in this section.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 152, nays 126, answering "present" 9, not voting 69; as follows:

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I observe that I am paired with the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. TAYLER. I have voted aye, and I desire to withdraw my vote and be marked "present."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the gentleman's name.

The Clerk called Mr. BARTLETT's name, and he answered "present," as above recorded.

Mr. HOOKER. Mr. Speaker, I observe that a pair has been read of myself with the gentleman from New Jersey. It was only for yesterday and does not prevail to-day, and therefore should not be read.

The SPEAKER. The pair has been withdrawn.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on agreeing to all the other amendments in gross.

The question was taken, and all the other amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The question was taken; and the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I move to recommit the bill with instructions to report the minority bill as a substitute.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York moves to recommit the bill with instructions to report back the substitute bill.

Mr. WADSWORTH. And on that, Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman if that includes the amendment which has just been adopted by the House?

Mr. WADSWORTH. No, it does not, for it is not in the substitute bill. I am willing to have it in if it can be done by unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the instructions.

The Clerk read as follows:

To recommit the bill with instructions to report the following bill as a substitute:

A bill to amend sections 3 and 6 of an act entitled "An act defining butter, also imposing a tax upon and regulating the manufacture, sale, importation, and exportation of oleomargarine," approved August 2, 1886.

Be it enacted, etc., That sections 3 and 6 of an act entitled "An act defining butter, also imposing a tax upon and regulating the manufacture, sale, importation, and exportation of oleomargarine," approved August 2, 1886, be amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 3. That special tax on the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine shall be imposed as follows:

"Manufacturers of oleomargarine shall pay $600 per annum. Every person who manufactures oleomargarine for sale shall be deemed a manufacturer thereof.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the further reading of the bill may be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to dispense with the further reading of the proposed instructions.

Mr. TAWNEY. Pending that, Mr. Speaker, I rise to make a parliamentary inquiry. This proposition was voted on after consideration in Committee of the Whole and was defeated, and this is simply for the purpose of securing another vote on an amendment offered in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The House knows nothing about what was done in the Committee of the Whole except as was reported by the Chairman of the committee. Besides, the point of order would be too late. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

Mr. TAWNEY. I object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made, and the Clerk will continue with the reading.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

"Wholesale dealers in oleomargarine shall pay $480 per annum. Every person who sells or offers for sale oleomargarine in quantities greater than 10 pounds at a time shall be deemed a wholesale dealer therein; but a manufacturer of oleomargarine who has given the required bond and paid the required special tax, and who sells oleomargarine of his own production only at the place of its manufacture in the original packages, to which the tax-paid stamps are affixed, shall not be required to pay the special tax of a wholesale dealer on account of such sales.

"Retail dealers in oleomargarine shall pay $48 per annum. Every person who sells or offers for sale oleomargarine in quantities not greater than 10 pounds at a time shall be regarded as a retail dealer therein. And sections 3232, 3233, 3234, 3235, 3236, 3237, 3238, 3239, 3240, 3241, and 3243 of the Revised Statutes of the United States are, so far as applicable, made to extend to and include and apply to the special taxes imposed by this section, and to the persons upon whom they are imposed: Provided, That in case any manufacturer of oleomargarine commences business subsequent to the 30th day of June in any year, the special tax shall be reckoned from the 1st day of July in that year, and shall be $500."

"SEC. 6. That all oleomargarine shall be put up by the manufacturer for sale in packages of 1 and 2 pounds, respectively, and in no other or larger or smaller package; and upon every print, brick, roll, or lump of oleomargarine, before being so put up for sale or removal from the factory, there shall be impressed by the manufacturer the word 'Oleomargarine' in sunken letters, the size of which shall be prescribed by regulations made by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury; that every such print, brick, roll, or lump of oleomargarine shall first be wrapped with paper wrapper with the word 'Oleomargarine' printed on the outside thereof in distinct letters, and said wrapper shall also bear the name of the manufacturer, and shall then be put up singly by the manufacturer thereof in such wooden or paper packages or in such wrappers, and marked, stamped, and branded with the word 'Oleomargarine' printed thereon in distinct letters, and in such manner as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall prescribe, and the internal-revenue stamp shall be affixed so as to surround the outer wrapper of each 1 and 2 pound package: Provided, That any number of such original stamped packages may be put up by the manufacturer in crates or boxes, on the outside of which shall be marked the word 'Oleomargarine,' with such other marks and brands as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall, by regulations approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, prescribe.

"Retail dealers in oleomargarine shall sell only the original package to which the tax-paid stamp is affixed, and shall sell only from the original crates or boxes in which they receive the pound or two pound prints, bricks, rolls, or lumps; which said crates or boxes shall be, at all times, so placed as to expose to the customer the mark or brand affixed thereon by the requirements of this act.

"Every person who knowingly sells or offers for sale, or delivers or offers to deliver, any oleomargarine otherwise than as provided by this act, or contrary to the regulations of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue made in pursuance hereof, or who packs in any package any oleomargarine in any manner contrary to law, or who shall sell or offer for sale, as butter, any oleomargarine, colored or uncolored, or who falsely brands any package or affixes a stamp on any package denoting a less amount of tax than that required by law, shall be fined for the first offense not less than $100 nor more than $500 and be imprisoned not less than thirty days nor more than six months, and for the second and every subsequent offense shall be fined not less than $200 nor more than $1,000 and be imprisoned not less than sixty days nor more than two years."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from New York to recommit the bill with instructions.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 117, nays 162, answering "present" 9, not voting 68; as follows:

The bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. SHERMAN, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MAHON. I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering bills on the Private Calendar.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. OLMSTED in the chair, and proceeded to the consideration of the Private Calendar.

JERONEMUS S. UNDERHILL.

The CHAIRMAN. The first bill in order is the bill (H. R. 1795) for the relief of Jeronemus S. Underhill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the claim of Jeronemus S. Underhill for further compensation for the construction of the light-draft monitor Modoc may be submitted by said claimant, within six months after the passage of this act, to the Court of Claims under and in compliance with the rules and regulations of said court, and said court shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine and render judgment upon the same: Provided, however, That the investigation of said claim shall be made upon the following bases: The said court shall ascertain the additional cost which was necessarily incurred by the contractor for building the light-draft monitor Modoc in the completion of the same by reason of any changes or alterations in the plans and specifications required and delays in the prosecution of the work: Provided further, That such additional cost in completing the same and such changes or alterations in the plans and specifications required and delays in the prosecution of the work were occasioned by the Government of the United States; but no allowance for any advance in the price of labor or material shall be considered unless such advance could not have been avoided by the exercise of ordinary prudence and diligence on the part of the contractor: And provided further, That the compensation fixed by the contractor and the Government for specific alterations in advance of such alterations shall be conclusive as to the compensation to be made therefor: Provided, That such alterations, when made, complied with the specifications of the same as furnished by the Government aforesaid: And provided further, That all moneys paid to said contractor by the Government over and above the original contract price for building said vessel shall be deducted from any amounts allowed by said court by reason of the matters hereinbefore stated: And provided further, That if any such changes caused less work and expense to the contractor than the original plans and specifications, a corresponding deduction shall be made from any allowance which may be made by said court to said claimant.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, this bill is in terms exactly like the other bills which have passed this House in regard to claims that have been pending before the Department and Congress for years. The last Congress disposed of a few of these cases. If nobody desires to debate this bill, I ask that it be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. PAYNE. I should like a little more information about the bill.

Mr. MAHON. I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN].

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman from New York permit me to make a suggestion?

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. I observe that this bill and the one following it on the Calendar are exactly of the same character, and I suggest to the gentleman whether it might not save time to have both bills considered at the same time.

Mr. MAHON. I have no objection.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetes. Then I ask unanimous consent that the next bill be read and considered in connection with the pending bill.

Mr. CLAYTON. I object to that. I think that would be railroading things through too fast.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, after the historic and very remarkable victory of the Monitor over the Merrimac during the civil war it was thought advisable by the Navy Department to construct a large number of vessels somewhat similar to the Monitor, and in the year 1863 contracts were made providing for the construction of 20 such vessels, one of which was the Modoc, the vessel named in this bill.

After the letting of the contracts, the contractor was advised by a representative of the Navy Department that it was the desire of the Department to take advantage of the knowledge gained from the battles taking place from time to time, and from the experience derived from the action of vessels already constructed as to the value of this class of vessels, and that therefore it would be desirable that such changes as might be thought wise should be made from time to time in the specifications with reference to the vessels contracted for.

The contract with Mr. Underhill provided that this vessel should be begun in June, 1863, and should be finished in December of the same year, the contract price being $395,000. The contract contained the provision that $4,500 should be deducted for every month of delay in the completion of the work beyond the contract period, and an additional allowance of $4,500 for every month that might be saved in the time of the completion of this work would be paid the contractor, showing how important it appeared to the Government that this vessel should be completed at the earliest possible moment.

As a matter of fact the Modoc was not completed for eighteen months, or until June, 1865, or after the close of the war.

The specifications were materially changed in most important respects. There is no question—there never has been any question raised at any time—that the contractor in this case or in any similar case was in the slightest degree responsible for the delay from 1863 to 1865 in the completion of the vessel. The Department at all times assumed, and it assumes to-day, full responsibility for the delay that was caused.

Immediately after the contract was let, and in August, 1863, this contractor received from the representative of the Navy Department a letter in which the representative, Mr. Stimers, stated the following:

The building of ironclad steamers is a novelty in this country as in every other. It is therefore impossible to make a complete general plan and to write complete specifications at one date which will satisfy all the requirements subsequent experience and study point out, the more especially as the fleet already in service is actually engaged with the enemy and developing rapidly the weak points of the original constructor. The Navy Department, however, desires that vessels now completing shall have incorporated in them all the improvements which our experiences and study of the subject shall point out.

That course was followed and the plans were changed from time to time to a most material extent, and the contractor was absolutely stopped in the continuance of his work for months at a time.

In 1887, in response to an inquiry from the then chairman of the War Claims Committee, Mr. Butterworth, the representative of the Navy Department wrote a letter in which he stated the following. The letter is under date of January 27, 1887, and it says:

From the first the plans were continually changed and important modifications introduced, all in the direction of more expensive work and material and requiring longer time for execution. This increased length of time involved greatly increased cost of the work to the contractors, owing to the delay and rapidly increasing rise at that date in the cost of material and labor.

Let me inject right there, Mr. Chairman, that during the period from the letting of the contract to the completion of the work the price of iron increased from $60 per ton to $225 per ton, and the price of labor increased over 40 per cent. The letter continues:

The war was then at its height, and the Government was in the market for the whole mechanical resources of the country, which were not able to meet the demand upon them, and as a result the price of certain materials and labor used in the construction of ships and machinery rose abnormally high above even the general increase of prices.

I might elaborate to a considerable extent upon this branch of the subject and demonstrate conclusively, beyond the possibility of doubt, that the Navy Department assumes every particle of responsibility for all delay and admit that that delay caused by them involved an enormous additional cost to the contractor.

Now as to the compensation. There have been three boards provided to examine into this subject. The first—the Gregory board, appointed by the Secretary of the Navy—allowed certain additional amounts to this contractor and other contractors. These amounts allowed were paid, but they provided simply for payments to the contractor at the contract prices for the additional amount of labor and material that went into this work, disregarding absolutely the question of the advance in the material and advance in labor at a time beyond the period when the contract work would have been completed had the contractor been allowed to proceed with his work without interference from the Navy Department.

After the close of the war another board was appointed in pursuance of a resolution by the Senate, called the Selfridge board, and before the board certain claimants presented their claims for additional compensation, and this claimant was invited to present his. For the reason that his work had not then been accepted this claimant did not present to the Selfridge board any claim, so that whatever action the Selfridge board may have taken it had no effect whatever upon the case which we are now considering.

Thereafter, in 1867, in pursuance of Congressional action, there was appointed a board, called the Marchand board, and before that board the claims of these several contractors was presented, and the claim of this contractor, Mr. Underhill, was presented before that board, and that board made a finding.

The resolution providing for the formation of that board specifically stated and defined its duties. They were called upon to report to Congress a tabulated statement in each case, which should contain the "name of the contractor, the description of the work, the contract price, the whole increased cost of the work over the contract price, and the amount of increased cost caused by the delay and action of the Government aforesaid, and the amount already paid the contractor over the contract price."

Before that board this claimant, Underhill, presented his claim. That board made a report. The report did not comply with the terms of the resolution. That board did not make findings that the resolution required it to make; but, on the contrary, it made a tabulated report which contained the whole increased cost of the work over the contract price (that is what the resolution provided), as claimed by the contractor, not as proved before them; not as adjudged by them to have been proved, but simply the amount claimed by the contractor; or, in other words, simply made a tabulation of the claims made before them by the several contractors, this contractor among them.

The resolution provided that the amount of such increased cost caused by the delay and action of the Government should be stated. Now, the board, instead of making findings as specifically required to do—finding the amount of such increased cost caused by the action of the Government as determined by this board to be due upon the matter which had been in fact submitted to them—they never took actual proof.

So that we come down to the present time without ever having any adjudication of this particular case as to the merits of the claim of this contractor for the additional cost to him of completing the work in its changed, altered, enlarged condition, an additional cost brought about, not by changes of the contract of the specifications, but more particularly in the delay caused by the Government in the completion of this work; and this bill simply provides that this contractor be allowed to go to the Court of Claims and prove before that court what the additional cost was by reason of the Government causing delay in the completion of that work, in the change of the specifications, the delay which caused the additional cost of materials, additional price of labor; and with the provision in the bill now the Court of Claims shall take into consideration whether that additional cost for labor and material might have been avoided by the use of the reasonable care and foresight that should have been exercised by a prudent business man.

Mr. SIMS. I want to ask the gentleman a few questions, and I think it will develop the facts better than any speech. Now, in the first place, these contractors got all the Government agreed to pay them. Is that not correct?

Mr. SHERMAN. They got all the Government agreed to pay them for work the Government originally contracted to receive at fixed prices, but they had agreed to finish the work before a certain time, when the price for the materials which they agreed to furnish were from 40 to 200 per cent less than they had to pay because of the delay.

Mr. SIMS. The Government changed the specifications, which caused the delay?

Mr. SHERMAN. They did; and there was further delay while waiting developments.

Mr. SIMS. Now, then, was not the question of additional cost caused by reason of these delays considered and paid for by the Secretary of the Navy?

Mr. SHERMAN. This was paid by the Government, and this only. The Government considered the amount of additional material and additional labor that went into that work at the prices fixed by the contract, and that price covered a period from June, 1863, to December, 1863, while in fact the material and the work were furnished not from June to December, 1863, but down to June, 1865, after the close of the war, and after the time that the material and labor increased in price from 50 to 200 per cent.

Mr. SIMS. I understand that you admit that the Government did pay the additional compensation?

Mr. SHERMAN. Admit that the Government paid some additional compensation; yes.

Mr. SIMS. Is not that the usual way for the Department to do about these things?

Mr. SHERMAN. It is the usual way that the Department does these things.

Mr. SIMS. When the contractors take these contracts do they not take them with due notice that such will be the case?

Mr. SHERMAN. That was not done in this case. There was no such provision in the contract, and nothing of the kind was suggested.

Mr. SIMS. Was not that question submitted to the Gregory board by the contractors?

Mr. SHERMAN. This claimant submitted nothing to the Gregory board at all.

Mr. SIMS. The Gregory board of the Navy Department considered all these cases. I understood you to say that this was submitted to the Selfridge board.

Mr. SHERMAN. Neither the Selfridge board nor the Gregory board considered this case. The Marchand board considered this claim.

Mr. SIMS. I understood that this case was submitted to the Gregory board.

Mr. SHERMAN. I beg your pardon. I misspoke myself. The Gregory board did consider Mr. Underhill's contract, and they did make him an allowance.

Mr. SIMS. What did the Gregory board base that on.

Mr. SHERMAN. They based it on the amount of the additional material and the additional work required to do the contract work at the contract price, disregarding the element of time.

Mr. SIMS. Did they not make an award for an additional price over and above the contract?

Mr. SHERMAN. They made an award for additional material and additional labor that went into the work at contract prices, but not at the prices that existed at the time the labor was done and the material furnished.

Mr. SIMS. Was not that paid accordingly?

Mr. SHERMAN. No, sir; it never has been paid.

Mr. SIMS. The amount that the Gregory board found was paid?

Mr. SHERMAN. Oh, yes.

Mr. SIMS. Now, then, did not the contractor sign a receipt in full of all demands when he got that pay?

Mr. SHERMAN. I think not. I think he has never signed a receipt in full. In any event, this bill provides that whatever he has received shall be credited to the Government when this is adjudicated.

Mr. SIMS. Did he not only accept the award but sign a receipt in full of all claims?

Mr. SHERMAN. He signed a receipt, but I do not know whether it stated "in full" or not. I have not a copy of it. Perhaps my friend from Pennsylvania can tell you.

Mr. SIMS. Did he not afterwards lay his matter before the Marchand board, and did not they find that nothing was due him?

Mr. SHERMAN. They did; but that question was never submitted to the Marchand board. The Marchand board had no right to pass upon that question. They had no authority to pass on the amount due him. The Marchand board was authorized to examine and report on such increased cost caused by the delay and action of the Government; that is all. But that is not what they found.

Mr. SIMS. That was what was submitted to them.

Mr. SHERMAN. That was what was submitted to them to ascertain. They reported the amount as determined by the Marchand board to be due. The Marchand board had no authority to determine anything of that kind. Nobody knows what the Marchand board took into consideration or how they reached their conclusions upon the evidence they had before them.

Mr. SIMS. What was the report of the Marchand board on this claim?

Mr. SHERMAN. They reported that the board determined nothing to be due. They say "the amount of such increased cost caused by the delay and action of the Government as determined by this board to be due"—"nothing."

Mr. SIMS. The Marchand board was a board appointed by the Navy Department?

Mr. SHERMAN. Under a resolution of Congress.

Mr. SIMS. And that board has acted upon it and reported nothing due?

Mr. SHERMAN. Nothing of the kind. It did not report in accordance with the resolution. It went beyond its authority and reported something not submitted to it, and reported upon something that nobody asked them to report upon, and nothing was submitted as evidence in proof of what they found.

Mr. THOMAS of Iowa. Will the gentleman from New York permit a suggestion?

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly.

Mr. THOMAS of Iowa. Was not the Marchand board appointed by a joint resolution of both Houses, and not by the Senate alone?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes. It was the Selfridge board that was created only by the Senate resolution.

Mr. THOMAS of Iowa. Now, if the gentleman will pardon one further question. Did not the Baldwin court subsequently take this question into consideration, as well as the former board?

Mr. SHERMAN. The Baldwin board? The one preceding a bill which General Grant vetoed, does the gentleman mean?

Mr. THOMAS of Iowa. I think so.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Marchand board is the last one that considered the Modoc claim.

Mr. THOMAS of Iowa. I do not remember whether this was the one subsequent to the Marchand board or not. It was appointed by the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think the Marchand board is the last board that considered this claim.

Mr. SIMS. Now the reason I am asking the gentleman these questions is to develop the facts in the case, because there are two or three claims like this, and this will avoid a discussion of them, and we want to understand it. I do not want to make any speech, but I want the facts to come out.

Mr. SHERMAN. There is no one more desirous than I am to let the real facts be known to the House in their entirety, so that whatever action is taken shall be understandingly.

Mr. HAMILTON. Will not the gentleman from New York restate what this claim is?

Mr. SHERMAN. This claim is to permit the contractor for the construction of the Modoc to go before the Court of Claims and there prove what additional cost this work was to him by reason of the fact that the United States delayed him in the completion of the work. During the period covered by the delay, an additional year or more, the price of labor and material advanced from 40 to 200 or 300 per cent, and for that advanced cost, caused solely and admittedly by everybody by the act of the Government, this claimant asks to be reimbursed, and that is all there is in this case.

Mr. HAMILTON. Whatever reimbursement is had——

Mr. SHERMAN. The bill provides that he shall be charged in the settlement of the case with all that he has heretofore been paid——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. SHERMAN. Was I not recognized without limitation as to time?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood that time was yielded to the gentleman from New York by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MAHON].

Mr. MAHON. How much more time does the gentleman want?

Mr. SHERMAN. No doubt five minutes will be sufficient.

Mr. MAHON. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. SIMS. I want to ask the gentleman from New York this question: If we pass this bill or any bill like it, in which we give compensation for increased cost of material due to delay, will it not establish the precedent that the contractor in such cases takes no risk of that sort and that the Government in all these cases must pay?

Mr. SHERMAN. It establishes no precedent, for the precedent has already been established by at least three former Congresses in passing bills in which the principle involved was identical with this.

Mr. SIMS. I want to state very frankly to the gentleman from New York that I do not believe these other bills ought to pass, nor this one; but I want to say in all candor that I think this claim is just as good as either of them, and the next two on the Calendar are just as good as this.

If we are bound by the action of former Congresses, it would be absolute injustice not to pass these bills; but I think former Congresses have established bad precedents. I shall vote against these bills.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have said all I desire to say. I move to lay the bill aside with a favorable recommendation, unless some other gentleman desires to be heard.

Mr. DE ARMOND addressed the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will say to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DE ARMOND] that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MAHON] has control of the floor at present.

Mr. MAHON. How much time does the gentleman want? Will ten minutes suffice?

Mr. DE ARMOND. Yes, sir.

Mr. MAHON. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Chairman, I do not care to go into the details in relation to this bill. I desire merely to call the attention of the Committee of the Whole to the general policy involved. This claim is nearly forty years old. According to the statement of the gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN] there was opportunity to have it passed upon by the Selfridge Board, but for some reason which the gentleman does not know, but which he ought to know, the claim was not presented.

The bill is a peculiar one in its phraseology and make-up. It binds the court to make just such investigation in just such a way as the claimant desires. The claim has been settled—settled more than once, settled a generation ago—and now it is to be referred to the Court of Claims to find certain things, after the evidence for the opposing side is doubtless gone, and when those things can be made to appear which will take $200,000 or $300,000 out of the Treasury, without any reference to the merits or demerits of the proposition.

There ought to be an end of these old claims. There ought to be a time when the people of the United States should no longer be called on to pay these huge claims, trumped up after everybody who knows the facts which would refute and overthrow them has passed off the stage of action or is no longer to be found.

This is an industry which thrives and flourishes. On the one side there is the promise—and if bills be drawn and passed as this is, the absolute assurance, without reference to merit—that anywhere from $100,000 to $1,000,000 can be taken out of the Treasury at no greater expense than that involved in getting testimony to make a sort of prima facie case. The bill makes no provision for the other side—the United States.

Now, while this process is going on, hundreds and thousands of meritorious claims, small in amount, and therefore not having behind them that machinery and force necessary to put them through—small claims in regard to the justice of which there can be no question—are allowed to lie by and to die. Small claimants go down to their graves, while the money is in the Treasury to pay them, and with no question as to their right to draw it from the Treasury, if a little legislation, as to the propriety of which there ought to be no question, were passed.

But such claims have to lie by. Year after year, generation after generation the claimants for small amounts go down in penury to their graves, while these huge claims, based upon no merit, grown over with the mold of years, claims settled and supposed to be out of sight long ago, are dug up now merely to filch something from the Treasury which does not belong to the claimants, and through they go.

Nobody can read this bill—with all deference to the gentleman who prepared it and the gentleman who reported it—nobody can read this bill without being satisfied that the purpose is really to tie the court, to put the court to the work of finding out certain things which the claimants wish to have found out, and to bar the court from the opportunity or right to find out other things which ought to be found out, and which if established, as they probably could be, would overthrow speedily every pretense of merit in this claim. I do not know that there is any use in discussing these things. I do not know that there is any use in calling the attention of the House to them. It is notorious that a large claim, backed by persons of strong influence, can get through here, no matter how greatly lacking in merit, while small claims depending upon merit alone have a very slender prospect.

For one I am opposed to any such legislation as this. There is no equity in it, there is no justice, there is no propriety in it. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN] says we will not be establishing a precedent, that three have been established. Again we have this sacred cry of precedent—a wrong once done is to be made the reason for the continuation of wrongdoing. It is a lame argument that gentlemen offer, a lame excuse that they bring forward when they have nothing better. "What is the reason for this action; what is the merit of this claim; what is the propriety of what you ask?" "Oh, there is a precedent for it." A precedent has been established, and in the sacred name of precedent raid the Treasury, tear down the bars that ought to be up for the protection of the people. Throw to the winds the old settlements made when the transactions were fresh and people knew all about them, and do reverence to the authority of precedent, and allow the claimant to have what he asks and in the way he asks it.

It is strange that this claim never came before the Selfridge board when everything was fresh, when people then living knew about it, and with records then at hand could easily have been brought forward to defeat an unjust claim. Then it was not thought advisable to bring it forward, but now, thirty-five or forty years after the transaction, a bill curiously framed, artfully framed, is to be put through the Congress, merely "submitting the claim to the Court of Claims, not providing for its payment, not appropriating a dollar out of the Treasury," gentlemen say, but leaving it to the Court of Claims in such a way and manner, with such questions only submitted, that the finding of the court, not according to equity and merit, but according to the case which the claimant makes for himself, can be but one way. For one I am opposed to it.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman from Missouri is a fair man, intelligent, and a good lawyer; and when he says there is no merit in these claims it shows that he has not given them the long, hard study necessary to enable him to get at all the facts.

Now, there are three of these claims on this Calendar; this and two more; and I am going to read a brief extract from the Hon. G. V. Fox, Assistant Secretary of the Navy, which is published in a document of this House, and which I think will satisfy the gentleman that these contractors are not to blame. This matter has been in the Navy Department and before these different boards, and if the claim is old it is not the fault of the contractor, who has been presenting it for forty years. It is the fault of the Government in not urging it to a more rapid passage. Now, this Congress has submitted bills in exactly the same terms. This is an exact copy of bills that the House and Senate have sent to the President, and that he has signed. The courts have examined other cases where the United States appeared by attorney, and after a fair, full hearing the court awarded to the claimants the amounts found to be due or else found that nothing was due.

This is a letter written December 15, 1864, by Hon. G. V. Fox, Assistant Secretary of the Navy, and addressed to the chairman of the Committee on the Conduct of the War:

Having accepted the undertaking to build these vessels, the several parties named made arrangements accordingly, having the yards, machinery, etc., necessary therefor, and entered into contracts for the necessary materials, based upon the contracts with the Government, and commenced the work on the several vessels named. About this time, Chief Engineer of the Navy Stimers having returned from Charleston, where he had been sent to make observations as to the conduct of Ericsson's monitors in battle, a consultation was had at the Navy Department, in which (quoting from Mr. Stimers's evidence)—

"The matter was discussed as to whether we had better build our vessels in strict accordance with the letter of the contracts which we were giving out, without any change whatever, or had better take advantage of every such fight and make improvements as we went along, although we fully appreciated that it would delay their completion and add to their cost. Assistant Secretary Fox made the remark that he thought following this course would probably entail an extra cost of a million of dollars for each battle where the monitors were engaged. Well, it was decided that that course should be followed. The contracts for the light-draft monitors, of which the Etlah was one, had already been drawn, specifications, general drawings, etc., of the original plans, but we went immediately to work to make changes on them in accordance with what I have already explained as the policy to be pursued. You will understand, therefore, why it was that I should send constant instructions to Mr. McCord, directing him to make his vessel different from what he had contracted to do; why I sent him drawings that differed from those specified in the contract. You will find, too, that these might be very material, as they certainly were. The acts, therefore, which I performed, which affected Mr. McCord and affect this case, were to direct him to make a different vessel from the one he contracted to do.

"Acting upon this theory, the Department commenced forwarding to the contractors orders for changes and drawings before even the keel was laid, and those changes, which in the aggregate affected all parts of the vessel, making in the end almost entirely different vessels, were continued, and the drawings furnished therefor for nearly a year and a half after the time specified in the contract for their completion had elapsed, and from the 23d of June, 1864, for about the period of three months, work was suspended altogether upon these vessels by the orders of the Navy Department, which had then in contemplation some general changes in their construction which required time to perfect. All of this time, however, the contractors were under heavy expenses for the maintenance of the yards and men, whom they dared not discharge for fear of inability to supply their places, and not knowing on what day their services would be required.

"In addition to all this, the prices of labor and materials required for the work, and for which the contractors had made provision during the time of the contracts, rapidly advanced, so that, as found by the Committee on War Claims of the first session of the Forty-third Congress, iron that at the date of the contracts was worth $65 per ton advanced during the prolonged time to $220 per ton, and labor from $2.50 per day to $4 per day.

This is the statement of the constructor and the designer of these ships. Now, all these people ask is that they shall be allowed to go into court and have this matter inquired into.

Mr. Chairman, I am ready for a vote.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I want to ask the gentleman how it is that this claim has been pending here for forty years and has not been paid, if it is a meritorious claim, as the gentleman asserts?

Mr. MAHON. Just as hundreds of others from your State have not been paid, which I will report in a bill after a while. Claims from your State have also been here for forty years for private individuals.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. If meritorious, then they should have been paid forty years ago.

Mr. MAHON. Yes; they have simply been delayed by the Government.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. They have been delayed because Congress has neglected to attend to the affairs of the people. We have not dealt out justice evenhanded throughout the different sections of the country; Congress has been partial; committeemen and committees have been partial, and the Government, although it has plenty of money to pay, rich as it is, is the slowest debtor of any concern or individual that pays at all. Such a record under such circumstances is a disgrace to the Government, and to the honest claimants an outrage; and Congress, this one and those of the past, have been the wrongdoers.

Mr. THOMAS of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MAHON. Yes.

Mr. THOMAS of Iowa. How much has already been paid over and above the amount of the contract price in this case?

Mr. MAHON. I want to say to the gentleman that this bill is not for the contract price. It does not ask that any money be paid by the Government. It is simply that these contractors shall have the question investigated as to the amount that is due them for the increase in the price of material and labor during the time that these boats were being built beyond the time when they would have been completed if the contractors had been allowed to go ahead and had not been delayed through the action of the Navy Department. And it is claimed that they have never been paid for the increased material or increased labor.

Mr. THOMAS of Iowa. I think I can gather the purpose of the bill from the bill itself, but I asked the gentleman a question for information, and I would like to get an answer.

Mr. MAHON. I can not tell you unless I were in the committee room.

Mr. THOMAS of Iowa. These men were to be paid over the contract price?

Mr. MAHON. They were paid the contract price. They were paid for the material and extra work done; but the Navy Department, or the boards of the Navy, felt that they were not authorized under the existing law to pay them for the increased price of labor and of material; and that is the way with all of these bills. They have sent them to Congress time and again, and one-half of them have been adjudicated; and the chairman of the Committee on War Claims thinks it is time to send these bills to the Court Claims and have an end to it.

Mr. THOMAS of Iowa. Was not there a complete settlement at one time?

Mr. MAHON. If you build a vessel for the Government and if the Navy Department determined to pay you $30,000, although it is $100,000 less than you are entitled to, with your men in your yards and needing the money, they would compel you under duress to sign a receipt in full or you have to wait for fifty years.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on laying the bill aside with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. DE ARMOND. I would like to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania a question. Why was not this matter put in some other form? If this matter is to be referred to the Court of Claims, why is it not referred so that it may be made subject to any defense that may be made against it?

Mr. MAHON. This bill provides fully, so that if these parties are found to owe the Government anything that can be considered too. It is the same bill that has been passed in Congress for the past ten or fifteen years.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Why do you not simply refer to the Court of Claims the claim of these men? You provide that the Court of Claims shall find as to certain things. Now, no doubt in a settlement there could be taken into account the fact, if a fact, that claimants had to pay more and did pay more for labor and more for material than had been contemplated. That may really be embraced in the settlement made, and made part and parcel of it, and yet under this bill the court may leave that entirely out of consideration.

Mr. MAHON. This subject has been carefully investigated by the Supreme Court. The Government is not restricted. There is full power to carry their case to the court. They can appeal to the Supreme Court on this whole matter, and certainly the gentleman from Missouri would not be afraid to trust the court.

Mr. DE ARMOND. But what I say is, the whole matter can not be heard. The bill does not refer the whole controversy to the Court of Claims, but as to whether a certain extra price was paid for labor and material, and how much, and then provides for a deduction from what already had been paid.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on laying the bill aside with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. I want to ask the gentleman one more question. Why was it not presented at the last Congress?

Mr. MAHON. We did present it at the last Congress.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Why was it not passed at the last Congress?

Mr. MAHON. This bill was reported, but it was not reached on the Calendar.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Was it not one of those large lot of bills that are brought over from one session to another?

Mr. MAHON. I have no interest in the bill, nor is it from my State. I simply bring it up as a matter reported from my committee.

Mr. DE ARMOND. I desire to ask the gentleman one further question. When did this claim first appear before Congress?

Mr. MAHON. This case was first brought up in the Fifty-first Congress and a favorable report was made on it by the Hon. David B. Culberson, a member of Congress, who presented a full and able report from the Committee on War Claims.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Recommending it at that time?

Mr. MAHON. This particular bill?

Mr. DE ARMOND. This particular bill. I understood it was for another purpose.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. With the permission of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, I would like to give to the gentleman from Missouri a possible explanation of the form of the bill. Upon the reading of the report on a like bill which is to follow, I find that during the delay, which was caused by the change in the plans, the men were there kept under employment for fear if they were dismissed from their employment they could not be regained for that work; and it may be, as the gentleman suggests, for this purpose this bill was expressed as it is; that it should be for such claim as they could maintain.

Mr. MAHON. The gentleman asked when this bill was introduced, and I said it was in the Fifty-first Congress. That was not this bill. I want to be fair. That was a similar bill. The first time this bill came was the Fifty-sixth Congress, and it was reported and placed on the Calendar of this House.

Mr. DE ARMOND. It came in after thirty years.

Mr. MAHON. It has been in the Navy Department all that time.

Mr. DE ARMOND. I want to suggest one other thing about the form of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York yield to the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. DE ARMOND. I would like to have a little time in my own right, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. MAHON. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. DE ARMOND. I only want a few minutes; I am not trying to consume time. I understand that this claim has been pending for thirty or forty years, and it seems to me there is no need of great dispatch. [Laughter.]

Mr. MAHON. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. DE ARMOND. Five minutes. I suppose I would have a right to take the floor myself in my own time unless the gentleman asks the previous question on the bill, and it is ordered.

Mr. MAHON. Oh, I would not do that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Chairman, I was going to offer a word or two about the form of the bill. I asked the gentleman why it took this form, but he has not told us. There is nothing in the form or substance of the bill that hampers the claimant in any particular; the only party hampered is the Government. There is nothing in this bill that would preclude the contractor from recovering for the amount paid out on account of increased wages and increased cost of material, although both of those things might have been comprehended in the settlement heretofore made. He might have been paid, might have accepted, and might have been contented with what was allowed him. The court is required to find out how much he paid for labor and material, by reason of delay, in excess of what he otherwise would have paid. It is not required to find out, and it is not permitted to find out, whether the excess payment for labor and material, if any, was comprehended in the settlement made and covered by the extra amount of money paid to him over the contract price.

Now, that is so remarkable a thing that one can hardly think it is a mere happen so. If this claim ought to be referred to the Court of Claims, it ought to be referred for investigation of the whole matter, not merely to find out how much more this claimant paid for labor and for material at a later period than he might have paid at an earlier one, but to determine on all the facts whether the Government really owes him anything in law or equity.

Now, if the object be to have a fair investigation, I see no objection to making the bill general in its terms. If the object is to insure a recovery, without regard to the right to recover, the bill, either by accident or design, is well calculated to accomplish that end.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I want to say a word or two.

Mr. MAHON. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. CANNON. Two minutes. As I understand it, and I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania if the bill is on all fours with what is known as the Selfridge board bills, a number of which have already been paid?

Mr. MAHON. The same principle is involved, except this bill includes nothing except the increase of material and labor.

Mr. CANNON. These bills I refer to——

Mr. MAHON. Include that with other matters.

Mr. CANNON. Well, so far as increase of the price of material and the price of labor is concerned this bill is on all fours with the bills referred to.

Mr. MAHON. Exactly.

Mr. CANNON. How many of them are left?

Mr. MAHON. Three bills before the Committee on War Claims and seven altogether. It appears that some of the owners have died, and we have not been hunting them up.

Mr. CANNON. There are these three, and then you say there are four more?

Mr. MAHON. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. Does that include all of the claims?

Mr. MAHON. All claims of this class. I am informed by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLLIDAY] that there are seven in both branches.

Mr. CANNON. And those seven include all there are?

Mr. MAHON. Yes; that is right.

Mr. THOMAS of Iowa. Does that include the Selfridge board claims?

Mr. MAHON. No; those are a different class. They have been passed upon by the Selfridge board. The Selfridge board has not passed on these claims.

Mr. CANNON. The Selfridge board was not a board that bound?

Mr. MAHON. No.

Mr. CANNON. Who has passed upon these claims?

Mr. MAHON. Nobody.

Mr. SIMS. The Marchand board has passed upon them.

Mr. MAHON. The Marchand board did not pass upon them. The gentleman is on the Committee on War Claims and he ought to know the authority of that board did not permit it to pass upon these claims.

Mr. SIMS. I will take the statement of the gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN].

Mr. MAHON. The gentleman from Tennessee ought not to be ignorant of the facts about the Marchand board.

Mr. SIMS. And the gentleman from Pennsylvania does not care to have me expose my familiarity with this matter——

Mr. MAHON. The gentleman can expose it as much as he pleases, and perhaps it will rebound very effectually.

Mr. SHERMAN. This particular bill was not referred to the Selfridge board because at the time that board was in existence the work on this vessel had not been completed and accepted.

Mr. SIMS. Did not the gentleman say that the Marchand board considered this matter?

Mr. SHERMAN. I did.

Mr. SIMS. That is the way I understood the gentleman; and I correctly repeated a few moments ago what the gentleman had said.

Mr. CANNON. I must say that from time to time I get these different boards mixed up. In former years I did what I could on two or three occasions to examine these questions, some of them arising under one board and some of them under another. But as the years run round I forget the particulars of the individual cases; and as to taking them up now and examining them anew, it would require very considerable work. I know that a number of these claims, against what little opposition I was able to make on one occasion here for two or three hours, were passed.

Now, if this is a bill of the same class as those that have heretofore been passed—if the same questions are involved in whole or in part—I think this bill is wrong. But if the gentleman expects me to exhibit that familiarity with this case which one ought to have in order to discuss a bill of this kind, I simply say I am unable to do so without taking one or two or three days, as the case might be, in looking up the facts. So that in the present condition of things I shall content myself with voting against this bill on general principles.

Mr. SIMS. I do not think that this bill is one whit worse than the others of the same class that have been passed. In their nature these claims are all alike. Although the particular facts are not the same, they all seem to be about alike in their general nature and scope, regardless of what board ever considered them before.

Mr. CANNON. The other bills contained legislative provisions, as this bill does, for sending certain matters to the Court of Claims. If the other bills were right, this is right, I presume; if the others were wrong, this is wrong.

Mr. SIMS. I do not know anything about the legislative provisions contained in the bills heretofore passed; but so far as the merits are concerned these bills seem to be just as good as any of the rest; but I do not think the others were good enough to be voted for; and I do not think this is.

Mr. CANNON. As I voted against the others, all I can do, with my present knowledge and recollection as to the particular matters of objection against the other bills and against this, is to content myself with voting against this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is, Shall the bill be laid aside to be reported with a favorable recommendation?

The question being taken, there were—ayes 51, noes 34.

Mr. DE ARMOND. I make the point that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count the committee.

After a count—

The CHAIRMAN. There are 132 members present—more than a quorum of the Committee of the Whole. The motion to lay aside the bill with a favorable recommendation is agreed to.

ATLANTIC WORKS, BOSTON, MASS.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 4003) for the relief of the Atlantic Works, of Boston, Mass.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the claims of the Atlantic Works, of Boston, Mass., for further compensation for the construction of the ironclad monitor Casco and the turrets of the Monadnock and Agamenticus, may be submitted by said claimant, within six months after the passage of this act, to the Court of Claims under and in compliance with the rules and regulations of said court, and said court shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine and render judgment upon the same: Provided, however, That the investigation of said claim shall be made upon the following basis: The said court shall ascertain the additional cost which was necessarily incurred by the contractor for building the ironclad monitor Casco and the turrets of the Monadnock and Agamenticus in the completion of the same by reason of any changes or alterations in the plans and specifications required and delays in the prosecution of the work: Provided further, That such additional cost in completing the same and such changes or alterations in the plans and specification required and delays in the prosecution of the work were occasioned by the Government of the United States; but no allowance for any advance in the price of labor or material shall be considered unless such advance could not have been avoided by the exercise of ordinary prudence and diligence on the part of the contractors: And provided further, That the compensation fixed by the contractor and the Government for specific alterations in advance of such alterations shall be conclusive as to the compensation to be made therefor: Provided, That such alterations, when made, complied with the specifications of the same as furnished by the Government aforesaid: And provided further, That all moneys paid to said contractor by the Government over and above the original contract price for building said vessel and turrets shall be deducted from any amounts allowed by said court, by reason of the matters hereinbefore stated: And provided further, That if any such changes caused less work and expense to the contractor than the original plans and specifications, a corresponding deduction shall be made from the contract price and the amount thereof shall be deducted from any allowance which may be made by said court to said claimant.

Mr. MAHON. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MOODY].

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, this bill was introduced by my colleague [Mr. ROBERTS], who is now absent upon public duty connected with the Committee on Naval Affairs, of which he is a member. The case is "on all fours" with that which the committee has just passed. This bill is, I believe, verbatim the bill that was presented by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN]. In every respect the two cases are alike. In view, therefore, of the lucid and accurate statement made by that gentleman and by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MAHON], the chairman of the Committee on War Claims, I think I ought not to detain the committee for a moment. I do not see that I can assist members in any way in dealing with the question, and unless some one desires to make an inquiry I will ask to have a vote on the bill.

Mr. DE ARMOND rose.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DE ARMOND].

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MOODY] has given as the reason for passing this bill the fact that a bill just like it has been passed. Will the gentleman do what has not yet been done—give us some reason why this bill should pass, or why the other should have passed? Nobody has given any reason why the other bill should have passed. Now, will not the gentleman from Massachusetts delay the proceedings long enough to give us a reason why this should pass, and particularly in the form in which this bill is drawn? I ask the gentleman—and I trust he will be candid enough to answer—why he thinks this bill should include such a provision as the following:

That the investigation of said claim shall be made upon the following basis: The said court shall ascertain the additional cost which was necessarily incurred by the contractor for building the ironclad monitor Casco and the turrets of the Monadnock and Agamenticus in the completion of the same by reason of any changes or alterations in the plans and specifications required and delays in the prosecution of the work.

I ask the gentleman whether he does not understand this provision to limit the Court of Claims to an inquiry upon those particular questions and to ignore in the consideration all defenses that might be made based upon the actual merits of the case?

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. I can only reply that such information as I have in regard to this case has come to me since the opening of to-day's session of the House, because I anticipated that my colleague would be present to look after the bill. It is, however, no fault of his, as imperative public duties have called him elsewhere.

I understand the immediate reason for selecting this form of bill is that it is the form which passed the Fifty-first Congress in some four cases. Why the form was originally selected in that way I can not tell, but I presume it was to bring before the court exactly the question which the claimants intended that the court should pass upon, and if there had been any objection to it on the part of the Navy Department or on the part of the committee I presume that objection would have made itself manifest in an amendment; but I think the gentleman from Missouri ought to take into account the provisos in this bill, which follow that part of it which he has read, because they limit very carefully what can be done.

Let me call the gentleman's attention to the fact that in the first place the delays must have been occasioned by the Government of the United States, and the court must so find. In the second place, nothing can be allowed for advances in the price of labor or material, unless such advance could not have been avoided in the exercise of ordinary prudence and diligence. In the next place, if the price of these alterations were specifically agreed upon, that agreement shall be conclusive. In the next place, it must appear that the alterations conformed exactly to the specifications furnished by the Government. In the next place, it is provided that if there has been ever any money paid to the contractor above the original contract price, it shall be deducted from the judgment of the court. In the next place, it is provided that if the changes in the specifications resulted in decreasing the cost to the contractor, that decrease should be deducted from the judgment of the court.

Now, I can not say exactly why this particular form of bill was adopted, any further than I have already stated; but I confess that it seems to me to have been exceedingly carefully drawn in the interests of the Government, if the policy of paying these claims is recognized at all.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Now, let me ask the gentleman this question: Can he imagine why there was left out of this a provision to the effect that if these matters were submitted to a board and passed on and the subject of controversy settled, that the settlement should not be disturbed?

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. Well, I suppose the reason is because Congress heretofore has acted contrary to that principle. The gentleman from Missouri does not remember it, but I remember a case, not like this, a case that I thought less strong than this. I opposed it upon the floor. I made a very careful examination. I went up to the Navy Department and examined the question there. It seemed to me then that settlements should be respected, that it was unwise to open settlements that had once been made and inquire whether they were right or wrong; but by an overwhelming majority, on both sides of the House, the Committee of the Whole, followed by the action of the House, decided against me upon that subject. From that time forward I have voted for these bills as reported by the Committee on War Claims, thinking that the great majority of both sides of this House were wiser than I.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Let me ask the gentleman a question. Was this claim ever before a board for adjudication?

Mr. MAHON. No.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. I do not know personally. I understand from the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MAHON] that it was not.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I so understood, and therefore made that suggestion, and I presume that is the reason why that provision was not put in the bill, because there has been no adjudication of this claim by any board.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. I can only state that upon information. I am told that that is so. Certainly there was no investigation by the Marchand board, because the committee has reported upon that subject very specifically in these words:

> We think it demonstrable beyond all question that the Marchand board did not have authority to adjudicate these claims, that it did not accord to the claimants the opportunity to present their cases, etc.

Mr. HILL. I should like to inquire, Mr. Chairman——

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. May I be permitted to answer the interrogatories of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DE ARMOND], if he has any further questions?

Mr. DE ARMOND. Can the gentleman from Massachusetts state when this claim first appeared before Congress?

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. I can not. It has been in Congress ever since I have. I know that, because, while not in my district, and while I have not in any way represented the claim, it has been constantly called to my attention.

Mr. DE ARMOND. I will ask the gentleman from Massachusetts whether, if this matter is to be submitted to the Court of Claims, the whole case ought not to be submitted?

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I would say that I would not wish to alter a bill that is drawn with so much care by the Committee on War Claims. Neither would I wish this case submitted to the court under restrictions that did not obtain in the case which has just preceded it, which is upon all fours with it. As an original proposition, I think I should be with the gentleman from Missouri on that question.

Mr. DE ARMOND. The gentleman suggests that this bill was drawn with great care by the Committee on War Claims. I wish to ask him if he does not think that is an undeserved compliment? In the first place, the original bill was undoubtedly prepared by its author for the purpose of submitting to the Court of Claims exactly what he desired to have submitted to the Court of Claims and for the purpose of excluding from the consideration of the Court of Claims just what he desired not to have considered, and he being successful in Congress and later on in the Court of Claims, it simply became a matter for the work of a copyist.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. Well, I think that is so. I think my answer is fairly open to the gentleman's criticism. But I presume, in the first place, it was drawn with great care by someone when the bill was presented before the Fifty-first Congress.

Mr. DE ARMOND. There is no question about that, and I think the purpose of the bill is perfectly apparent from the bill itself. I will ask the gentleman from Massachusetts whether he does not think that the original author of the bill knew what he was doing when he did it, and if he did not draw it for the purpose of having submitted to the Court of Claims what he desired to have submitted and for the purpose of not having submitted to the Court of Claims exactly what he did not desire to have submitted.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. What I could say upon that subject would be mere conjecture; but my experience would lead me to believe that this was probably the fact, that the first paragraph of the bill was in all likelihood prepared by someone representing the claimant, but that these provisos were put in by the committee, perhaps on the suggestion of the Navy Department, for the purpose of guarding the interest of the Government in the bill. That is mere conjecture, however. I know nothing about it.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Does it not look more reasonable that these provisos were put in by the original claimant or his representative in order to prevent someone in this House from making the same suggestion and criticisms in regard to it that would certainly have been made if those amendments had not been placed in the bill? Has that occurred to the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. That is possible. I know nothing about it.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Is not that probable?

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. Well, I do not know. I hardly think I can pass on that question.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Does not the gentleman think that the bill should be so amended that the whole question could be submitted to the Court of Claims, instead of the narrow question which the claimant has called up?

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. I will make the suggestion to the gentleman from Missouri that by reading this report he would find that such a procedure would open up a very much larger claim which is not opened by this bill, and that is for the cost of the holding in employment during the long time in which this work was suspended by the Government of the men who were necessary for its continuation when the Government resumed it. That, I have no doubt, is a very large item. Now, the claims for the work upon these monitors are not large in number. There were only 20 of them.

All except seven have been sent to the Court of Claims and the claims paid. Three of those seven are now on the Calendar, and there is no question but that the delay in their construction, which gave rise to these claims, was caused by the action of the Government. The Government appointed a commission. The moment the first monitor came out and it was found to be a complete failure the Government ordered work suspended on all the monitors and appointed a commission to make changes, and the plans were changed over and over again, and in the meantime these various shipbuilding concerns kept their men in their employ, and I should hardly wish to reopen a claim of that kind at this time.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Do you think that this claim would be broad enough to leave it in the power of the court to take in account the amount paid out on this account at the time. Would you not include that kind of a proviso?

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. Well, it had not occurred to me that that would be possible. I do not think it would be.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Are you willing to allow a proviso to go in to include that?

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. Well, I am not in charge of the bill, and I think the gentleman from Missouri ought not to ask me to consent to this amendment.

Mr. DE ARMOND. You want it sent there with the same favorable terms on which the original pioneer in this matter went there?

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. I want just as good a bill as any other bill, and I am free to say that, as I am representing an absent colleague instead of speaking entirely on my account.

Mr. DE ARMOND. The gentleman knows the fact that this bill concedes the right of recovery, but makes no provision for a deduction.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. It concedes it practically, I should say.

Mr. DE ARMOND. We send the bill, therefore, with instructions to find for these people, and without any permission to make a deduction.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. Practically that is so. The claim is for the cost necessarily incurred by the contractors by reason of the change of plans and the expenses which have been put upon the contractor on account of the fault of the Government. This bill is, in effect, an instruction to the Court of Claims to award to the claimant that much. Now, what is the trouble with that, if such is proved to be the fact?

Mr. DE ARMOND. The trouble is this: That you wish to submit a claim for damage done to the Government thirty or forty years ago, when there have been one, two, or three settlements that the Government has made since the work was done.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. There has been no settlement with the Government in this case.

Mr. DE ARMOND. And in all these cases the matter has been investigated and the Government has afforded an opportunity for them to prove their claim.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. In this case the gentleman from Pennsylvania says no.

Mr. DE ARMOND. The Government appointed three boards, and there was nothing to prevent this claim going before them. Why should this claimant or any other claimant be opposed to giving to the court authority to inquire into the whole matter and ascertain whether the Government does owe anything in equity? Instead of doing that, the bill is so framed as to force a recovery.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. The bill is so framed, I will say to the gentleman from Missouri, that if the court finds the facts to which I have alluded, that a loss has been unconscionably brought upon the contractor through the sole fault of the Government, then the contractor may recover the damage. In that sense it is an instruction to the Court of Claims to find for the claimant if these facts are found to be true.

Mr. DE ARMOND. That whole matter might have been adjudicated again and again and settlements made; and it might be shown satisfactorily to the court that the matter had been disposed of, and yet the court would be obliged to find for the claimant.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. Not at all; because the proviso is here that all moneys that have been paid to the contractors by the Government over and above the original contract price shall be deducted from that judgment.

Mr. DE ARMOND. That does not cover the matter.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. It seems to me that it does.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Suppose these settlements were made in discharge of this very matter, and all these things were included, yet the court is not given the opportunity to consider the whole matter, and obtain all the evidence and documents which might show that this claimant ought to have no more.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. Of course if that is the finding—it it appears that these claims have once been settled—the claimant could not have any more.

Mr. DE ARMOND. But the court can not go into that.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. The whole question as to how much it is is with the court.

Mr. DE ARMOND. No.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. And if the court finds, as this suggests, that nothing has been paid, the judgment must be for the amount due under the terms of this bill.

Mr. DE ARMOND. The court finds, first, whether there was any increase in pay for labor under certain conditions, whether there was any increase in the cost of material. If the court finds there was, the court ascertains the amount and what they have been paid in advance of the contract price, although these particular payments may have been embraced in and covered by the amount paid in excess of the contract price.

Mr. MOODY of Massashusetts. With all due deference to the opinion of the gentleman from Missouri, which I value highly, it does not seem to me that that is a fair construction of the bill.

Mr. DE ARMOND. If it were not, there could be no objection to submitting the whole controversy to the court. The objection to submitting the whole controversy—I am not specializing this case, and I appreciate the gentleman's situation—the objection to submitting the whole controversy to the court in this case and others is that the claimant thinks he would not come out so well if the whole controversy was submitted as he would if certain parts picked out by himself were submitted for the court to pass upon.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, we have a Committee on War Claims. I know some of the gentlemen on this side, and with the chairman of that committee I have great confidence in them. I know some gentlemen on that side of the House. I have confidence in them, and I can not believe that they would agree unanimously on a form of bill which is designed to abandon and not protect the interests of the United States.

Mr. DE ARMOND. But everyone must admit that another bill would protect the interests of the United States better than this bill. No man will deny that. Then, what is the objection to the other bill?

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MAHON] says this sort of bill has been before the Court of Claims, and that it is satisfactory to the Government. Now, with that statement, I will ask for a vote.

Mr. HILL. If the gentleman from Massachusetts will allow me, on page 12 of the Calendar is another bill, Calendar No. 150, a bill for the relief of the Atlantic Works, of Boston, and I want to know if that refers to this same matter?

Mr. MAHON. That is a claim under the Selfridge board.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. That is to pay for a finding by the court.

Mr. HILL. No; I think not. It is for the payment of excess of cost over the contract price, which had been paid in full on two gunboats.

Mr. MAHON. It is to pay a finding of the Selfridge board and involves a direct appropriation by the House.

Mr. HILL. It is in precisely the same language as this bill.

Mr. LOVERING. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts if it is not a fact that during the construction of these Government boats the reason for the great increase in the price of labor was due to the great demand the Government was making in its drafts of men for the Army and Navy.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. Yes; I suppose so.

Mr. LOVERING. In that respect, did not the Government get all and more than it has paid for, and are not these people, under these circumstances, entitled on that account to remuneration?

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. I think my colleague is right.

Mr. SIMS. I want to correct the gentleman from Massachusetts. The gentleman said that this was a unanimous report. I admit that there is no minority report, but I did oppose the claim. I want to say this, that I have examined the merits of this particular case. I honestly think that this is a better claim than the one we passed for the gentleman from New York a little while ago, and still I do not think it is good enough for me to vote for it. [Laughter.] I think it is as good as any that has passed.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. Now, I thank the gentleman from Tennessee for that. Can we have a vote on this now, Mr. Chairman?

Mr. DRISCOLL. Mr. Chairman, is it proper to offer an amendment at this time? I want to offer an amendment.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. I hardly want to yield to the gentleman for that purpose, but let it be read for information.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the Chair understand that the gentleman from Massachusetts yields to the gentleman from New York?

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. I simply yield for the purpose of having the amendment read for information and for no other purpose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out all of said bill after the word "same," in line 9, page 1.

Mr. MAHON. With that amendment the Government would have no protection.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. I want to say that I think that would be letting down the bars against the Government. Every one of the provisos is in the interest of the Government, and I hope the gentleman will withdraw that amendment.

Mr. DRISCOLL. I should rather have the whole thing go to the Court of Claims.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. I think I should if I was representing the claim, but I think it would be better to have this bill go just as it is.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. I would like to know under what rule of this House a bill can be forced along in this way?

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. I had no idea of suggesting for a moment that this bill could be forced to a vote without allowing the right of amendment. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MAHON] yields the floor, the other gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DRISCOLL] has the right to offer his amendment. But I take it, from his acquiescence in my suggestion, that he is ready for a vote on the bill.

Mr. DRISCOLL. No; I do not withdraw the amendment.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. Then I hope it will be voted down.

The CHAIRMAN. As the Chair understands, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MAHON] was first recognized, and he yielded his time, or a portion of it, to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MOODY]. The hour not having expired, the gentleman from Pennsylvania still controls the time.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. Then I yield for the purpose of having a vote upon the amendment. I hope it will be voted down.

The question being taken, the amendment of Mr. DRISCOLL was rejected.

Mr. MAHON. I now ask for a vote on the motion to lay the bill aside with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next bill.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Chairman, it has already appeared during this discussion that there are on the Calendar three bills identical in character. Two of them have been acted upon. I happen to represent the third, which from its position on the Calendar can not be reached in regular order to-day. But as the Committee of the Whole has already sent two of these cases to the Court of Claims, I ask unanimous consent that House bill 3505 may be considered at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. DE ARMOND. I dislike to object; but, as the committee has reported all of these claims in a certain order, I think we ought not disturb that order, and therefore I object.

Mr. DALZELL. Does not the gentleman think it a matter of justice that this claim should be treated in precisely the same way that the other two have been?

Mr. DE ARMOND. The trouble is, that the Committee on Claims has arranged these various matters in a certain order, and I do not think that that order should be lightly disturbed, because such action might appear in the nature of a reflection upon the committee.

Mr. DALZELL. I sympathize with the gentleman in his anxiety to preserve the rights of the Committee on Claims, but I do not find any member of that committee making any particular "kick" against my proposition. I trust the gentleman will let this case be taken up.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. How long has this bill been pending before Congress?

Mr. DALZELL. This bill is identical with the other two bills.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. It has been pending, I presume, for forty years.

Mr. DALZELL. It stands on precisely the same grounds as the other two bills.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I am curious to know how long the bill which the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] now espouses has been pending in Congress.

Mr. DALZELL. I can not answer the gentleman.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will the gentleman's colleague [Mr. MAHON] tell us how long this claim has been pending in Congress?

Mr. MAHON. It has been pending the same length of time that certain claims from the State of Tennessee have been pending.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I am not asking any question with regard to Tennessee. I hope we shall get to the claims of that State after a while. But I am anxious to know how long the claim which the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania espouses has been pending before Congress.

Mr. DALZELL. The clerk of the Committee on War Claims tells me that it has been here since the Forty-third Congress.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Twenty-eight years! Now, the point I want to make is that if there is any merit in this claim, the long time it has been pending shows what an outrage the American Congress is imposing upon the honest Government claimants of this country. If it is a just claim it ought to have been paid twenty-eight years ago. On the other hand, if it is an unjust claim it ought to be defeated. That is what I mean to say.

Mr. DALZELL. I agree with the gentleman. Does the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DE ARMOND] insist on his objection?

Mr. DE ARMOND. I am very sorry to do so; but it seems to me that it would interfere with the regularity of our proceedings to do otherwise.

CLAIMS UNDER THE BOWMAN ACT.

Mr. MAHON. I have been instructed by a unanimous vote of the committee to call up the bill (H. R. 8587) for the allowance of certain claims for stores and supplies, reported by the Court of Claims under provisions of the act approved March 3, 1883, and commonly known as the Bowman Act. This is a bill covering claims from a great many States. It is the same bill that was passed by the House in the last Congress. It is known as the "omnibus bill." It embraces 172 cases where claims for stores or supplies furnished to the Army of the United States were referred to the Court of Claims and reported back from that court with a recommendation for an appropriation by Congress.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves to take up House bill 8587.

Mr. BARTLETT. Why does the gentleman wish to displace House bill 3641, which is next in order on this Calendar?

Mr. MAHON. The Committee on War Claims, by unanimous vote, have instructed me, as they have a right to do, to make the motion to take up this bill, because so many members of the House are interested in it; and the bill ought to go promptly through this House and to the other body. I make that motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. BARTLETT. Before we vote on this I want to ask the gentleman a question. I do not desire to be captious about anything, but I want some information.

Mr. MAHON. I will give it to you.

Mr. BARTLETT. I know you will. I want to know when the gentleman proposes to take up the next bill on the Calendar, the one that is now in order.

Mr. MAHON. Right after the passage of this bill we will take up the Calendar in regular order, without any variation.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I should like to ask the gentleman a question or two about this measure. I understand that this is a bill providing for an appropriation to pay claims that have already been adjudicated.

Mr. MAHON. That is right.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. And it provides for appropriations to pay the exact amounts found due by the court after investigation.

Mr. MAHON. The exact amount.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. In every instance?

Mr. MAHON. Yes.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Therefore it need not take a great amount of time.

Mr. MAHON. No, sir.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I have no objection to that.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MAHON] to take up the bill (H. R. 8587) for the allowance of certain claims for stores and supplies reported by the Court of Claims under the provisions of the act approved March 3, 1883, and commonly known as the Bowman Act.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk began the reading of the bill.

Mr. MAHON. I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the first reading of the bill, and that this be considered the second reading.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair deems it well to inform the committee that the bill is now being read by paragraphs for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

To David I. Lillard, of Cook County, $1,980.09.
To the Modern Woodmen of America, of Sangamon County, $5,423.62.

Mr. GIBSON. I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 5 strike out the whole of lines 22, 23, 24, and 25.
On page 6 strike out the whole of lines 1 and 2.

Mr. GIBSON. Those claims have been paid.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the question will be taken upon these two amendments together. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The amendments were agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

To Eli Wade, of Washington County, $347.

The following committee amendment was read:

In line 3, page 9, strike out "Eli" and insert "Elie."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I do so for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee if all these claims have been before the Court of Claims and adjudicated by that court?

Mr. MAHON. All these items have been before the Court of Claims, the amounts due have been found by that court, and the clerk of our committee has gone most carefully over all the items.

Mr. HEPBURN. I understand that there are a number of these claims that depend for their authenticity solely on the representations of Treasury agents some twenty years ago.

Mr. MAHON. No; there are no claims here except claims under the Bowman Act. A similar bill passed in the last Congress.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Are all the claims which have been passed upon by the Court of Claims since the last omnibus bill under the Bowman Act included in this bill?

Mr. GIBSON. There are some which have been passed upon by the court since, but they will be put on in the Senate.

Mr. MAHON. Some findings have been sent in since this bill was prepared, but we leave them for the Senate to put them on the bill as an amendment.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. The object of the bill is to pay such claims as have been favorably adjudicated by the Court of Claims, and no others?

Mr. MAHON. Yes; to pay findings of the Court of Claims under the Bowman Act that have been reported by that court to the Speaker of the House.

Mr. BARTLETT. Reported under the Bowman Act?

Mr. MAHON. Yes.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. I understand that the committee has passed over a matter that I wanted to offer an amendment to. I ask unanimous consent to return to page 3, line 11.

Mr. MAHON. What is the gentleman's amendment? Is it to change a name or something like that?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. I wanted to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to recur to page 3, line 11.

Mr. MAHON. Let the amendment be reported for information.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. It is for the purpose of offering an amendment to strike out "one hundred and seventy-two dollars" and insert "three hundred dollars."

Mr. MAHON. I object. You can not go behind the findings of the court.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. I should like an opportunity to state my reason for offering the amendment.

Mr. MAHON. The gentleman may have very good reasons, but this bill is simply framed to pay the exact amount of the judgments which have been found by the Court of Claims.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. I ask the chairman of the committee for a few moments in which to state my reasons for offering this amendment. Then the gentleman can object, if he is not satisfied with the reasons.

Mr. MAHON. How long will it take?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Two or three minutes.
Mr. MAHON. All right.
Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Now, Mr. Chairman, the reason I suggested that is, I know, in the first place, the claimant in this matter, Charles Posey. He is a very aged colored man, residing in Lauderdale County, Ala., the district I have the honor to represent on this floor. I know him quite well, and I know very well what his neighbors have written to me about him. In this case the Court of Claims says:

He is a citizen of the United States, residing in Lauderdale County, Ala., where he resided during the war of the rebellion, and that at different times in said period the United States forces, by proper authority, took from him quartermaster stores and supplies, consisting of horses, flour, meal, bacon, potatoes, and poultry, and appropriated the same to the use of the United States Army.

I put it, Mr. Chairman, to anyone in this committee, and any gentlemen on this floor, if it can be possible that $177 would be a reasonable amount for "horses" and the things therein enumerated.

Now, the report says "horses." That certainly must mean more than one; and surely no man here would say that $177 is a fair compensation for horses, certainly two, if not more, and other articles taken from that old negro under these circumstances, whose loyalty was absolutely established, and who was true to the Government, slave as he was. I am informed that in his old age he is honored and respected by both the white and colored people among whom he resides. Surely if they took more than one horse, as the report says, and flour, meal, and other things, that $177 would not be a proper amount for reimbursement, realizing, as we do, the value of horses at that time. Surely this amount is not a fair and just compensation to that old man. The great Government of the United States, under these conditions and circumstances, ought not to take his property for the use of the Army and then make this small and pitiful allowance to him.

Now, it is said frequently that we of the South do not do the negro justice; but I freely and gladly appear here as his representative, and ask gentlemen on this floor if they think this is right and fair for the Government to take horses from this old negro, a friend of the Union, without just, fair, and honorable compensation, Mr. Chairman, as he was and as he is, and he is reliable. I can not myself speak of personal knowledge in this matter, but I understand that the Federal troops took two or three horses from the old man, and yet they allow him $177 for all the articles I have enumerated. I think if he was treated fairly, instead of giving him $177 he should be given the amount of $300, as suggested by my amendment. This is nothing but fair, just, and equitable on the part of our great Government. The Government no more than an individual can afford to be unjust and not pay honest and just claims.

Why, sir, the record that I have before me declares that he was loyal and true to the Government, when loyalty meant something in the South at that time. The circumstances are such that he is entitled to the amount that I ask at the hands of both the Republicans and Democrats of this House. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that the amendment ought to be allowed and the amount reported ought to be increased. The court says that they took "horses" and flour, and took potatoes, and then in its conclusion says: "We made no allowance for poultry." They even took all his chickens, and hens, and ducks, and everything else—wiped him literally up—and they make no allowance for that, and I am asking you to make him a fair and just allowance for these things for which he received nothing, and I know if the House had a fair opportunity, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania will withdraw his objection and allow a vote, the amendment will pass.

Mr. MAHON. I do not know anything about the facts in this case.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Well, I do, and I am telling them.

Mr. MAHON. Wait. This case is just in the condition of 1,500 others. The horses might not be worth over $10 apiece. It was presented to the Court of Claims by a lawyer having the highest experience of any man in that court, and they have awarded this man, after a complete hearing of the facts, $177; and we can not go behind the action of that court. We have in our committee to-day any number of claims for an increase, but we never have and we never will agree that that shall be done. It is our court, and when they submit findings of fact this House must sustain them in their findings. If not, we will be antagonized on this floor. In referring these bills to that court they receive all the consideration they can get. I would like to help the gentleman, but can not go back of the findings of fact by the court.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Is it not a fact that you have not a claim reported back here of a similar character to this for a negro?

Mr. MAHON. Oh, yes; plenty of them.

Mr. GIBSON. Plenty of them.

Mr. MAHON. Probably dozens of them scattered all over the country.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. MAHON. I object.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

NEBRASKA.

To Frank G. Simmons, of Seward, $1,090.91.

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, recommended by the committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 12, strike out the whole of lines 1, 2, and 3.

Mr. STARK. That is right. It has been paid, and it should have been been stricken out.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SOUTH CAROLINA.

To Martha Cook, administratrix of Willi Cook, deceased, of Beaufort County, $816.

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, recommended by the committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 13, line 5, strike out "Willi" and insert "William."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

To Jesse B. Derient, administrator of Peter Derient, deceased, of Knox County, $444.

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, recommended by the committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 18, lines 3 and 4, strike out "Derient" and insert "Derieux."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk proceeded and completed the reading of the bill.

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

PROPERTY TAKEN DURING THE WAR WITH SPAIN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3641) for the allowance of certain claims for property taken for military purposes within the United States during the war with Spain, reported by the Secretary of War in accordance with the requirements of an item contained in the sundry civil appropriation act, approved June 6, 1900, authorizing and directing the Secretary of War to investigate just claims against the United States for private property taken and used in the military service within the limits of the United States, etc.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with, and that it be read for amendment under the five-minute rule.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with, and that the bill be read for amendment under the five-minute rule. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I want to inquire of the gentleman from Pennsylvania if these claims have been audited by the War Department?

Mr. MAHON. The gentleman from New York will recollect that in the sundry civil appropriation bill, approved June 6, 1900, there was a section put in directing the Secretary of War to investigate these claims against the United States for private property taken and used in the military service within the limits of the United States. Under that the Secretary of War has adjudicated 202 claims which are in this bill, aggregating in the amounts asked for by the claimants $161,763.86. The amount recommended for payment on these 202 claims is $55,755.21. There are 8 other claims awaiting further evidence which amounts to $38,507.59. These claims are for camps rented, etc., and they are certified by the Secretary of War to the Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Mr. DALZELL. About one-third of the amount of the claims are allowed?

Mr. MAHON. Yes.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

GEORGIA.

To James H. Butner, $10.

Mr. MADDOX. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by inserting, on page 2, after line 25, "J. H. Brown, $75."

Mr. MADDOX. Mr. Chairman, this claim was presented to the commission which passed upon all of these claims now before the House, and they decided that it was a tort, and therefore that the Government was not liable. I propose to take issue with them and appeal to this House on that question. They decided that a number of the cases which I presented were torts, and I do not know but they were correct under the constructions given them by the War Department, but on this particular one I differ with them and appeal to the House. This is the state of facts: Down at Chickamauga, when the Army was in rendezvous there, a corral of horses was stampeded at night and escaped. General Brooke detailed an officer and squad of men to go into the country and gather up the stock scattered about the country.

In this case a sergeant was detailed and went out to the house of this man, J. H. Brown, and took a horse 5 years old, which Mr. Brown valued at $75 and was one that he raised from a colt. He was away from home at the time. The sergeant took the horse against the consent of Mr. Brown's wife, carried it back to the quarters at Chickamauga, and proposed to turn it into the pen. When he got there those in charge of the yard declined to receive the horse because it could not be identified by anybody. He was ordered to return it. I am not quite sure whether he was ordered to return it, but it was returned back to the sergeant, and in any event the man, Mr. Brown, never recovered his horse and lost him entirely.

As soon as Mr. Brown returned home he reported the matter to General Brooke and General Brooke had the matter investigated. In the meantime the officer who had been sent out after the horses had left, as his regiment had been removed to Knoxville. They found him there and he admitted that he took the horse and offered to turn it over to the authorities, but it was not identified by the officers there, and he said he returned it to this man Mr. Brown in Sequatchie Valley. Now, Mr. Brown lived in exactly the opposite direction.

Now, the question simply hinges on this point. This man took this horse by mistake. He was acting under orders of his commanding officer to proceed with his detail of men and gather up the scattered horses. In his efforts to do so some one told him this horse at Brown's was a Government horse, and acting under the orders given him, he seized upon it and carried it back to the camp. It proved to be a mistake. Those in authority and in charge of the horses refused to receive it. This officer claims he sent it back. This is proven to be untrue. He may have tried to do so, but the owner never recovered it. If this soldier had taken this horse of his own volition, then it would not be the act of the Government; but if he took it while under orders from his superior officers, not for himself, but, as he believed, for the Government, and as one of the Government estray horses, and the owner never received it back, then the Government would be liable.

The officer took the horse, thinking it belonged to the Government; but when he had carried it back to the camp the officers there failed to identify it, and he was ordered to return it. He claims that he did return it by sending it in the opposite direction; but it is a fact that the owner never saw his horse again.

Now, is this a case where the man was simply the victim of an act of a soldier not under orders, or did the Government take the horse for its own use? The officer who was sent out took the horse thinking it was Government property; and when the mistake was discovered the horse was not returned to its owner. This man lost his horse; and it was valued at the modest sum of $75. In my judgment this is undoubtedly a just claim against the Government, and it ought to be paid. I appeal to the committee to do justice to this poor man.

Mr. PAYNE. Did all these witnesses appear before the War Department commission?

Mr. MADDOX. The papers were all there.

Mr. PAYNE. All this evidence was introduced there?

Mr. MADDOX. Yes, sir; the claim went to the commission with the evidence. just as I have stated, as I remember it.

Mr. PAYNE. Did the commission find against the claim?

Mr. MADDOX. They treated the case as a tort; they did not deny the facts of the case, as I understood it.

Mr. PAYNE. But after hearing all the evidence they reported against the claim?

Mr. MADDOX. They determined that it was a tort. Now, the question is, Was it a tort?

Mr. MAHON. This claim is for a small amount, but its payment might establish a principle which would cause us a good deal of trouble hereafter and lead to the payment of a good deal of money. The files of the Committee on War Claims are to-day full of such claims—claims which did not properly come within the jurisdiction of that War Department board. The Government learned something from the civil war. The magnitude of the Spanish war was not so great. During the Spanish war no sergeant or enlisted man had the right to exercise such authority as is supposed to have been exercised in this case. The gentleman from Georgia claims that this sergeant was commissioned to collect horses. But during the Spanish war the Government did not take property of citizens in that way, because we had ample time and means to obtain in the regular way whatever property was required; this horse was simply stolen by this sergeant.

Mr. MADDOX. The papers do not show that this officer stole the horse; if he did, he must have stolen it after he had taken it back to the camp.

Mr. MAHON. If the owner of the horse had made complaint and the grand jury had indicted this officer, the military authorities would have turned him over to be tried for horse stealing, as was done in several cases in California.

Mr. Chairman, a provision was carefully drawn and inserted in the sundry civil bill for the hearing of claims for loss of private property arising out of the Spanish war. The object was that we might settle such claims promptly—put an end to them within a year or two and not have them coming back to Congress for the next thirty or forty years. The Committee on War Claims have to a man stood up against bills such as the one now pending. We insist that these claims should have gone before that board and been there adjudicated. Are you now going to open the gates to let in such claims?

This man had a fair hearing before the board the same as other men having similar claims. If I had been his counsel when his case was heard by that board, I would have inquired of the War Department whether this sergeant had any authority from a quartermaster to go out and take that horse.

Mr. MADDOX. The papers show that fact. That is not even doubted.

Mr. MAHON. In the State of Iowa, during the civil war, horses were taken by the soldiers, but no claim has ever come to Congress for reimbursement. This case is simply one of tort. I trust this Government will never recognize the right of any man to come in here and make a claim for depredations of this kind on the part of our troops. I would be glad to see this man paid for his horse, and I do not know but I would contribute $10 toward paying this poor fellow. But let us stand by the rule which should control cases of this kind so that we may not be overwhelmed with such claims in the future.

Mr. MADDOX. The gentleman does not seem to catch the point of this case at all. This officer was detailed to go out and bring these horses back into the corral. He took this horse thinking that it was Government property. That fact appears in the case and is not denied by anybody.

Mr. MAHON. Government horses are all branded with letters two or three inches large.

Mr. MADDOX. It is not denied that the officer took this horse and carried it back to the corral, and there the officers failed to identify it. If the sergeant stole the horse he stole it after the officers failed to identify it. Right here is the distinction which removes from this case the idea of tort. That is, when the horse was taken he was acting under orders of his superior officers.

This commission made a mistake; but there is no appeal, because the commission is dissolved. The only appeal is to Congress. The question is whether, under the circumstances I have stated, this man ought to be paid for his horse. There was no tort committed, because the officer believed the horse to be Government property, though it afterwards appeared that it was not.

Mr. MAHON. During the Spanish war no enlisted man or sergeant was sent out to take horses from the people anywhere. Horses were purchased in the market.

Mr. MADDOX. The gentleman does not understand me. Some of the Government horses ran away; and this sergeant, with a body of troops, was sent to recover them. This man's horse was taken along with others. The sergeant took it by mistake. This man ought to be paid. If favorable action upon this case establishes a precedent. it is a precedent in the right direction.

Mr. MAHON. If this is such a plain case as the gentleman states, if this officer was out seeking to recover Government horses and by mistake took this man's horse, why did not the owner of the horse make out his case before this board?

Mr. MADDOX. These papers were sent to the board, just like all the balance of them. This man had no attorney, and I want to say to this House that when I took up this report and found that they had decided that this case was a tort I was indignant, and went immediately to the Committee on Claims and stated that I was astonished that the commission should find that this was a tort when the evidence was so plain to the contrary. The claimant had no attorney.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. MADDOX].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GIBSON. In line 5 of page 2, I move to strike out the words "one hundred and;" so that it will read "$36" instead of "$136."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.
The Clerk read as follows:

On page 12, after line 4, insert:
"To A. J. Wedderburn, $173."

The amendment was agreed to.
Mr. GIBSON. I move to amend the bill by adding the amendment I send to the desk.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee moves to amend the bill by adding an amendment which the Clerk will report.
Mr. GIBSON. I will state that these claims are of a similar character and reported by the committee as a separate bill, but they belong to the same class. They are from the State of Virginia, and have all been favorably reported by the War Department.
Mr. BARTLETT. I desire to ask the gentleman a question about this matter. I am not disposed to oppose it. There are a number of these claims which are from the result of awards of the Spanish War Commission. They have been made under the provisions of the sundry civil bill, and there are a number of others which the Commission said they are not authorized to consider and report on. Now, I am not going to oppose the passage of these claims. I think they ought to pass; but what I desire to know is this: There are, I know, in my own State and in my own district, certain claims which have not been put in any bill, because, although they were found to be just claims, the Commission determined that they could not report upon them, because they were the result of torts committed, and not by reason of any contract, implied or expressed. I want to know what the gentleman is going to do with these other claims?
Mr. GIBSON. They have not come before us. As soon as the War Department sends them the committee will put them in shape.
Mr. BARTLETT. Some of them are reported.
Mr. GIBSON. All those that are reported are in the amendment.
Mr. BARTLETT. I have seen them in a report of the War Department.
Mr. GIBSON. These are all reported by the War Department. Every solitary one of them that they have reported is here.
Mr. BARTLETT. I do not know if they have not been reported to the committee. These seem to be somewhat different.
Mr. GIBSON. They have not come to us.
Mr. BARTLETT. Are these the claims that were passed by the Commission?
Mr. GIBSON. They are the claims that have come to us.
Mr. BARTLETT. But they were passed by another commission.
Mr. GIBSON. Not by the same Commission, but under the same law.
Mr. BARTLETT. Under the same law?
Mr. GIBSON. Under the same law, but by different boards.
Mr. MADDOX. I reckon not. I want to find out about this, because it is a very important matter.
Mr. GIBSON. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. RIXEY] will explain it to you.
Mr. MADDOX. I will not object. I simply want to find out something about it. I have quite a number of claims exactly like this that have been turned down by this Commission.
Mr. GIBSON. We do not report any case that is turned down. We simply recommend the passage of the claims that this board recommends.
Mr. MADDOX. What I want to find out is this: If we can not get these claims passed by the War Department and by the Commission established for that purpose, how is it that the gentleman from Virginia comes in here and gets these claims reported?
Mr. GIBSON. They have to do some things before they can do others.
Mr. MADDOX. We were in time.
Mr. GIBSON. As soon as they were reported we put them in a bill and have offered it as an amendment.
Mr. RIXEY. I will state to the gentleman from Georgia I found there were a number of these claims near Thoroughfare Gap, where these troops were in camp for some time, and I introduced a bill to pay these claimants the amounts found due by the War Department, and that bill was reported favorably by the Committee on War Claims, and I think they ought to be paid. I do hope there will be no objection to the amendment.
Mr. MADDOX. I think so, too.
Mr. RIXEY. And if my friend has any similar claims I hope they will be paid promptly.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that these claims are not such as are authorized by this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to hear the point of order raised by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. MAHON. This is a bill, as the title shows, for the allowance of certain claims for property taken for military purposes within the United States during the war with Spain, reported by the Secretary of War in accordance with the requirements of an item contained in the sundry civil appropriation act approved June 6, 1900, authorizing and directing the Secretary of War to investigate just claims against the United States for private property taken and used in the military service within the limits of the United States, etc.

Now, Mr. Chairman, there is no authority to put anything in this bill except the findings of that board under that section of the sundry civil bill. This is not that board. It is the findings of other officers of the War Department.

Mr. BARTLETT. I want to state to the gentleman——

Mr. MAHON. Now, hold on a minute. Now they are trying to inject into this bill a class of claims that do not come under that title.

Mr. GIBSON. We can amend the title.

Mr. MAHON. No, we will not amend the title. I will insist upon the point of order.

Now, Mr. Chairman, as chairman of the Committee on War Claims, coming in here with a bill and making the statement that this bill contains the findings of a board of the War Department, created under a certain act, and nothing else, we must be fair to this House, and not undertake to put anything in this bill that does not come from that board.

Mr. BARTLETT. I want to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania now if this is the bill which proposes to pay citizens of Virginia certain damages done by the soldiers there, found by a commission composed of a board of officers appointed by the Secretary of War for the purpose of ascertaining the facts. I know that there are now reported from these officers and furnished to this House by the Secretary of War a number of claims that have been found that are due and ought to be paid, and they were presented to the Spanish War Claims Commission, but they declined to report them on account of a restriction contained in the sundry civil bill, under which they were confined to contracts and not to torts; and that is the reason why they can not put them in that bill.

Mr. MAHON. It is the reason; and I do not want them on this bill. Let every tub stand on its own bottom. I know that the War Department sent out men to assess the damages, and the purpose of that is to keep the testimony for the Government, so that the War Department in the future can be protected.

Now, it is not this class of claims at all, and it has no business in this bill. So I insist on my point of order, Mr. Chairman, that the amendment is not germane.

Mr. RIXEY. Mr. Chairman, I insist that the gentleman's point of order comes too late; the amendment has been considered. Now, I want to say, Mr. Chairman, in regard to this claim, that this bill was introduced——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the amendment has not been considered and has not been reported to the committee.

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. Chairman, I will state that these claims——

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, let us discuss the point of order. It is getting late, and I want to get on.

Mr. GIBSON. Well, Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the amendment rather than consume unnecessary time. I move that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. DALZELL having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. PARKINSON, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bills and joint resolutions of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 2848. An act for the establishment of a subport of entry at Naco, Ariz.;

S. 1539. An act to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Gainesville, in the State of Texas;

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendment to the bill (H. R. 8581) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House of Representatives on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. GALLINGER, Mr. PRITCHARD, and Mr. TURNER as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

CARSON-NEWMAN COLLEGE, JEFFERSON CITY, TENN.

The committee resumed its session.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4842) for the relief of the trustees of the Carson-Newman College at Jefferson, Tenn.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to the trustees of Carson-Newman College, formerly the Mossycreek Baptist College, at Jefferson City, Tenn., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $6,000, in full compensation for the use, occupation, and consumption of the property of said college and trustees by the military forces of the United States during the late war of the rebellion.

With the following amendments recommended by the committee:

Strike out "Carson-Newman" wherever it appers in the bill and insert in lieu thereof "Carson and Newman," and amend the title.

Mr. RIXEY. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman of the committee a question. I do not want to embarrass him about the bill, for I have no doubt it is a just one. This bill is for occupation of a church?

Mr. GIBSON. Yes.

Mr. RIXEY. I know of a number of other bills introduced that are on the same line. There are a number of bills introduced of that character by myself. I represent the Eighth district of Virginia, across the river, where one army or the other, and sometimes both, camped during the war. Many battles were fought there, and almost every church for 60 miles from Washington, on the Southern road, was used as a hospital. Some of the brick churches were torn down and the bricks taken and used for the purpose of building quarters for the officers. What I want to ask is why not report some bill directing the Secretary of War to inquire and report what would be a fair compensation for these churches?

Mr. GIBSON. I will state to the gentleman that this bill passed both Houses at the last Congress, but reached the President too late for his signature. I hope under the circumstances the House will let it go through at an early date.

Mr. RIXEY. I am not opposing this bill. I have no doubt that it is a just bill, as the others to which I have referred are just bills; but I am calling the gentleman's attention to these other bills and asking him why it would not be well to have a general bill.

Mr. GIBSON. I am with the gentleman on that.

Mr. RIXEY. I want to know why the Committee on War Claims do not report a general bill?

Mr. GIBSON. We did report one in the last Congress, and I take it that we will in this.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask my colleague [Mr. GIBSON] how it is that this one, his bill, and this alone, when there are four other similar bills before his committee, is reported here? I am informed there are five bills pending before this House like this—four besides this one. How is it that the distinguished committee, with which my colleague occupies the second place, and often first, comes in and reports this bill in preference to all the others?

Mr. GIBSON. I will state to the gentleman, and I think I will give him a good reason, because this bill passed both Houses in the last session of Congress.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. But why were not the other four bills reported and passed by the last Congress? They were certainly pressed before the committee.

Mr. GIBSON. They will all be reported in due time. Some bill must stand first on the Calendar. I think the gentleman will agree that I have been very liberal and that I have reported a great multitude of these claims. I admit that this is from my own district, but it is all that my district has. It passed the last Congress and it was the fault of the situation that it was not signed.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Does the gentleman from Tennessee, my colleague, mean to say that this is all that his Congressional district has received from Congress?

Mr. GIBSON. It is the only bill of this sort.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Are there not hundreds of other things that the distinguished gentleman has secured for his district?

Mr. GIBSON. Oh, let us get down to business. [Laughter.]

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Well, I will get back to the other question. How is it that this bill only is reported from the committee in preference to these four other bills?

Mr. GIBSON. Suppose you were in my place and you had a bill that had passed both Houses of Congress and your constituents were pressing you, would you not report it from the committee?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Yes; I would report it, but the very reason that would make me report that bill would prompt me to deal with my colleagues in the House with the same general spirit of liberality. If I reported my own bill, I would report the others at the same time.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Does the gentleman say that he would not report his own bill?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I would not report mine unless I could report the others.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I want to say that my colleague on the committee [Mr. GIBSON] is the most liberal man on that committee. He urges the report of bills that I have to fight almost all the time. I think he is so liberal that he is not right.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Well, I am satisfied that he is not right in this case. I am for his bill if there is no other man in the House to support it. It is a just bill; it is for taking the property of a church, and it is time that it should be paid for; but I can not understand, Mr. Chairman, how this Congress should be asked to pass this bill when there are other bills equally as meritorious and indisputable before the committee similar to it and which should have been reported as well as this.

Mr. GIBSON. This is the only bill I have reported in this Congress for my district; and it is the only one I shall report. I am going to report two or three for my colleague [Mr. GAINES of Tennessee], but these bills can not all be reported on the same day.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Are you going to report my bills during this session of Congress?

Mr. GIBSON. I am going to vote in favor of making the report. I must have the concurrence of the majority of the committee in order to report them.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. My distinguished colleague [Mr. GIBSON] will bear me out in saying that he informed me the committee had decided to send the balance of these bills over to the Senate.

Mr. GIBSON. I will state——

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. What are you going to do? Are you going to report the balance of these bills to this House——

Mr. GIBSON. If the gentleman will permit me to answer his questions one by one, and not pile question upon question, we shall get closer to the real facts. I stated to the gentleman that in passing on these claims we wanted to get a clean bill through to the Senate as soon as possible, and that the Senate would add on these other bills, just as they have done in former sessions.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I am not in the Senate; and I am dependent upon this House for my rights. I am trying to find out whether this bill and similar bills which I have presented are going to be reported or not; and if not, why? If the Committee has adopted a rule not to report these bills, but send them to the Senate and let the Senate do the business, I want to know why that is done. I am in favor of my colleague's bill, but I say in all candor and frankness that bills similar in character and equally meritorious should receive equal consideration.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, we have heard considerable about everything else except this bill. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GIBSON] says that this bill passed the House and Senate a year or two years ago.

Mr. GIBSON. Oh, no; in the last Congress.

Mr. PAYNE. That would be a year or two years ago. He says that this bill was passed by both Houses a year or two years ago, but was not signed by the President. There might have been a very good reason why the President did not sign it. The statement the gentleman has made does not throw any light upon the merits of the bill. I should like to know something about the case. I am not particularly interested in knowing why the gentleman has reported one bill and not another. I suppose he may have been acting under the instructions of his committee or subcommittee in reporting the bill introduced by himself, and not reporting the bills introduced by the other gentlemen from Tennessee. But that does not give us any light on the merits of this bill. I should like to hear some reasons in favor of this claim—why it is made, how they get at the amount, why it was not paid at any time during the last forty years, and everything of that sort. It is a pretty stale claim, and we ought to have some information about it.

Mr. GIBSON. I will take great pleasure in giving the gentleman and the Committee of the Whole the information desired. In 1864, during the war of the rebellion, the Federal Army was encamped in the neighborhood of the place where this property was situated. Now, every man who was in the Army will remember what an awful winter the winter of 1863-64 was. In order to secure winter quarters for the troops the college buildings were torn down. The bricks were used for the purpose of erecting chimneys and otherwise protecting the winter quarters. The woodwork was also used in the erection of winter quarters. The magnificent grove was cut down and used partly for the same purpose and partly for fuel. The major-general who ordered this to be done and the brigadier-general who executed the order both testified—and their evidence is before the committee—that they estimated the damages at $8,000. But the Committee on War Claims would not take into consideration the question of damages; they simply estimated the value of the property absolutely used or consumed by the Army of the United States, and fixed upon a valuation of $6,000, at which sum they reported the bill. It has passed this House time and time again. In the last Congress it passed both Houses and went to the President, but it reached him too late, as did quite a number of other bills, to receive his signature. These are the facts. I move that the bill be laid aside to be reported with a favorable recommendation.

The question being taken on the amendment reported by the committee, it was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bills to the House with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. OLMSTED, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, reported that that committee had had under consideration certain bills and had directed him to report the same back to the House with the recommendation that the bills H. INJUNCTIONS IN CONSPIRACY CASES.

Mr. HOAR. I move that the public documents which I hold in my hand, together with arguments and decision of the court in Commonwealth v. Hunt (4 Metcalf) be printed as a document. These are documents which relate to injunctions in matters of conspiracy, and they are all of them, except two, Senate or House documents which have been already printed. One is a report of the Judiciary Committee of the Senate in 1896 and one a report of the Judiciary Committee of the House and a hearing there. Of the two which are not Senate or House documents one is a brief magazine article and the other is a bulletin of the Department of Labor. It will make a very brief document altogether, and it will be quite a convenience for the Senate to have them printed in one document.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Massachusetts? The Chair hears none, and the order is made.

ST. FRANCIS RIVER, ARKANSAS.

Mr. BERRY. Yesterday I introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 55) directing the Secretary of War to cause an examination to be made to determine if there is probability and danger of the Mississippi River cutting through the space dividing such river from the St. Francis River in the vicinity of Walnut Bend, Ark., and it was referred to the Committee on Commerce. The Committee on Commerce has instructed me to ask the Senate to amend the resolution so as to make it a concurrent resolution, and with that amendment I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Arkansas, from the Committee on Commerce, reports a concurrent resolution, which will be read.

The concurrent resolution was read and considered by unanimous consent, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause an examination to be made to determine if there is probability and danger of the Mississippi River cutting through the space dividing such river from the St. Francis River, or injuring or destroying the Government work constructed in the vicinity of Walnut Bend, Ark., some 20 miles above the mouth of the St. Francis River, and if such danger exists, to cause to be made a survey and estimate of the amount necessary to prevent damage to the navigation of the St. Francis River, or for the protection or extension of the Government work heretofore constructed at or near such point.

Mr. BATE. I will thank the Senator from Arkansas to explain the concurrent resolution for which he is asking consideration. It seems to be important, and, for aught I can now see from the caption, it may trespass upon the territory of Tennessee, and if so, I want to know about it.

Mr. BERRY. It is simply made necessary by reason of a provision in the river and harbor act. Neither the Chief of Engineers nor the Secretary of War has authority to order a survey or estimate without a concurrent resolution of the two Houses. The concurrent resolution simply authorizes the Secretary of War to direct the engineer there to estimate as to the probable damage to this work and to report to Congress. It carries no appropriation. It is simply for an estimate.

Mr. BATE. It is merely preliminary, then, and not permanent.

Mr. BERRY. It is simply an estimate. The matter is to be determined hereafter.

Mr. BATE. Then I have nothing to say about it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the concurrent resolution.

The concurrent resolution was agreed to.

Mr. BERRY, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 55) directing the Secretary of War to cause an examination to be made to determine if there is probability and danger of the Mississippi River cutting through the space dividing such river from the St. Francis River in the vicinity of Walnut Bend, Ark., reported adversely thereon; and the joint resolution was postponed indefinitely.

IMPROVEMENT OF EVERETT HARBOR, WASHINGTON.

Mr. FOSTER of Washington. I introduce a joint resolution and ask for its immediate consideration.

The joint resolution (S. R. 56) providing for a modification in the adopted project for the improvement of Everett Harbor, Washington, was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That in carrying on the work of improvement of Everett Harbor, Washington, authorized in the river and harbor act of March 3, 1899, the Secretary of War may, in his discretion, postpone the dredging and improvement of Old River, and may widen or deepen, or both widen and deepen, the harbor basin and channel through the tide flats, and take such steps as may seem to him desirable to protect and conserve the work as performed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. ALLISON. I do not object to the joint resolution, but I suggest to the Senator from Washington that it seems to me it would facilitate its passage if it had the sanction of the Committee on Commerce; or has it that sanction?

Mr. FOSTER of Washington. The work is already under contract, and the joint resolution authorizes a change from the old contract under the supervision of the engineers to a new work without any further appropriation.

Mr. ALLISON. But would it not facilitate its passage through another body if the joint resolution had the sanction of the Committee on Commerce before its passage here? I make that suggestion to the Senator.

Mr. FOSTER of Washington. Perhaps it would.

Mr. ALLISON. I suggest that it be allowed to be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. FOSTER of Washington. Very well; let it be referred.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. STEWART submitted an amendment proposing to increase the salary of the assayer in charge of the mint at Carson, Nev., from $1,500 to $2,000, providing for an additional clerk for the same, proposing to increase the appropriation for wages of workmen and watchmen at said mint from $2,000 to $5,600, and proposing to increase the appropriation for incidental and contingent expenses at the same from $1,000 to $2,500, intended to be proposed by him to the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $462,441.97 to reimburse the State of Nevada for money advanced in aid of the suppression of the war of the rebellion, intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. PLATT of New York submitted an amendment proposing to amend chapter 10, title 7, of the Revised Statutes of the United States, to provide for the publication by the Bureau of Statistics of reports of imports and exports of bonds, stocks, and other evidences of value, intended to be proposed by him to the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. FOSTER of Washington submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $15,000 for repairs and improvements at the United States penitentiary at NcNeils Island, Washington, intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CLAPP submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 590) for the relief of the Mille Lac Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota; which was ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

RAILROADS IN CUBA.

Mr. McENERY submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he hereby is, directed to inform the Senate what railroads, if any, are now being built in the island of Cuba, by whom, and under what authority of law.

Also what permission, if any, has been given by the military authorities of the United States in the island of Cuba for the building of any railroad, public or private, and under what provisions of law such permission has been granted.

RURAL FREE-DELIVERY DIVISION.

Mr. GALLINGER submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Postmaster-General be, and he is hereby, directed to send to the Senate a list of the persons employed in the rural free-delivery division of the Post-Office Department at the time said persons were placed in the classified service by Executive order, giving the names, place whence appointed, length of service, and whether or not any examination was required either at the time of appointment or when placed in the classified service.

SPANISH TREATY CLAIMS COMMISSION.

Mr. CULLOM. Yesterday I reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations the bill (S. 3654) to vest in the Spanish Treaty Claims Commission certain powers possessed by circuit and district courts of the United States, and asked for its immediate consideration. There was objection to it for the time being, but I understand that both Senators who objected have since withdrawn their objection. I therefore ask that the bill be taken up for consideration.

Mr. BATE. I made objection to the bill yesterday morning when it was presented, because I thought it involved a great deal and gave too great powers to the Commission, giving to it the same powers that are given to a regularly established court. I thought from the character of the bill that it ought to be considered by the Committee on the Judiciary. Upon examination, however, I find that the bill has been before the Committee on Foreign Relations, and it is one of that class of bills which goes with propriety to either of those committees. I conferred with the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, and he has examined it. I find that he thinks there is no particular objection to it, and upon a close examination myself, I find that what I objected to relates to established courts and not to the Commission. Therefore I take pleasure in withdrawing the objection I made yesterday on that account, and I will let the bill take its usual course.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill was reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations, with an amendment, which will be stated.

Mr. CULLOM. The amendment proposed by the committee, I think, was in the wrong place. It ought to come in on the second page, after line 12, instead of where it was placed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, at the end of line 12, insert:

Testimony so taken may be certified by the official taking the same, and returned by him directly to the Commission in Washington.

Mr. CULLOM. That refers to foreign testimony.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 5833) temporarily to provide revenue for the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes.

Mr. QUARLES. Will the Senator from Massachusetts yield to me for a moment?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly; I yield to the Senator to make a statement.

Mr. QUARLES. Mr. President——

Mr. LODGE. Of course the motion I made will stand.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is pending. The Senator from Massachusetts yields to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. QUARLES. I gave notice yesterday that at the close of the routine business this morning I would move to proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10308) to provide for a permanent Census Office, and I desire that that measure may be brought to the attention of the Senate at this time.

Mr. LODGE. I shall be glad, as the Senator knows, to yield to him to take up that bill. I am heartily in favor of the establishment of a permanent Census Office, and I know the desirability of disposing of that bill at an early day. But the bill of which I have charge is before the Senate delaying other business, and I feel bound to keep it before the Senate in order to dispose of it at the earliest possible moment.

Moreover, Mr. President, we could not dispose of the permanent census bill if we took it up this morning. The information I asked for yesterday has only just been laid upon the Clerk's desk. It is not in print. I do not want to discuss the point which interests me in the bill until I have that information. Probably we could not go on this morning with the permanent census bill in any event, because the information asked for is not yet before us.

I think, if the Senator from Wisconsin will wait until we get the information asked for in a form in which we can deal with it, he can get on faster with his bill then.

Mr. QUARLES. Mr. President, the information called for is here, and it is all tabulated. I can not understand that there is any excuse whatever for having printed the names of 2,200 young men and young women who have been appointed upon the recommendation of Senators and Members to this force, the furnishing of which adds nothing to it at all. It is all tabulated. The results are few and quickly arrived at.

Mr. LODGE. But the information I am in search of is not tabulated anywhere that I know of in any document. Otherwise I should not have asked for it.

Mr. QUARLES. It certainly is.

Mr. LODGE. There are no dates of appointment given in any report I have seen.

Mr. QUARLES. I think the Senator is mistaken.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 5833.

Mr. BURTON. Did I understand that the Senator from Wisconsin made a motion with respect to the census bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. He did not. The Senator from Massachusetts made a motion.

Mr. LODGE. I made a motion to proceed to the consideration of House bill 5833.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, I do not think that the census bill ought to await the disposition of the Philippine bill. There are grave reasons why the census bill should be taken up and considered. I am not in charge of the bill; the chairman of the committee is in charge of it; but I do not think we ought to delay the consideration of the measure by the Philippine bill. I know there are several days yet left of the present week and I feel sure that it will take but a short time to dispose of the census bill. I wish the Senator from Massachusetts would give us at least a little time for the census bill and see if we can not make headway with it, and then go back to the measure which he has in charge. I do not want to seem to oppose the wishes of the Senator from Massachusetts, but I do think that we ought to take up the census bill.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, like the Senator from Massachusetts, I am entirely in favor of a proper bill to make the Census Office a permanent one, and it may be a matter of pressing importance. I do not know how pressing it is, but I know that the bill now under consideration as the unfinished business is of the utmost importance. It is my experience here that when we divide a day into two parts by the consideration of different measures we do not make much progress with either. I should very much prefer the setting aside of the Philippine bill on some day if it can be shown that the census bill must be passed now. I do not know why it should be pressed this morning. We are going on very well, as I understand. For myself, I want some information that I have not yet been able to secure. I think the information suggested yesterday by the Senator from Massachusetts is important, and I hope the Senator from Wisconsin will not press that measure this morning. I think the information ought to be printed, and we ought to have a chance to look at it before we consider the bill.

Mr. QUARLES. My distinguished friend from Massachusetts is in error in his suggestion that the date of appointment is not furnished by this information.

Mr. LODGE. No; but it is not in print.

Mr. QUARLES. I know.

Mr. LODGE. There is but one copy. We can not all use one copy.

Mr. COCKRELL. I certainly want to look at it myself.

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator from Wisconsin will pardon me, I knew it was there, of course; but I want it in print, so that I can see it. I want to examine it before I take part in the discussion of the bill.

Mr. QUARLES. I feel sure that if the Senators understood the pressure which is upon me in regard to this matter they would certainly come to my relief. A man with this bill hung around his neck might better be in the Philippine Islands than in Washington. I want to have an opportunity to get the bill considered, and I appeal to the Senator to relieve me from this situation. I am in the vale of tears. I very much wish that the Senator from Massachusetts would withdraw his motion and permit us just to take the morning hour.

Now, I think we are wasting time here. Under our rules, if a Senator chooses to address the Senate three days on the Philippine bill, he will take three days. If we undertake to curtail him, he will probably take four days. We take the morning hour and plunge into the Philippine business, and at about half past 3 o'clock the Senator who has the floor surrenders it, with the request that he be permitted to go on the next day.

I submit, Mr. President, that if the policy I suggest had been carried out, we would have this bill cleared from the Calendar and would have made just as much progress with the Philippine bill as we have made.

If Senators desire that the names of these 2,200 young men and young women should appear in print, and if the printing of their names is an essential condition to the taking up of this matter, I would move, if it is in order, that to-morrow morning after the routine business the bill known as the permanent census bill may be taken up during the morning hour.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is one motion already pending, and such a motion would not be in order.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I suggest to the Senator to give notice.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator can give notice that he will take the bill up to-morrow, and to that I have no objection at all. That will give him until 3 o'clock, when the special order begins; and I shall not attempt to press the Philippine bill at all to-morrow.

Mr. QUARLES. Very well, with that understanding——

Mr. LODGE. That will give the Senator an opportunity to call up the bill after the routine morning business, and he will get nearly three hours for its consideration to-morrow.

Mr. BATE. Mr. President, I merely wish to say that I sympathize with the Senator from Wisconsin in regard to a census bill. I want to have it disposed of. It is a very important measure. It seems to be pretty well conceded that we are going to have a census bill passed, and the sooner we get through with it the better certainly it will be for the country.

There are a great many persons who have been appealing to me as well as the Senator from Wisconsin in regard to this matter, and among others I have had an interview with the Director himself. He says that whatever is done ought to be done as soon as it can consistently be done, for there are a number of former employees who are still here, hoping for reappointment, and the matter ought to be settled, so that they may know what their fate is to be, whether they will be kept in the regular service or whether they will be dismissed. Therefore he urges that the bill be considered at an early day.

Furthermore, Mr. President, the measure touching the Philippines has been absorbing the time of the morning hour for two or three days. As I understand, the purpose of the morning-hour rule is to allow just such matters as the census bill, which is crowded out by the regular order, to be called up and considered. For the sake of the virtue and dignity, if nothing else, of the regular order this regular order should not be brought up before 2 o'clock and absorb the time of the morning hour when it properly belongs to the time and has the inside track after 2 o'clock. I think we ought to go on this morning with the bill which the Senator from Wisconsin has in charge, unless he wishes to make some other arrangement.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts moves——

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, I wish merely to suggest to the Senator from Massachusetts, who is doubtless pressing this measure owing to the fact that he is being pressed from the rear, that the reason he gave a moment ago why he did not want to have the census bill pressed this morning is the very reason why a great many of us do not want the other measure pressed that he is advocating. We want some information, and we can not get it. He says he has not had an opportunity to see a certain document relating to the Census Office in print. There are other things coming every day that we would like to get in print, and we can not get them.

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator from South Carolina will give a date, as I did, within twenty-four hours, I will agree.

Mr. TILLMAN. Give a date about what?

Mr. LODGE. About voting on the Philippine bill.

Mr. TILLMAN. My dear sir, I could not undertake to corral the Senate and say when it is going to vote on any given day. I have no authority to speak for this side or the other side. I presume the debate will go on until we get through with it, as we do on all matters, and we will finish it some of these days and vote.

Mr. CULLOM. I call for the regular order.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Claims:

A bill (H. R. 1795) for the relief of Jeronemus S. Underhill;

A bill (H. R. 3641) for the allowance of certain claims for property taken for military purposes within the United States during the war with Spain, reported by the Secretary of War in accordance with the requirements of an item contained in the sundry civil appropriation act, approved June 6, 1900, authorizing and directing the Secretary of War to investigate just claims against the United States for private property taken and used in the military service within the limits of the United States, etc.;

A bill (H. R. 4003) for the relief of the Atlantic Works of Boston, Mass.; and

A bill (H. R. 8587) for the allowance of certain claims for stores and supplies reported by the Court of Claims under the provisions of the act approved March 3, 1883, and commonly known as the Bowman Act.

The bill (H. R. 9206) to make oleomargarine and other imitation dairy products subject to the laws of any State or Territory or the District of Columbia into which they are transported, and to change the tax on oleomargarine, and to amend an act entitled "An act defining butter, also imposing a tax upon and regulating the manufacture, sale, importation, and exportation of oleomargarine," approved August 2, 1886, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

CARSON AND NEWMAN COLLEGE, TENNESSEE.

The bill (H. R. 4842) for the relief of the trustees of Carson and Newman College, at Jefferson City, Tenn., was read twice by its title.

Mr. BATE. I should like to have the Senate take action upon the bill at this time. A similar bill passed the Senate and passed the House and went to the President, but failed to reach him in time for his signature. The bill has now come to the Senate from the House, and it will take but a minute to pass it. I wish to have it disposed of without going to a committee, it having been considered by the committee heretofore.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Tennessee asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill. It will be read in full to the Senate.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to the trustees of Carson and Newman College, formerly the Mossycreek Baptist College, at Jefferson City, Tenn., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $6,000, in full compensation for the use, occupation, and consumption of the property of said college and trustees by the military forces of the United States during the late war of the rebellion.

Mr. LODGE. How much is the amount?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Six thousand dollars.

Mr. BATE. It is a small matter.

Mr. LODGE. Has the bill been reported from a committee?

Mr. BATE. It has been considered by the committee, and it passed the Senate and passed the House and went to the President, but did not reach him in time for him to sign it. The House has now passed the same bill and sent it to the Senate.

Mr. LODGE. Has the bill been before the Senate committee and had a formal report?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that it has not at this session, but at a former session it was reported from the committee.

Mr. KEAN. I object to the consideration of the bill. Let it be referred. The committee will act on it promptly.

Mr. SPOONER. I stopped the bill last year by a motion to reconsider in order that I might look into it, and I did look into it.

Mr. BATE. It went to the President.

Mr. SPOONER. I intended to withdraw the motion. I do not know whether I did withdraw it.

Mr. BATE. Certainly you did.

Mr. SPOONER. At any rate upon an examination I found that it is a proper bill.

Mr. BATE. The Senator delayed it simply by his motion, and then it went to the President only a day or two before final adjournment, and that is the reason it was not signed by him.

Mr. KEAN. There is no reason why the bill should not go to the committee.

Mr. BATE. It has been before the committee.

Mr. KEAN. Not at this Congress.

Mr. BATE. Not at this session, of course; but heretofore it has been considered by the committee. That is why I have asked to have it passed now, and I think in justice it should be passed.

Mr. KEAN. The regular course is to have the bill go to the Committee on Claims.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in the Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PHILIPPINE TARIFF BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE].

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 5833) temporarily to provide revenue for the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, when I concluded yesterday I said I had presented perhaps as much as it was necessary for me to present to attract the attention of the Senate to the complaint which is universal, that we are not carrying on the war in the Philippine Islands as we ought to carry it on. I might have presented to the Senate a still larger array of evidence of the same character if I had desired, but I did not care to encumber the RECORD with anything more in that line.

I do not intend by the presentation of these various newspaper articles and telegraphic dispatches from Manila to make myself at all responsible for the charges which are made in them. I think it belongs to the Senate when a prima facie case is made to investigate it. The Senate is now investigating those subjects through its committee, and I think the committee should take up that phase of the subject. Whether the charges be true or not, the American people should know; whether or not they are true, the American people should have some information on this subject. This morning I have received a recent number of the Army and Navy Journal, which repeats this charge of maltreatment of Filipinos. I do not care to read it, for it is practically what has already been read.

I do not mean to bring against the American Army a charge of cruelty, except as the facts are convincing that such a condition exists. I do not wish to attack the Army; I do not wish to complain of it. I know very well the duty of a soldier is to obey his orders, and if soldiers of the United States have inflicted cruelties upon the prisoners they have taken or upon people whom they suspect of having information which they desire to secure, the responsibility for that rests with the Government itself; it rests with the commanding officers of the Army, and not with the common soldiers.

I confess that such things are not pleasant to repeat in the Senate and to the country. The debate itself is not pleasant. It is never agreeable to be compelled to criticise men in public life, and yet without such criticism it would be utterly impossible to maintain a republican form of government.

I especially wish to disclaim any undue criticism of the Army, for I must say that when men of education and learning, men occupying high positions, men who have had all the benefits of the culture of the schools and have been under the refining influences of church and home in a land of liberty like ours enact a law concerning sedition such as has been presented here and then defend it, and when it finds numerous defenders on the floor of this Senate under the plea that it is war, you can not and must not be hard upon the common soldier, who perhaps is less fortunate and has not had the training and opportunities of his superiors and who sees in every Filipino an enemy of the country, and who justifies himself in practicing unusual cruelties on the Filipino because "it is war."

THE FEDERAL PARTY IN THE PHILIPPINES.

Since I concluded yesterday discussing to some extent the controversy which arose between the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] and myself upon a question of fact there has come here to the Senate of the United States a memorial from the Federal party in the Philippines, which has been read in our hearing and is now found in the RECORD, which I think confirms the position I took, and seems to me to be an absolute refutation of the position taken by the Senator from Connecticut.

This matter, after its presentation, was very pointedly discussed for a few moments by my colleague [Mr. PATTERSON], and I shall merely say that it seems to me to present to us, coming as it does and in the way it has come, the question fairly whether or not we are to have any legislation now on this subject. I can not for myself understand how the party in power is going to escape the responsibility of replying in some way to this memorial by an affirmative act giving those people to understand what is to be our policy.

To some this may seem to be an encouraging epistle, but to me it is exceedingly discouraging. One very positive idea is to be found in it, and that is, that the people over there who are connected with the Federal party, which we are led to believe by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] have a large part of the population there in actual or in sympathetic relation with them, want some definitive and established form of government. They are willing to accept, first, a territorial government, and then they wish ultimately to become a State in the Union. They have gone to the people of those islands with the assertion that if they would submit to the Government of the United States and yield obedience to it, first as a Territory and ultimately as a State, their rights would be recognized. They tell us that under no circumstances will it do to have what is evidently proposed by the present legislation or even what is proposed by the offered legislation, which has not reached us in a shape to be taken up definitely and determined, that there must be absolute independence on the one side, or there must be annexation and incorporation in the Government of the United States, first, as a Territory and then as a State.

Mr. President, I believe we owe it to those people to say to them either one thing or the other—that we are either going to do that or that we are not. If the Federal party is really an important agent for the pacification of the islands, as Governor Taft tells us it is, and upon which pacification over there so far as it has gone now rests, then we should no longer allow the people to be deceived. If we do not intend to make a State of the Philippine Islands, we should promptly tell them that they are going to the people on a false basis, on a false premise, and that we can not carry out their wishes and aspirations.

They tell us substantially if that is denied to them there will be confusion and anarchy and revolution as bad as, or probably even worse, than exists now. The entire memorial is in the RECORD. I do not care to read a single extract from it. Senators have heard it read; and it is for the party in power to respond, or, if they do not they will be in the attitude of allowing those people of the Federal party to deceive the people of the Philippine Islands, and when their eyes shall be opened to the fact of the deception practiced upon them everybody must know what the result will be. If we shall have withdrawn our army, then there will be need of another army.

DIVERGENT VIEWS.

I have very positive views on this subject. I had very positive views, even before the treaty reached us, as to our duty in the premises. I have not hesitated to declare those views on this floor repeatedly, and I want to repeat them.

While the Administration appears to have no settled policy whatever, a few Senators here have enunciated their individual policies. So far as they have been stated, they seem so far to be discordant with the views of the Administration. On the 20th of December, 1898, before we had received the Spanish treaty, but when we knew its contents in a general way by cablegrams from Europe, I said:

I believe in the principle which was enunciated in the fourth clause of the joint resolution approved April 20, 1898:

"That the United States hereby disclaims any disposition or intention to exercise sovereignty, jurisdiction, or control over said island, except for the pacification thereof, and asserts its determination, when that is accomplished, to leave the government and control of the island to its people.

That was a quotation from the resolution. Then I said:

That is a declaration solemnly made by the people of the United States when it was apparent to us all that we were going to war.

Later I said:

That in terms only applied to Cuba, but in principle it applied to every possession of ours acquired during this war. If any Senator had suggested that in addition to Cuba there should be added the words "or any other possession we may acquire during this war," it would have met, as this joint resolution met, I believe, the unanimous support of this body and of the other, and also of the President of the United States, as is suggested to me by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR]. These words would have been added to the joint resolution with the approbation of all.

I continued at some length, urging that that was an obligation upon us; that our duty and our interests were alike united in securing to the Filipinos such a government as we had indicated we were going to secure for Cuba. I said I thought that was justice to them, and I also announced that we would make a mistake if we denied it to them. I suggested that if we did not do them justice, we might have war, and if we did, 50,000 soldiers would not be enough for that archipelago.

I have before me also a letter written by Hon. George Frisbie Hoar, dated January 11, 1900, in which he enunciated what he regarded the duty of the United States in those matters. He said:

I would send General Wood or General Miles or Admiral Dewey to Luzon. I would have him gather about him a cabinet of the best men among the Filipinos, who have the confidence of the people and desire nothing but their welfare. In all provinces and municipalities where civil government is now established possessing the confidence of the people, I would consult with their rulers and representatives. I would lend the aid of the Army of the United States only to keep order. I would permit the people to make laws and to administer laws, subject to some supervision or inspection, till the disturbed times are over and peace has settled down again upon that country, insuring the security of the people against avarice, ambition, or peculation.

So soon as it seems that government can maintain itself peacefully and in order I would, by degrees, withdraw the authority of the United States, making a treaty with them that we would protect them against the cupidity of any other nation and would lend our aid for a reasonable time to maintain order and law. I would not hesitate, if it were needful, although I have not the slightest belief that it would be needful, to vote to make them a loan of a moderate sum to replenish their wasted treasury.

Mr. President, I will not stop to read what I further said on the subject, except to remark that after the 20th of December I was in full accord with the view expressed in that letter, and declared before the Senate that I thought it was our duty to call upon our representatives in the Philippines to say to the leading men of the provinces in a general way what we thought they ought to do, and to advise them to go to work and bring order out of the then unsettled condition by establishing a government of their own. But we did not do that. We have carried on a war for three years; we have carried it on against the people in those islands in a vigorous manner. I am not one of those who are willing to say that the United States Government can not subdue the people of the Philippine Archipelago. I know a population of 80,000,000, with the great resources of the United States, can ultimately do what General Chaffee says they are determined to do, and that is to stamp out opposition to the United States.

INCREASE OF THE ARMY.

I was asked the other day if I did not vote for the increase of the Army. I suppose it was intended by that question to intimate that, having voted for the increase of the Army for the purpose for which the Government has since used it, I was bound not to criticise present conditions. I voted for the Army without any knowledge that it would be used to subjugate or to distress the Filipinos, but I presume I should have voted for the increase, because at that time we were technically at war with Spain, even if I had known that Army might have been used for some improper purposes. I suppose, perhaps, on the highest plane of morality it may be demanded of me, and of every other Senator here, that when the administration of public affairs asks us for an appropriation for the Army, we should go into the question and see whether it is an absolutely righteous purpose for which they use it, but yet such have not been American precedents or American history.

I admit that perhaps I have not reached that plane where I can look out and see the whole world on an absolute equality with my own country. I sympathize with struggling people everywhere. When I see a people attempting to exercise the rights of freemen, protesting against what they regard as oppression, my heart goes out to them, as I believe the heart of every Senator here does. And yet when the Army of the United States is executing orders for which it is not responsible I can not bring myself to see with pleasure the destruction of that Army. While I deplore the loss of life that such a conflict must bring, yet I shall reserve the right on all occasions to hope and trust, if I possibly can, that my side—the American side—has been in the right. In other words, much as I sympathize with the people in the Philippine Islands, I can not wish misfortune to the American arms, and I presume that I shall again vote for an appropriation in the Army bill, which may be used for purposes which, if I had the control of it, it would not be used for.

The people in 1900 continued in power the political organization which for four years had been in the control of the Government. They had a right to do so. I did not believe it was wise, and I do not believe it now; but the people so believed. I do not believe the voters intended to say that they approved of this war and the condition as it now is, but they authorized and empowered the present Administration to carry on the war as it saw fit. I yield obedience to the American mandate at the polls, but I enter my protest here. When I have done that, in my judgment, I have discharged the duty incumbent upon me. I am not required to stand here and attempt to defeat an appropriation bill because I think the Administration is not carrying on the war as I believe the American people want it carried on, for the great mass of the people of the United States intrusted that duty to the judgment of that political organization, and to that they must look. If they do not like it, they must wait until an opportunity comes to change it.

THE WAY OUT OF IT.

Mr. President, I have not made this speech, I will say, with the hope that I would convince anybody who has not already been convinced that the methods now employed are not calculated to bring about what we all desire, and that is peace in those islands. I have felt ever since this difficulty began that properly our policy as a nation and the disposition of this question belongs to the party in power. Theirs is the primary obligation; but I can not disconnect myself from it to the extent that it is not necessary for me, I believe, as a member of this body, to enter my protest against that which I think is wrong, and to give my support to that which is right. I believe there is a way out of this difficulty; I think I can see it. I have not the power to command. My judgment is simply that of one individual. The administration of public affairs is in the hands of those who are supposed to represent the majority of the American people.

Mr. ALDRICH. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. ALDRICH. I presume the Senator has already stated what that "way" is; but if he has not, I should be very glad to hear him state it now.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I will state that I believe there are more ways than one. I believe if you will accept the proposition made in the petition of the Federal party that you can settle things in the Philippine Islands. I believe if you will give those people to understand that they shall be a State in the Union you can compose your differences. I, however, do not want to settle it in that way, nor do I believe Senators who sit on the other side of the Chamber want to do it in that way. The expression that we had during the debate on the treaty and almost every utterance from the other side of the Chamber since were and have been in antagonism to that suggestion.

Mr. ALDRICH. If the Senator will pardon me, do I understand him to state that as his plan?

Mr. TELLER. I am coming to that. I believe that is one plan. I would rather do what some people speak of with scorn and derision; I would rather withdraw the Army from those islands and turn the islands over to the people and let them work out their own destiny as best they may than to make them a part and parcel of the United States. I do not want to incorporate into the United States a population equal to one-tenth of our number which is so discordant with ours. I believe the strength of any nation is the homogeneity of its people and their harmonious relation one with another. I do not believe you can put our people and any large number of Asiatics together without ultimate friction and ultimate disagreement. If you establish a whole community of that character, you will have trouble with that community; they will not be in harmony with our views on general subjects, and there ought not to be that relation.

Is there any other way? The Federal party, strong and influential as they declare themselves to be in the paper read yesterday, say a colony will not do. They say independence under a protectorate will not do, and yet Mr. Schurman——

Me. ALLISON. With or without a protectorate?

Mr. TELLER. They said independence would not do with protection.

Mr. ALDRICH and Mr. SPOONER. Or without.

Mr. TELLER. Oh, Mr. President, they do not say the people would not be satisfied. They say the people would not maintain a proper government. They say—I am speaking now of the people—that the people there want a State government; that the people want independence. Some of them say, at least, that independence would not do and that anarchy and confusion would arise out of that.

Now, I take it for granted we are not going to give them a State government. If anybody on the other side of the Chamber thinks that is the solution of the problem, let him say so. I confess that, much as I should dislike to see those islands made into a State and admitted into the Union, I would infinitely prefer that plan, disastrous as I believe it would be, to the present condition, which I believe is one that will continue practically indefinitely, for while we have the power, as I said before, to stamp out this opposition you can not change the public sentiment of eight or ten million people by the use of the sword.

Mr. ALDRICH. I should like to state that the Federal party in their memorial protest against having independence with or without a protectorate.

Mr. TELLER. Yes; that is what I understand.

Mr. ALDRICH. As I understand the Senator from Colorado—and I am not trying to put any words in his mouth——

Mr. TELLER. I think not.

Mr. ALDRICH. I know he has occupied a very patriotic position in regard to this whole matter. I understand that at the present moment, in view of all the difficulties, the Senator sees no way of dealing with the Philippine Islands except to send them out into the world to take care of themselves.

Mr. TELLER. No; I did not say that.

Mr. ALDRICH. That is what I understood the Senator to say.

Mr. TELLER. No. I said, rather than to make them into a State I would send them out and let the consequences follow. If the Federal party are right and anarchy would prevail, let it go. Anarchy prevails there now, and it will prevail there under the present system.

Mr. ALDRICH. As I understand the memorial of the Federal party, they suggest a Territorial form of government.

Mr. TELLER. First.

Mr. ALDRICH. With the hope that ultimately it may result in statehood.

Mr. TELLER. Very good.

Mr. ALDRICH. Now, does the Senator carry his opposition to the balance of it so far that he would not vote for a Territorial form of government there?

Mr. TELLER. I should vote for a Territorial form of government, but that is not the question. They do not say a Territorial form of government will answer their purpose and maintain peace. They do not stop at that, as I can show you if you have any question about it. They want a Territorial government under the Constitution of the United States. They want to be put in the same relation that the Territory of Colorado was in for fifteen or sixteen years and that other Territories were and are in.

A government of that kind is not so very objectionable. The only difficulty we of Colorado had during the fifteen or sixteen years was that we were deprived of the privilege of voting for President of the United States; we were deprived of the privilege of electing our own governor; we were deprived of the privilege of electing certain judges, but we elected the great body of the judges of the Territory. We elected county judges and county treasurers and county commissioners and an auditor of state. We elected various officers. We were a people who were able pretty well to take care of ourselves, and when judges did not behave themselves we made it "warm" for them, so that they got out and we got somebody else. We never had much trouble with the governors. We had some exceedingly good men as Territorial governors. When we organized the State, we took the man who had been Territorial governor, appointed by the President of the United States, and put him on our ticket and elected him governor of the State. My recollection is we elected him twice—once afterwards—but I do not just at this moment recall with certainty that that is true.

But that is not sufficient for these people. They must have also a promise of statehood. But if Senators believe they can compose this difficulty by giving them simply a territorial form of government and not commit the Government of the United States to their ultimate admission into the Union, that is another question. I think if you will read carefully this statement and the statement made by these people to General MacArthur, published I think in this document, and also in the Commission's report, you will find they want more than that and they are going beyond that. They do not stop with the statement "we are going to be a Territory of the United States." But they add "we are going to be a State of the United States."

THE QUESTION OF TERRITORY.

Mr. SPOONER. While perhaps it is not pertinent to what the Senator has been saying, yet we hear a good deal in these latter days as to a distinction between territory belonging to the United States, or appurtenant, or whatever you choose to call it, and incorporated Territories. What, according to the Senator's notion, constitutes the distinction?

Mr. TELLER. The distinction may not be very marked in law, while quite so in fact.

Mr. SPOONER. I do not know, and that is why I asked the Senator.

Mr. TELLER. I think it is a leading question, and since within the last few years the Supreme Court has got to deciding certain questions, as it seems to me, with some political bias, I am almost afraid to state what that court would decide where a political question is involved. I understand the fact to be, not the law——

Mr. SPOONER. If we organize a Territory, no matter how we organize it, I suppose we could repeal the law organizing it?

Mr. TELLER. Undoubtedly.

Mr. SPOONER. What is the test—that is what I want to get at—between a territory appurtenant and an incorporated Territory.

Mr. TELLER. We have not had any experience with that question. With every acquisition of territory we have taken a pledge as to the citizenship, including the last, and that we took with the declaration that Congress should fix the citizenship of these people, which we have not done, but we have the power to do it.

Mr. PATTERSON. In response to the question of the Senator from Wisconsin, though not propounded to me, I will state that I understand the Federal party to mean——

Mr. SPOONER. I am not talking about the Federal party.

Mr. PATTERSON. By a Territorial form of government under the Constitution—that is what you are talking about?

Mr. SPOONER. No.

Mr. PATTERSON. Then I misunderstand you altogether.

Mr. SPOONER. What I am talking about is this: The distinction has been drawn between territory appurtenant and therefore in a sense not a part of the United States, and territory incorporated into the United States. I was trying to get from the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] his notion as to what is the foundation for the distinction, how they differ, in what respect they differ. I am not speaking of this petition at all.

Mr. PATTERSON. May I make a suggestion in connection with it?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. PATTERSON. A Territory incorporated into the United States, such as New Mexico and Arizona and the Indian Territory and Oklahoma, so far as the Constitution of the United States is concerned, in the matter of tariff laws and revenue laws and all other laws of a general nature made to carry into effect the will of Congress with reference to the States and Territories of the United States, is on an absolute equality with the States. In other words, you could not apply, in principle or in fact, the proposed law, which it is the purpose of Congress to apply to the Philippine Islands, to a Territory incorporated into the United States. You could not draw a customs line around New Mexico or around Arizona and say that different revenues shall be collected at that custom line on goods going into those Territories or goods coming out of those Territories, but the custom laws must be applicable to all alike, States and Territories.

The writ of habeas corpus is there. The entire Bill of Rights ingrafted into the Constitution is there, not by the grace of an officer, a so-called governor, or by the grace of a United States commission, but by virtue of the Constitution of the United States. But the Philippine Islands are not in that category at all. The present bill keeps them as a colony, with the right of Congress to legislate for that colony entirely independent of and outside of the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. SPOONER. I am obliged to the Senator from Colorado [Mr. PATTERSON] for giving me a great deal of information, much of which I am not at all certain is true. He says that the Philippines are not incorporated, and New Mexico and the Indian Territory and Arizona are incorporated, into the United States, and that the Constitution ex proprio vigore, I suppose he means, extends over those Territories. I do not know by what warrant the Senator says that. I do know that Congress has adopted as a law in each of those Territories the applicable provisions of the Constitution. The Senator says that the customs laws of the United States, the Constitution being over those Territories, and the excise laws, etc., must be uniform.

Mr. PATTERSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. SPOONER. I recollect one case, the Cherokee tobacco case, in which the Supreme Court held that the Indian Territory was the territory of the United States, and sustained the validity of a law which exempted that Territory from certain taxes which were in force in all the United States or the States united and in the other Territories.

Mr. PATTERSON. It should be perfectly apparent——

Mr. SPOONER. I beg the Senator's pardon. I did not mean to become involved in a discussion in his time, and I did not ask the question which I put to the senior Senator from Colorado except as one lawyer asks another in whose ability he has confidence.

Mr. TELLER. I will state to the Senator what I think is the distinction between unorganized and organized territory, and will give an instance to illustrate my meaning.

After we had admitted Missouri there was in the extreme West a region which had no relation to the General Government, because there was no population there. There was no attempt to make a Territory. When Kansas was organized into a Territory, Kansas included a portion of what is now Colorado. In 1859–60 there was a large population in the area afterwards included in Colorado which was claimed by people living in eastern Kansas. The whole community disputed this claim. They said: "We are not in Kansas."

There were probably 50,000 people. Some Kansas officials went up there, and I believe they attempted to organize that country into a county, but they did not succeed, because whatever might have been the statutes, the people repudiated them, and the whole community proceeded to govern themselves just as if there were not any question where the line was, asserting they were not within the boundaries of Kansas as originally established. The controversy continued in that way from 1859 until the fall of 1861, when the statute creating Colorado as a Territory took effect. It was passed in February, but there was no government organized there for some time. The miners' courts, which we had established in the mountains, and what they called the provincial courts, in the valleys among the farmers, continued to exercise their jurisdiction till October of that year, although the Territory was established in the February preceding. We maintained that the Territorial law did not take effect until our judges and the governor arrived.

The governor and the judges came out late in the summer, and in October they organized courts. There was an attempt to organize in one section before that, but the people repudiated the whole proceeding, because they did not think that it was organized. There we were without any national control whatever, and yet subject to the general allegiance to the Government. The civil war was then in progress. We enlisted men, and it turned out afterwards that we enlisted them without authority from anybody; but the Government accepted them, and we maintained all the conditions of an orderly and well-regulated society everywhere.

Now, I call that an unorganized Territory. We evaded the question whether we were really in Kansas, but, as we did not recognize Kansas, we stood on a line where we might retreat.

Then came the organized Territory. Our legislature met in the month of October, and from that time on, of course, all our proceedings conformed to the demands of the Territorial law. Now, at that time there were sections of the country still west of us, I think southwest, which were not included in any Territory; at least if they were so included, society was absolutely without any government except as the people themselves created it.

I do not know whether or not the civil Commission established in the Philippines has made an organized Territory of those islands. I do not know what would be the decision on that point, but I believe the enactment for Porto Rico did make it an organized Territory, and I think, although we did not say so, that it is an organized Territory.

I have not any doubt myself that the inhabitants of Porto Rico are citizens of the United States, although ex industria we did not say so. A provision in the bill that they should be citizens was stricken out, but I have not any doubt that if they should come here and attempt to exercise the rights of citizenship in the United States it would be held that they were citizens. I do not see how such a holding could be avoided.

I should have some difficulty in satisfying my own mind that the Philippines are organized properly into a Territory, because a Territorial organization means, or it has heretofore meant, participation by the people under such provisions as Congress may make.

WOULD GIVE THE PHILIPPINES A GOVERNMENT.

I know this is a very ugly question. I said I had a method. If I had control of this matter—that is, if I were in charge of the Executive duties—I would send a commission with all the authority I could give it, to say to those people of the Philippines just what I have said in my amendment to the bill, on which I mean to say a few words before I quit. I would say to them, "Now, we do not intend to do what you have been insisting we are doing. We want you to get together and determine what kind of a government you want," as the Federal party there has done. I do not know whether the government suggested by the Federal party would be the best government for them to have, speaking about their local affairs; but if they want a legislature and all that, I should give it to them, and then I should say to them:

"We do not want to make you citizens of the United States. We want to give you absolute independence, so far as your local affairs are concerned. You shall do everything you could do as citizens of a State. We will not interfere with you. If nobody interferes with you, if foreign powers will let you alone, you shall govern yourselves entirely. If foreign powers will not let you alone we will see that you are not disturbed. You need not create an army or a navy."

I would do for them just what Cuba expects us to do for her. The Senator from Rhode Island knows what Cuba expects us to do. They do not expect in Cuba to have an army or a navy under this new government. They expect to make some arrangements with us by which our Army and our Navy will be available for their assistance whenever there is a necessity for it. I will ask the Senator if I have misstated what he thinks on the subject.

Mr. ALDRICH. Will the Senator please restate it?

Mr. TELLER. I say I would do what the people of Cuba expect us to do and what we expect to do for Cuba. I said the Cuban people, from what they said to our subcommittee, of which the Senator and myself are members, do not intend to create either an army or a navy. The representative men said in very explicit terms that if there was foreign trouble they would look to us; and when I asked one of the committee, "How are you going to collect your revenue and prevent smuggling?" he said they expected some arrangement with the United States, which they would be glad to make, because they did not feel rich enough to have either an army or a navy.

I should say to the Filipinos, "If anybody attempts to smuggle, we will send out a ship or ships and see that they are not permitted to do so." all of which is subject to some arrangement to be made with them. I do not believe there would be any difficulty at all in doing that with those people, for that is local independence. Except as concerns their foreign relations they would be as independent as they could be under absolute independence; and Mr. Schurman says they were devoted to the idea that the United States was to have a protectorate over them. Every leading Filipino, so far as I know, who at the time of the ratification of the treaty, or just previous to it, expressed an opinion, said that whatever relation they had to the world was to be subject to our general supervision. "Protectorate" is the usual term to be applied in such cases; with that I believe they would be satisfied.

That would be my position, and I would send out there, as I have said two or three times in this speech—I believe it is important to do it, and we were told a year ago it would be done—a commission, not of Senators and Members, but a commission of clear-headed men; not a commission of three or five, but a commission of fifteen or twenty, if necessary. It should be composed of men who, when they went over there, would take in every phase of the difficulty; who would consider every proposition that ought to be considered, but primarily would consider how to satisfy those people and make them trust us. That is the great problem now that we are to deal with. I want to deal with this matter in a practical way. I am not a theorist.

I believe those people are capable of self-government. They are not capable of maintaining a State, like the inhabitants of Colorado or the people of Wisconsin or of Indiana. They can not maintain, and they will not in a hundred years, with all our help and all our assistance, be able to maintain, such communities as we maintain. Our Commission say they hope they may be able to do so in a generation, but more likely, say the Commission, it will be two generations. It will be a thousand years before the Asiatic mind will stand before the world representing those great fundamental truths of free government for which the Teutonic branches of the human race stand. It is not in them. They do not think like we do. Their minds do not run in the same way. Their ideas of justice and right are as distinct from ours as day is from night. It has always been so, and it always will be so, because there will be no such amalgamation of the race with the great liberty-loving race of the world as will change them.

THE QUESTION OF SOVEREIGNTY.

Mr. McCOMAS. If the Senator will permit me, I did not hear the first part of his statement. What does the Senator propose to do with the sovereignty over the islands, which has been ceded to us?

Mr. TELLER. The sovereignty is simply the right we have to exercise power. Now, we can exercise full sovereignty if we want to do so and if we think it is worth while to do so. We can execute a moiety of it if we so desire. We can submit to the people, so far as sovereignty there is concerned, control of their own affairs absolutely without interference on our part; always, of course, reserving the right to intervene if society should be disrupted or broken up there, as we would in Cuba, without the Platt resolution and without any contract with those people.

Mr. McCOMAS. Then, if the Senator will permit me, if the sovereignty should be ceded to some entities or some one in the islands, what would become of our obligation to Spain for ten years, under article 4 of the treaty, with respect to the ships and merchandise of Spain?

Mr. TELLER. Oh, that is a matter about which there would be no trouble. Does the Senator from Maryland believe that if we should make an arrangement with those people they would object to that provision being included in their constitution or the charter upon which they acted?

Mr. McCOMAS. The Senator will allow me. I did not mean to divert him. If the Filipinos should object, would we not then have all the responsibility resulting from our obligations under that treaty?

Mr. TELLER. We are not likely to make any arrangement satisfactory to those people wherein they would stand upon any question of that kind. We would say to them, "Here is an obligation we have assumed. You must carry that out." They would be glad to do so; and if they did not do it we would have the power, I suppose, to make them do it. That is borrowing trouble when there is none in sight. It is a suggestion of a difficulty which, in my judgment, does not exist. There are difficulties ahead of us, I want to say to the Senator from Maryland, and it is not worth while to imagine some things that probably never will arise to plague us or trouble us. If there was any trouble of that kind, it would not take long to ask Spain what she would take in the way of indemnity to let us off from that provision, and if she said she wanted a hundred million dollars for it, and it is not worth a million, I would infinitely rather give her a hundred million dollars than to continue the present condition. If that were the only obstacle, it would not stand in the way in the slightest, in my opinion.

I think it is in our interest and our duty to compose affairs in the Philippine Islands, if it is within the realm of possibility. It is not the Deity or destiny that has put upon us an obligation of that kind. I am courageous enough myself in the interest of the American people to resist the pretense that it is both, because I do not believe either the Deity or destiny has had anything to do with this matter at all.

IN THE MATTER OF TRADE.

We are expending a large sum of money, for which we are getting no return, and we never will get any return commensurate with the expense. There is not any hope of it. These are not a people that will ever become valuable to us. Their trade with us is less than that of any second-rate town west of the Alleghenies with the Eastern States to-day.

You can not go into any town of 25,000 people west of the Alleghenies whose trade is not worth more to the States east of the Allegheny Mountains than the entire trade we get from the Philippines or are likely to get. When we cease to export whisky, wine, and beer there, which is one-half of the trade now, the amount of our exports, I think, will be immensely small. It is a million less, I want to say, than it was last year, while that of England is very much greater. If we secure any trade at all with the Philippine Islands, we must secure it because it is to the interest of the inhabitants to trade with us. If there is any better market in the world than we furnish, they will go to that market.

I do not know how much the war in the Philippine Islands has cost us. I do not know that anyone is aware of the amount. I have seen it stated at all the way from $300,000,000 to $500,000,000. I do not know how much it is going to cost us in the future.

One hopeful, optimistic commissioner tells us that in a few years 15,000 soldiers will be sufficient in the Philippines. Another, not a commissioner, but another person with equal and better opportunities, tells us that it will take 50,000 men for many years to maintain peace and order.

Mr. President, if three-quarters of those people want our domination, there should be no necessity for 15,000 or any other number of troops over there. But 15,000 will be a great burden, and more likely the number will be 50,000.

Now, what do you get for that outlay? What could you do with that money if you had it? What could we have done with the $350,000,000 or $400,000,000 that we have expended over there in the last three years? You could have practically made all the great rivers in this country highways for the commerce of the country beyond any further necessity of expenditure for many years. You might have opened a ship canal from the Gulf of Mexico to the Great Lakes which the biggest ship in the world could traverse with the amount of money that we have expended there with no benefit whatever. With what we are to expend, even according to the optimistic views of the chairman of the Commission, you could in a few years build a waterway up around through to the Great Lakes from the city of New York, where you could run ships of large capacity. You could open, as I said, all the great rivers of the country. There are a thousand things that you could do with so much money.

We are going on here year after year with an expense for which there is no recompense and no reward. Why? Because, some say, our commercial interests require it. Some say our obligation to the Divine Master demands it. The interest of the American people does not require it, our duty to the Filipino does not require it, nor do I believe that our duty to God requires it. I therefore think we ought to compose this difficulty in some way.

Now, I know there is a proposition here to give the Philippine people a new government. If that is all that is offered to them, and when that is enacted into a law and carried over there the Federal party will disband, and the difficulties will again arise which have existed and which they in some part probably have composed, for, if the Federal party tell the truth, they will not accept that kind of a government, either as a territorial or as an independent government.

Mr. President, why can we not compose those difficulties there? Are we afraid that the world looking on will say that the United States, great as it is, is not big enough to tramp out the resisting brown men of the archipelago? Are we afraid of sneers from abroad? I hear every little while that our duty demands that we should do this and that we should do that, and that if we do not do it we will be the derision of mankind. Sir, I would do what is right before God, and let the criticisms of men come. If I could feel that the legislation comported with justice and right, I would not care what the world said about it. All the acclaim and all the eulogies and the praise of the world for our conduct can not compensate for the feeling that we must have in our hearts that we are not legislating upon the high plane of American liberty and American law.

I would a thousand times rather have the commendation of American judgment than the commendation of all mankind aside from that. I believe, as I said yesterday, that if we will show as much statesmanship in connection with this matter as we did show in connection with the Chinese question, we will get out of this difficulty with honor to ourselves and with profit and blessing to the people of those islands.

A SOURCE OF WEAKNESS TO THE UNITED STATES.

I believe that a wise administration of affairs may be beneficial to those people, but I do not think that you can force upon them a government contrary to what their notions may be of right, and have peace there. I believe that probably we can with our Army prevent any considerable resistance to American control, but there will be in the hearts of those people (and it will last, as we know, not this generation, but the next and the next and the next) a feeling that they have been improperly treated, and when the opportunity is presented they will resent it and vindicate their manhood, if they are men, by declaring themselves independent of our control.

Our great strength has been that we have been a compact and solid nation. There has been no place for foreign lodgment on our shores. Since we composed the difficulty of 1861–1865 there has been no place where a foreign foe could land that would not have found an absolutely united people against them. It would not have been the invasion of the United States; it would have been the invasion of the neighborhood where the foreign foe stepped, and every man would have been there ready to defend his home. Will it be so in the Philippine Islands? If they are hostile to us and we are holding them simply by the strong arm of the great Army of ours, when difficulties shall arise (and nobody can say when in the course of human events there will be controversies in the great Asiatic Sea where we may be in contest, as I have not any doubt we will be, with foreign powers, either Asiatic or European) we will find these islands a source of absolute weakness and of absolute danger, while if the people were in heart with us they would be a genuine benefit to us under these conditions.

Mr. President, it is worth while, if we are to hold those people, to attach them to us not by the strong arm of the law, but by the tender and strong cords of affection and respect. We are great and strong and we can afford to be merciful and charitable. There are many things that we could do there. I should like to see the Government of the United States now take such steps as shall convince the Filipinos that we are their friends. I am willing to open the Treasury door. I am willing to say to those people: "You have an ugly question of title to your soil here. It will cost something to get rid of the religious body which holds a great portion of the good land, and we are under obligation to Spain to protect them in it by our treaty. We will buy that property of the friars and we will not sell it to you, but we will give it to you in such quantities as is consistent with your needs and your wants." Suppose it did cost us a good deal of money; I would give it to them. I would say to them, "Your revenues are small; if we can compose this difficulty by giving you money to be expended in opening up your roads, rehabilitating the waste places that war has devastated, we will do it."

But, Mr. President, I am very much afraid that this devastating war will go on, and it will go on until undoubtedly those people will submit; and when we have devastated the land, as one of those officers says, to the extent that a bird can not live in it, and the people are cowed and weighed down with the burden of our power, somebody will say, I suppose, as was said by the old Briton when he spoke of the plundering Romans, "They make a desert and call it peace."

We do not want peace in that way. We want peace with honesty and justice. We want a peace that will be beneficial to the Filipinos and beneficial to us. We can get it; and it is now for the party in power to determine whether that course will be pursued.

TO AMEND THE PENDING BILL.

I have offered an amendment to this bill. I do not know that it will meet the approval of anybody in the Senate, but it seemed to me to be a basis upon which we might start. I am not attached to the form of it, but I believe that it becomes now our duty and our interest to say to those people what we mean to do, although the chairman of the committee said we should not do so. If we mean to hold them with the strong hand of the law and make colonies of them, let us be honest and say so. Let us increase the army there and compel obedience to our unfair and unwise demands if that is to be the policy of the Government.

I have proposed to provide by my amendment—and I want it to go into the RECORD—

That it is not intended by the Government of the United States to permanently annex the Philippine Islands as an integral part of the United States—

That this Senate has declared heretofore—

but it is the determination of the United States to establish, with the consent and assistance of the inhabitants thereof, a government or governments suitable to their wants and condition—

That every man who has spoken on the other side of the Chamber has declared to be the purpose of the Government of the United States. But his word does not go there. I want the American people through the Congress of the United States to make that declaration—suitable to their wants and condition, and that shall give to the inhabitants the control and administration of their local affairs, such as the raising of revenue and the disposition thereof—the maintenance of peace and order in the several communities of said islands that have been or that may be organized by the people thereof.

That we are bound by every law of right to give them.

SEC. —. That there is no intention on the part of the Government of the United States to deprive the people of said islands of their liberties or to subjugate or oppress them, but on the contrary to secure to them the blessings of a free government of their own choice that shall recognize and protect the rights and interests of all the people of said islands.

SEC. —. That it is necessary to the establishment of such government that peace and order shall prevail on said islands in order that the people thereof may be enabled to exercise the rights of freemen and to have free expression of their wishes in the form and character of the government under which they desire to live.

SEC. —. That to this end the Government of the United States will at all times cooperate with the peaceably disposed inhabitants in the formation of such governments, and will defend and protect such government or governments so organized from any foreign interference or attempted control by foreign powers until such government or governments shall be able to defend themselves.

Mr. President, there is not any time fixed in the amendment when that is to be done. I did not see how I could fix a time, and I do not know that anybody can do so. I doubt very much whether the sensible and intelligent people over there will demand that we shall fix a time. It might properly have been added, I think, that the principles enunciated here should be carried out as rapidly as possible.

I believe the public declaration in a law of that kind would meet very well the demand that they are making for local government. It is possible that it is not strong enough, but I am afraid it is too strong to satisfy those who have the control and management of this question.

I have on my table a good many things that I had intended, when I commenced this speech, to present. I have gone over with care the debate which occurred during the time the treaty was before the Senate, and the debates which have since taken place. I find that the Senate, and I may say also the other branch of Congress, if it is proper for me to refer to it, have been in accord with the proposition all the time that those people were to have a government of their own ultimately, so that the only question which seemed in dispute is as to how we are to attain that point where we can safely give them a government.

I want to conclude on this question as I began. Observers, students of history, will bear me out in the statement that there is no example whatever in the history of mankind where a great body of people numerous as these or half as numerous as these, have ever been elevated beyond their condition by the invasion of a superior race. If you could send over there a million American citizens or two million of them with our American ideas you could expedite and hasten this movement toward their elevation. That you can not do. There will not be in all those islands 10,000 Europeans and Americans; and if there are more than that number they will not be the men who go there to uplift and elevate those people; they will be the men who go there to exploit them. Men will go there to make wealth; they will not be the missionaries of good government. No, Mr. President, if there is to be an elevation, our standard is entirely too high for the Asiatic mind; it must be an Asiatic evolution and not an American one.

I agree that this problem is a difficult one, and I think we should take into consideration what we are trying to do. We are trying to do what the President declares never has been done, and what I declare never can be done. The President said it never was done with an Asiatic race. I declare that it never has been done—although the effort has been frequently tried—with any race whatever. The most promising race of the world has made its progress by its own ambition and ideals, and not from those of others, and so it will be with those people.

Mr. MITCHELL obtained the floor.

Mr. TELLER. If the Senator from Oregon will yield a moment, I wanted to introduce General Bell's proclamation. Mr. President, I do not care to make any comments on it except to say that if the condition there demands such an order—and I call the attention of Senators not simply to the order which was first issued, but to the order that went out with it to the subordinate commanders—if such an order is necessary or is justified, the condition over there is enough to make any American heart bleed. I should like to have General Bell's proclamation read, or that it may go into the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FOSTER of Washington in the chair). It will be read.

Mr. HOAR. Can it not be printed without being read at length?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes; it can.

Mr. BACON. I hope it may be read.

Mr. BATE. Let it be read,

Mr. TELLER. Some Senators around me ask to have it read. I am not particular whether it is read or not. Of course I have read it. I had never read it until last night.

Mr. BACON. I do not care to insist on the reading.

Mr. HOAR. I suggest that it go into the RECORD as if it were read.

Mr. BACON. I have no objection in the world to that course.

Mr. TELLER. That is what I asked in the first instance. However, I do ask the Senators who sit on the other side of the Chamber to read that order.

The matter referred to is as follows:

THE RECONCENTRATION ORDER.

The reconcentration order is dated at Batangas, December 8 last, and is as follows:

"To all station commanders:

"In order to put an end to enforced contributions, now levied by insurgents upon the inhabitants of sparsely settled and outlying barrios and districts by means of intimidation and assassination, commanding officers of all towns now existing in the provinces of Batangas and Laguna, including those at which no garrison is stationed at present, will immediately specify and establish plainly marked limits surrounding each town, bounding a zone within which it may be practicable, with an average-sized garrison, to exercise efficient supervision over and furnish protection to inhabitants (who desire to be peaceful) against the depredations of armed insurgents. These limits may include the barrios which exist sufficiently near the town to be given protection and supervision by the garrison, and should include some ground on which live stock could graze, but so situated that it can be patrolled and watched. All ungarrisoned towns will be garrisoned as soon as troops become available.

"Commanding officers will also see that orders are at once given and distributed to all the inhabitants within the jurisdiction of towns over which they exercise supervision, informing them of the danger of remaining outside of these limits, and that unless they move by December 25 from outlying barrios and districts, with all their movable food supplies, including rice, palay, chickens, live stock, etc., to within the limits of the zone established at their own or nearest town, their property (found outside of said zone at said date) will become liable to confiscation or destruction. The people will be permitted to move houses from outlying districts should they desire to do so, or to construct temporary shelter for themselves on any vacant land without compensation to the owner, and no owner will be permitted to deprive them of the privilege of doing so.

"In the discretion of commanding officers, the prices of necessities of existence may also be regulated in the interest of those thus seeking protection.

"As soon as peaceful conditions have been reestablished in the brigade these persons will be encouraged to return to their homes, and such assistance be rendered them as may be found practicable.

"J. F. BELL,
"Brigadier-General, Commanding."

COURSE OF ACTION OUTLINED.

This order was followed by a long telegraphic circular addressed by General Bell to all station commanders, which is probably the most remarkable document of its kind in the history of the United States. It sums up the difficulties of the situation in the Philippines and outlines a vigorous course of action for the suppression of the insurrection. It also bears date December 8, and is as follows:

"A general conviction, which the brigade commander shares, appears to exist that the insurrection in this brigade continues because the greater part of the people, especially the wealthy ones, pretend to desire but in reality do not want peace. That when all really want peace we can have it promptly. Under such circumstances it is clearly indicated that a policy should be adopted that will as soon as possible make the people want peace and want it badly.

"It is an inevitable consequence of war that the innocent must generally suffer with the guilty, for when inflicting merited punishment upon a guilty class it is unfortunately at times impossible to avoid the doing of damage to some who do not individually deserve it. Military necessity frequently precludes the possibility of making discriminations. This is regrettable, but it should be borne in mind that the greatest good to the greatest number can best be brought about by putting a prompt end to insurrection. A short and severe war creates in the aggregate less loss and suffering than benevolent war indefinitely prolonged. For reasons here indicated, which are well known to all, and chief of which is the delay and difficulty in ascertaining the exact truth, it will be impossible to wage war efficiently and at the same time do abstract justice in operations unquestionably essential to putting down an insurrection which has long continued in the territory of this brigade.

"Natural and commendable sympathy for suffering and loss and for those with whom friendly relations may have been maintained should therefore take a place subordinate to the doing of whatever may be necessary to bring a people who have as yet not felt the distressing effect of war to a realizing sense of the advantages of peace.

"War in the disturbed portions of this brigade, and when manifestly necessary in those portions supposed to be peaceful or which are under civil government, will be conducted in accordance with the provisions of General Order 100, Adjutant-General's Office, 1869, which publishes instructions for the government of armies of the United States in the field. The provisions of this order will be directly adhered to, but no station commander will put anyone to death as a measure of retaliation for assassination under sections 27, 28, 34, and 148 without obtaining authority from a superior commander, nor will the death penalty be inflicted in any case without similar authority. General Order 100 is now being reprinted at division headquarters, and when copies are received they will be distributed. Particular attention is invited to the last paragraph of section 62, in particular reference to the possible repetition of the Balanguiga affair.

OFFICERS URGED TO USE THEIR JUDGMENT.

"Commanding officers are urged and enjoined to use their discretion freely in adopting any or all measures of warfare authorized by this order which will contribute in their judgment toward enforcing the policy or accomplishing the purpose above announced.

"It is not necessary to seek or wait for authority from these headquarters to do anything or take any action which will contribute to the end in view. It is desired that subdistrict commanders accord to their subordinate officers and commanders a degree of confidence and latitude in operations similar to that herein conferred upon them. Such restraint and supervision only should be exercised as is dictated by sound discretion and as may be essential to securing concert of action and cooperation when desirable, adherence to authorized methods, and a uniform policy and harmonious action in working for a common end. Subordinate commanders and young officers of experience should not be restrained or discouraged without excellent reason, but should be encouraged to hunt for, pursue, and vigorously operate against armed bodies of insurgents wherever they may be found. Considering the comparative moralé of our troops and insurgents and the lack of reliable ammunition and training on the part of the latter, it is not believed there exists any just cause for exceptional caution or apprehension in attacking them boldly. At any rate, under present conditions, legitimate chances should be accepted, as excessive caution will do us incalculable harm. Except when the advantage in position and numbers are overwhelmingly on the side of the enemy, our troops should always assume the offensive and advance on and pursue them vigorously. The best defense against these people is to assume a vigorous offensive at once. To retire in the presence of this enemy is generally hazardous and discouraging to our troops.

NEED FOR CAREFULNESS.

"Nothing herein contained will be so interpreted as to warrant or excuse carelessness or a lack of well-known and proper precautions. Though troops should be aggressive, they should be military in methods and precautions against surprise and ambush should never be neglected.

"In addition to maintaining active operations against armed bands of insurgents, persistent and systematic efforts will be made through the use of spies, loyal police, native scouts, intelligence officers, provost-marshals, and provost courts to discover, apprehend, and punish all agents, collectors, organizers, contributors, and sympathizers who secretly aid, assist, and extend encouragement or comfort to those in arms. Many such persons will unquestionably be found among municipal officials and councils and tenientes or caberas or barrios.

UNTRUSTWORTHY TOWN OFFICERS.

"It is so probable as to amount almost to a certainty that the election of all town officials in the provinces of Batangas and Laguna has been dictated by Malvar or other insurgent leaders, and that they would never have been permitted to discharge their functions without molestation had they not continued to be subservient to the will of the insurgent leaders and been acting as their agents or at least have done nothing inconsistent with their interests. It is perfectly safe and easy for town councils to enact the most violent legislation against the insurrection and, sending copies thereof to the insurgent leaders, to secretly inform them that the legislation was enacted under compulsion of Americans or in order to deceive and lull them to sleep, but that the town officials propose to continue their aid of the insurrection secretly just as heretofore. It can be adopted, as a rule, without danger of error, that whenever an insurgent sympathizer writes a letter or takes any action under pretense of opposition to the insurrection that he will immediately secretly convey to insurgent officials the information that he was compelled to do so or did so to mislead Americans. The loyalty of persons should not be judged by such acts or by words alone, nor should the public enactments of councils in favor of peace and against insurrection be accepted as conclusive proof of the loyalty of town officials.

MAY BE KNOWN BY THEIR ACTS.

"The only acceptable and convincing evidence of the real sentiments of either individuals or town councils should be such acts publicly performed as must inevitably commit them irrevocably to the side of Americans by arousing the animosity and opposition of the insurgent element. Such acts are reliable evidence, but mere words are worthless. No person should be given credit for loyalty simply because he takes the oath of allegiance or secretly conveys to Americans worthless information and idle rumors which result in nothing. Those who publicly guide our troops in operations against the enemy, who denounce and assist in arresting the secret enemies of the Government, who publicly obtain and bring reliable and valuable information to commanding officers, those, in fact, who publicly array themselves against the insurgents and for Americans should be trusted and given credit for loyalty, but no others. No person should be given credit for loyalty solely on account of his having done nothing for or against us so far as known. Neutrality should not be tolerated. Every inhabitant should either be an active friend or be classed as an enemy.

DISLOYALTY OF THE NATIVE PRIESTS.

"Another dangerous class of enemies are wealthy sympathizers and contributors, who, though holding no official position, use all their influence in support of the insurrection, and, while enjoying American protection for themselves, their families, and property, secretly aid, protect, and contribute to insurgents. Chief and most important among this class of disloyal persons are native priests. It may be considered as practically certain that every native priest in the provinces of Batangas and La Laguna is a secret enemy of the Government and in active sympathy with insurgents. These are absolutely our most dangerous enemies, more dangerous even than armed insurgents because of their unequaled influence. They should be given no exemptions whatever on account of their calling. On the contrary, whenever sufficient evidence is obtainable they should be brought to trial.

"Should well-founded suspicion rest against them, in the absence of competent evidence, they should be confined and held as a necessary military precaution to preclude further activity or bad influence on their part. The same course should be pursued with all of this class, for to arrest anyone believed to be guilty of giving aid or assistance to the insurrection in any way, or of giving food or comfort to the enemies of the Government, it is not necessary to wait for sufficient evidence to lead to conviction by a court, but those strongly suspected of complicity with the insurrection may be arrested and confined as a military necessity and may be held indefinitely as prisoners of war, in the discretion of the station commander, or until receipt of other orders from higher authority It will frequently be found impossible to obtain any evidence against persons of influence as long as they are at liberty, but once confined evidence is easily obtainable.

AGAINST WEALTHY AND INFLUENTIAL.

"The apprehension and punishment of one individual of the abovementioned classes (men of wealth and standing and officials) is of greater importance and will exercise greater influence than the punishment of a hundred ignorant hombres, for whose suffering no principale cares a straw. The wealthy and influential and town and insurgent officials are therefore those against whom our most energetic efforts should be directed. The common people amount to nothing. They are merely densely ignorant tools, who blindly follow the lead of the principales. When guilty they must be arrested and confined in order to put an end to further activity on their part; but whenever it is possible to reach their chief or leader through their testimony they may be promised immunity from trial for such simple offenses as aiding and assisting or being insurgents. They should not be released, however, unless they are willing to demonstrate their loyalty by public participation in operations against their former leaders.

"Provost courts can not operate in the provinces of Cavite and Tayabas, but any disloyal person escaping from Batangas or Laguna into other provinces of the brigade may be there arrested by the military authorities and be sent back for trial by military courts in the province from which they escaped. Insurgents or armed ladrones residing in Cavite or Tayabas and operating across the line in Batangas or Laguna, or other persons living in Cavite or Tayabas, who furnish aid or assist the insurgents in any way or who engage in insurrectionary intrigues or operations will be arrested and reported to these headquarters for further instructions. Any station in Batangas or Laguna at which a provost court does not now exist will be reported and an officer recommended as such.

"Wherever the constabulary have been organized, cordial cooperation will be extended to and solicited from them. Commanding officers will promptly transmit by wire to other commanding officers any information which may possibly be of assistance to them, and are expected to seek cooperation and concert of action from each other whenever such may appear to be desirable.

"Additional telegraphic instructions will follow suggesting expedients or policies which are believed to be efficacious in particular contingencies. Acknowledge receipt.

"J. F. BELL,
"Brigadier-General, Commanding."

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, while the bill now under consideration was pending in the Philippines Committee of the Senate I submitted to the Senate, and had on my motion the same referred to that committee, certain proposed amendments. These proposed amendments were in substance as follows:

By the first amendment I proposed to place on the free list the following products of the United States going into the Philippine Archipelago: All cereals and all products of cereals, such as grain, wheat, oats, barley, flour, and the like; also wood and all manufactures of wood, such as lumber, shingles, furniture, and the like; all seeds and forage, meats and fish, fruits and vegetables. This amendment also provided that upon all other products going into the Philippines from the United States 50 per cent only of the rates of duty on each article and schedule, respectively, which are required by the Philippine Taft Commission tariff act to be levied, collected, and paid upon like articles imported from foreign countries should be levied, collected, and paid.

The second amendment proposed to levy and collect upon all articles coming into the United States from the Philippine Archipelago only 50 per cent of the rates of duty on each of the articles and schedules, respectively, which are required to be levied, collected, and paid upon like articles imported from foreign countries.

The committee, in the bill as reported, adopts these amendments only in part. They do recommend, however, that upon all articles the growth and product of the Philippine Archipelago coming into the United States from the Philippine Archipelago there shall be levied, collected, and paid only 75 per cent of the rates of duty required to be levied, collected, and paid upon like articles imported from foreign countries.

They further provide that the rates of duty which are required to be levied, collected, and paid upon the products of the Philippine Archipelago coming into the United States shall be less any duty or taxes levied, collected, and paid thereon upon the exportation thereof from the Philippine Archipelago, as provided by an act of the United States Philippine Commission, this to be done under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe; but all articles the growth and product of the Philippine Islands now admitted into the ports of the United States free of duty, and exported from the said islands for use and consumption in the United States, shall be, and are, exempt from any export duties imposed in the Philippine Islands.

My next and last proposition was to strike out all that portion of section 3 of the bill which provided that the same tonnage taxes shall be levied, collected, and paid upon all vessels coming into the United States from the Philippine Archipelago which are required by law to be levied, collected, and paid upon vessels coming into the United States from foreign countries. This amendment has been adopted by the committee, but in a modified form, so as to relate only to American vessels coming into the United States from the Philippine Archipelago, or engaged in traffic between the ports of the Philippine Archipelago.

This is a discrimination in favor of American vessels which is right and proper enough, although, in view of the limited number of American vessels now in use between the mainland and the islands, I believe it would have been wise to have released the tonnage tax on foreign vessels also, for a time at least, which would have been a further discrimination in favor of our own trade against foreign countries engaged in trade with us or with the Philippine Archipelago.

These several committee amendments are, in my judgment, a great improvement of the bill as it came from the House, but they do not go to the extent in improving the bill proposed by my amendments. And I am glad to see in this connection that the distinguished Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] has, since the bill has been reported to the Senate, proposed an amendment which goes even further in the direction of limiting trade restrictions between the archipelago and the United States.

By his amendment it is proposed that upon all articles the growth and product of the Philippine Archipelago coming into the United States from the Philippine Archipelago there shall be levied, collected, and paid only 25 per centum—instead of 75 per centum as agreed to by the committee—of the rates of duty which are required to be levied, collected, and paid upon articles imported from foreign countries. This proposed amendment of the distinguished Senator from Ohio shall have my cordial support. I only regret it does not go further and limit the duties on all products going from the United States into the Philippine Archipelago to 50 per centum, at least, of the duties exacted by the Philippine Commission as the same are brought into life by the first section of the bill.

I now crave the indulgence of the Senate for a short time while I shall present some of the reasons why, in my judgment, all these suggested amendments should have been incorporated in the bill.

Mr. President, I feel obligated, in view of the recent decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States, to assent to the principle recognized in the pending bill, both as it passed the House of Representatives and as reported to the Senate from the Philippines Committee, in so far as it recognizes the constitutional right of the Congress to levy such customs tariffs on the products of the Philippine Archipelago coming into this country, and on other products going from the United States to the islands of the archipelago, as Congress may deem necessary, expedient, and just; and I further, but most reluctantly, and based solely on emergency considerations, give my assent, but only as a temporary measure, to the proposition to impose such reasonable trade restrictions on products passing between the mainland and the islands for a time, until other and better systems of taxation can be devised, for the purpose of aiding in securing the necessary revenue to meet, not only the ordinary expenses of the Philippine government, but those necessary to aid in the great work of internal improvement, the establishment of schools, the building of roads, the development of commerce, the establishment of sanitary regulations, the support of courts, police, and other instrumentalities of a higher life and better civilization, and which will also at the same time guard and protect in a reasonable and proper manner the industries of the United States and American labor.

But, while I assent to all this, I deny that under existing conditions it is either expedient, necessary, or right to apply to our insular possessions the same rule in this respect that we apply to foreign countries. These possessions came to us as one of the results of a righteous war. They are not the fruits of a war of conquest. They are, on the contrary, the unexpected fruits of a war waged in opposition to cruel oppression, and in the interest of human liberty and of humanity; a war unlike any other war and every other war in which this country was ever engaged, in this: That it was a war sanctioned, sustained, approved, and prosecuted by the whole American people, irrespective of party, irrespective of section, irrespective of color or of previous condition.

And while these possessions are not a part of the United States, under the rule recently established by the highest judicial tribunal of our country, they belong to the United States. They are ours. Ours to govern and protect; ours to develop and expand; ours to civilize and Christianize; ours to lift from the gloom and darkness and despair of the persecutions of four hundred years into the bright sunlight of a new life; ours to guard against all unwarrantable interference from foreign powers; ours to utilize in our own interest, and in their interest in the extension of our commerce, in the promotion of our trade, in the development of American influence, prestige, and power.

Therefore it is, Mr. President, I earnestly insist, that the Congress of the United States, in dealing with these possessions, should differentiate in their favor, as also in favor of the United States, in establishing trade relations between these respective portions of our common country. A country and a government now sheltering and embracing under one flag—and that the American flag—one fruitful island in the Atlantic, and many hundreds of islands of incomparable value in the Pacific. We owe this to the people of these new possessions; we owe it likewise to the people of the United States. These islands are not foreign countries. They are domestic territory, and belong to the United States.

THE CUBAN AND PHILIPPINE POLICY AND THE PORTO RICO AND PHILIPPINE POLICY CONTRASTED.

The relation existing between these insular possessions, Porto Rico, Hawaii, Guam, the Philippines, and the United States, is wholly different from that existing between either the United States and England, France, or Germany, or other foreign countries, and also wholly different from that existing between the United States and Cuba. In the case of Cuba, the island is neither a part of the United States, nor does it belong to the United States, but the United States stands as its temporary sponsor, as its trustee.

The United States is the trustee, Cuba and her people are the cestui que trust. But this is a relation which, while it may call for the exercise of certain protectorate acts, does not impose on the United States any duty to enter into any treaties or other commercial regulations with Cuba that may in any manner affect adversely any American interest. Having given them their freedom from Spanish oppression, therefore, and opened the way for them to establish a government of their own, we are, I submit, under no more obligations to extend to them any trade relations not consistent with our own interests than we are to do the same thing with any other foreign country in this or any other hemisphere.

That we have as a nation given a pledge that a stable government shall be established and maintained in Cuba is conceded. This must be done, and this is being done, But this pledge does not, I submit, impose on us a duty to make trade concessions to the planters and producers of Cuba which will materially militate against the planters, agriculturists, and producers of our own country. Such a concession, it is respectfully submitted, is not an obligation resting upon us, either expressly or by implication. No such duty attaches to us by reason of our pledge to guarantee a stable government.

Whatever we may be able to do to aid in building up a stable government in Cuba, and in advancing the material prosperity of the Cubans, which we can do without entering into antagonisms against American industries and American labor, we stand pledged to do. Only this and nothing more. If we do this, we meet every obligation which the honor of our nation imposes on us, and in failing to do anything more than this, we have in no wise failed to be faithful to every pledge heretofore made to the Cubans, or to maintain our high character for national integrity among the nations.

I entirely agree in view of the incorporation into the new Cuban constitution, at the solicitation, if not, indeed, at the dictation of the United States, of the Platt amendment, whereby the Cubans are not permitted to enter into treaties with other countries except by our consent, that a duty was imposed upon the United States to do anything in our power to aid them, not only in establishing and maintaining a stable government, but also in developing their resources and promoting their various industrial interests, provided always that nothing shall be required of us that shall tend to the destruction of any one of the great industrial enterprises of our own country or which will materially antagonize the interests of the American laborer.

If it is true, as claimed by those who so persistently insist on tariff reductions on Cuban products, that the Cubans are in dire need of outside assistance, and if the United States, either by reason of any obligation imposed by any one or all of the acts of recent history or on the score of humanity must meet the demand, then let the obligation be met by the whole American people, representing all industries, and all enterprises, and all interests, and not be imposed on a small proportion of the agriulcturists of America, representing two or three only of the great American industries.

Of course, if a reciprocity arrangement can be made with Cuba which will be to the advantage of our people, or which will not seriously affect adversely any American interest or American labor, and which may be of benefit to Cuban interests, then, by all means, let us have it. I give hearty and unqualified approval to the sentiment expressed by the President in his late message, when he said:

> There is general acquiescence in our present tariff system as a national policy. The first requisite to our prosperity is the continuity and stability of this economic policy. Nothing could be more unwise than to disturb the business interests of the country by any general tariff change at this time.

But I confess, as at present advised, I am not prepared to give such unqualified approval to the statement in the message to the effect that, in the case of Cuba, there are weighty reasons of morality, or of national interest, why the policy of reciprocity should be held to have a peculiar application, nor to the recommendation of the President in favor of a substantial reduction in the tariff duties on Cuban imports into the United States, especially if it is intended to apply to the products of sugar and tobacco. It is possible there might be some slight reduction on sugar without seriously affecting the beet and cane sugar interests of this country; but as I understand present conditions, any very material reduction would result in ruin to that growing industry in this country.

But, however true this statement may be, and however wise this recommendation of the President—and all will agree that they are both prompted by motives of the most exalted patriotism and based upon the highest considerations of public duty—I do insist that if this be true as to Cuba, then it is doubly true as to the Philippines. And I submit further, that if the policy enforced in the last Congress of permitting the products of Porto Rico to come into the United States at 85 per cent reduction of the rates of duty imposed by the Dingley Act and later on entirely free, and this all largely in the interest of the trade and commerce of the people of the Atlantic States, as well as of the people of Porto Rico, then upon what principle of right or justice or equity must the people of the Pacific coast States pay the same rates on Philippine products coming into this country that are imposed by the Dingley Act?

Why make fish of one and flesh of the other? Why impose one rule on our insular possessions in the Atlantic Ocean and another on our possessions in the Pacific Ocean? Why have free trade between the United States and our outlying possessions on one side of the continent and preserve and enforce trade restrictions on the other side of the continent?

Are not the people of California, Oregon, Nevada, Washington, Idaho, and Montana, the people of the West, and of the great Northwest entitled to as much consideration at the hands of Congress as are the people of the States bordering on the Atlantic Ocean? Are not the people living under our own flag, occupying our own territory in the distant Pacific, entitled to equal trade and commercial privileges with those occupying our territory at our very door in the near Atlantic. Can, Mr. President, this apparent, in fact this real discrimination against the people of the great and growing Northwest, and against the people of the Philippine Archipelago be accounted for on any principles of justice, equality, or right?

If the moral, social, commercial, and political welfare of the people of Cuba and Porto Rico is dependent in a large measure, as it seems to be contended, on the relaxation of trade restrictions between those islands and the United States, then is it not equally so in reference to the moral, social, commercial, and political welfare of the people inhabiting the Philippines? What occult force, Mr. President, if any, is operating on the Congress of the United States, and this, too, without Congress seemingly being conscious of the fact or realizing either its existence or its operation, and which seems to compel the nation's Parliament to arrive at such absolutely contradictory conclusions? You may attempt to explain it by a reference to the different character of the productions of the different islands or on any other basis or theory, but let me tell you you can never, in my judgment, be able to explain it to the satisfaction of the great body of the American people, and I am quite sure you will not be able to do it to the satisfaction of the people of the great Pacific Northwest.

Why, it has been discovered since the pending bill passed the House of Representatives that the agents of the Government on the ground—the Taft Commission—the direct representatives of the President and the Secretary of War and of the United States, have recommended that the rates on these products coming into the United States from the Philippine Archipelago, except those to go on the free list, be admitted at 50 per cent of the rates imposed by the Dingley Act on like products from foreign countries, and Governor Taft, now in the Capitol and under examination before the Philippine Committee of the Senate, not only adheres to that recommendation, but gives it as his opinion that it would be wise to admit these products at 75 per cent of the rates imposed by the Dingley Act on like products from foreign countries.

IN DEALING WITH OUR INSULAR POSSESSIONS THE SUBJECT OF COMMERCE SHOULD BE CONSIDERED.

Aside from the question of raising sufficient revenue to meet all legitimate expenses of the government in the Philippines, Congress, it is submitted, should, in enacting legislation of this character, have an eye single to the promotion of commerce, to the expansion of our trade with our outlying possessions, and to the development of the undeveloped resources of these possessions.

As showing something of the sentiment of the people of the Pacific coast on this question, I read the following, published in the San Francisco Chronicle of recent issue and copied with approval by the Morning Oregonian, of Portland, Oreg.:

> "Glory" is not a satisfactory return for what we are doing in the Philippines. The pleasure of policing the islands for all nations of the earth except ourselves to trade there is equally unsatisfactory. The consciousness of doing good to mankind may soothe the declining years of men and nations, but the lusty American people want cash. If we pay the Philippine bills we want the Philippine market. We have no use for an "open door," especially if Americans can not get through the opening. To put it bluntly, we want a door wide open to us and partially closed to other people. We pay for it and we want it. If any American official has ever intimated that we would maintain any other kind of a door in the Philippines, he exceeded his authority and will alone be dishonored if his promise is repudiated.

There is to-day an irrepressible struggle, a commendable rivalry, going on between the civilized, progressive nations of the earth for precedence in position and primacy of success in industrial progress. No one of these nations will ever reverse any step already taken, nor become laggard in continued effort to advance. The achievements in this direction of one power but serve as vital stimulants to all the others. The contest is on, and never since the world began with such vigor and determination as now. Each nation is striving with unprecedented energy and incomparable zeal to rival all others, not only in scientific invention and in industrial development, but in increased production at reduced cost, and in the establishment of the minimum in time between the points of production and the points of distribution; and the minimum in the cost of transportation between these two points.

As means to these ends resort is had to various devices on the part of each nation—the improvement of rivers and harbors; the construction of artificial waterways for ships and other vessels; the construction of railroads; the subsidies of the merchant marine; improvement in machinery used in the production of agricultural, manufacturing, mineral, and other products, thus lessening the cost of production.

Secretary Root has, in one of his reports, expressed a hope that some concessions might be made to the Philippines in order to permit trade which might result in making them prosperous, and therefore friendly.

This, Mr. President, is the correct idea. We should give to them concessions in trade which will instill into their minds encouragement, confidence, and hope; which will cause them to realize the wide difference between the iron and hurtful rule of the Spaniard and the beneficent and helpful rule of the American; which will present for their consideration business prospects, agricultural, commercial, and trade attractions, and which will have the effect of turning their minds from the attractions of the arts of war to those of the arts of peace—from a life of indolent, ignorant inaction to one of industry, intelligence, and peace.

THE PROTECTION GRANTED BY THE TARIFF IN EVERY CASE WHERE IT IS NEEDED MUST BE MAINTAINED.

I believe, Mr. President, in the principle enunciated by the President when, in his recent message, he said, "Reciprocity must be treated as the handmaiden of protection," and when, in that same message, he declared that "Our first duty is to see that the protection granted by the tariff in every case where it is needed is maintained, and that reciprocity be sought for so far as it can be safely done without injury to our home industries."

It has been the shibboleth of the tariff advocates in the Republican party that the tariff on foreign products the like of which can be produced in this country should be maintained in order to promote the infant industries of this country. And certain infant industries, in the line of manufactures, in this country have in this way been very properly supported and protected until they have long since been able to stand alone and maintain themselves; and they should now be compelled to compete in our markets with like products of every nation, free from any aid from customs tariff. While these manufacturing industries were in their infancy tariff protection was "needed."

This is illustrated in a variety of instances, notably in the steel-rail industry and in the tin-plate industry. Before the principle of protection was applied to the steel-rail industry in this country we were paying England $120 per ton for steel rails, and it was then confidently asserted by the enemies of the protective system that steel rails could not be manufactured in this country. But what was the result? The United States is now manufacturing steel rails of a better quality, and in a greater amount than ever before in any country, and we are supplying the world with steel rails at a fraction of only a little over one-fifth of the former price, or at about $28 per ton.

The development of the iron and steel industry in the United States in the past thirty years has been marvelous. Thirty-one years ago, in 1870, the total product of steel of all kinds in this country was but a fraction over 68,000 tons. Ten years thereafter, in 1880, it was within a fraction of one and a quarter million tons. In 1890 it had reached over four and a quarter million tons, while in 1899, two years ago, the output was nearly 11,000,000 tons, the exact amount, according to the Statistical Abstract, being 10,639,857 tons. But even at the present prevailing rates those engaged in this industry have become multimillionaires.

These, then, and in some other like cases that might be mentioned, are instances in which the protection afforded by the protective tariff is no longer "needed." It is in such instances that Congress may act wisely in withholding protection. Let Congress strike out boldly against these manufacturing industries which have ripened into gigantic trusts, and which have brought and are bringing to their promoters princely individual wealth whose millions can scarcely be counted; wealth surpassing that of anything shown by the history of any preceding age. But let Congress hesitate to strike down in its infancy an agricultural industry like that of the beet sugar; an industry producing an article of universal consumption; an article not used merely by the rich few, but by the great masses of humanity, the poor as well as the rich; an agricultural industry in which, on the faith of the pledge of protection given by the United States, many millions of dollars have been invested, and an industry which, if compelled now to compete with the more than 1,000,000 tons of sugar that will soon be produced annually in the island of Cuba, must inevitably be driven to the wall and out of existence.

Why should not Congress, while turning a sympathetic ear to the Cuban sugar planters—and incidentally to the American sugar refiners—have some consideration for the many million farmers of this country who "earn their bread by the sweat of their face?" Let us give a helping hand to the agriculturist, as well as to the manufacturer; to the men who toil on the farm, as well as to those who work in the shop; to that poor, struggling portion of humanity who go from their humble homes to their daily toil with the rising of the sun, as well as to those who dwell in parlors of luxury and bask securely in the sunshine of affluence.

The sugar trust, the steel trust, and certain other formidable combinations that might be mentioned are able to stand alone. The beet-sugar industry is not. The former do not need protection; the latter does.

THE BEET-SUGAR INDUSTRY OF THE UNITED STATES SHOULD BE PROTECTED.

No inconsistency can be successfully charged against the man who advocates the exception from trade restrictions on the products of the Philippine Archipelago and who at the same time insists on the application of the protective system in our commercial relations with Cuba, and this for two very satisfactory reasons.

First, in the former case—that of the Philippines—we are dealing with a people occupying American territory and owing allegiance to the American flag, while in the latter we are legislating in reference to our commercial relations with a foreign people occupying foreign territory and owing allegiance to their own flag.

In the second place, in the case of the Philippine Archipelago, there is no danger whatever—and I now speak more particularly of sugar—of the products of those islands, both by reason of their meager production and inferior quality, ever coming into dangerous competition with the beet and cane sugar interests of this country, while in the case of Cuba the vast production of the island and the quality of the sugar makes it not only a dangerous rival but one that will necessarily result, if given the benefit of free entry, in the ruin of the beet-sugar industry in this country.

The annual product or annual crop of Cuba in 1901 was over 100 per cent that of the previous year. In 1899–1900 the output was 308,453 tons, while in 1900–1901 it was 635,856 tons, while the estimated crop for this year is 875,000 tons. But this is far short of the capacity of production on the part of Cuba, as is made clear by the historical fact that prior to the Spanish war, in 1893–94, the output of Cuban sugar was 1,087,000 tons.

Now, when the fact is considered that raw Cuban sugar, 96° test, can be delivered in New York free of duty for $2 a hundred pounds, or 2 cents a pound, while it costs in this country to produce beet sugar about 4.04 cents per pound, this not including freight or depreciation in plant, and while the cost of producing raw sugar in Cuba is but a fraction, if any, over 1.50 cents per pound, it will be seen at a glance, if Cuban sugar is admitted free, the beet-sugar industry in this country must go to the wall; an industry in which there is invested to-day in factories alone about $27,000,000, and this, of course, does not include the investments in beet raising, nor does it take into consideration the fact that there are about 200,000 acres now dedicated to beet raising, producing an annual crop of the value of over $8,000,000 and giving employment to over 3,000 people, who receive over a million and a half dollars yearly in wages.

And, in addition to all this, it must be borne in mind that this industry is yet in its swaddling clothes, and its rapid development in the recent past, under the fostering care of the protective tariff, fully justifies the estimates that are made that this industry, if properly protected, will in the near future, at least inside of the next ten years, lead to the annual cultivation of about 3,000,000 acres of beets, giving employment to over 300,000 people, who will receive more than $100,000,000 annually in wages, and furnishing opportunity for profitable investment to the extent of over $500,000,000 in capital.

In the last two years, from 1898–99 to 1900–1901, there was an increase in the output of beet sugar in this country of 140 per cent, the product two years ago in this country being but a fraction over 32,000 tons, while that of the last year was 76,800 tons, and the estimate for the present year is about 200,000 tons.

THE AMERICAN CONSUMER WILL NOT BE BENEFITED BY FREE RAW SUGAR.

And, after all, who are to be benefited by placing Cuban sugar on the free list or by a large reduction of duty? Surely not the American consumer. Nor is it at all likely that the Cuban producer will be much, if any, benefited. With duty removed or materially reduced, the market will be controlled absolutely by what is popularly known as the sugar trust in this country; that is, the American Sugar Refining Company. And in turn, after procuring the raw sugar at their own price, they will fix a price on the refined article to be purchased by the great body of American consumers. The American consumer is not and can not be a competitor with the sugar trust, or with either of the sugar trusts. There is but one competitor the American Sugar Refining Company has, and that is the beet-sugar refiners.

It is not therefore, I submit, to the interest of the great body of American consumers of sugar to simply aid one trust—which would be the case in placing Cuban sugar on the free list—in breaking down another trust engaged in the same industry. And this upon the principle that two great trusts engaged in the same business and competitors of each other constitute a less evil than one trust monopolizing the whole country.

Besides, in addition to all this, if we must have a trust at all, then better have one engaged wholly in the manufacture and refining of the domestic product, that of the cane of Louisiana and the sorghum and beet of other States.

To three gigantic trusts and the influence they are capable of exerting, and by which they often deceive and mislead many honest and patriotic men both in official life and out of official life, is very largely due to-day the demand from many sources for a reduction of duties on Cuban products.

These are, first, the sugar trust, which monopolizes and controls the Cuban crop and regulates its price; second, the English tobacco trust, which controls more than 60 per cent of the tobacco industry of Cuba, and third, the American tobacco trust, which virtually controls the balance of that industry.

Arrayed against the demands of these insatiable trusts may be found our domestic cigar-leaf industry, the growers of tobacco leaf, the manufacturers of cigars, and all related industries; the producers of sugar beets, of cane, and of sorghum; the manufacturers of domestic sugar from cane, beets, and sorghum, and all related industries, involving hundreds of millions of dollars of home investments.

Mr. President, in addition to what I have said on this subject, I beg to say I am one of those kind of Republicans who believe in keeping faith with the people; in other words, adhering to the platform of the party on all important questions. The Republican party in national convention at St. Louis, Mo., on June 18, 1896, adopted the following plank in their platform:

> We condemn the present Administration for not keeping faith with the sugar producers of this country. The Republican party favors such protection as will lead to the production on American soil of all the sugar which the American people use, and for which they pay other countries more than $100,000,000 annually.

I beg to attract the attention of the Senate to the following statement, bearing upon the general subject of sugar production and consumption in the United States, found in the report made by the committee on statistics at a meeting of the Michigan Sugar Manufacturers' Association, held at Saginaw, Mich., December 23, 1901:

The consumption of sugar in the United States during the year 1900 was 2,486,228 tons of 2,000 pounds each. The annual rate of increased sugar consumption in this country for the past nineteen years has been 6.34 per cent. At this rate of increase the amount of sugar used in the United States in 1910 will be 4,032,496 tons, or, in round figures, 4,000,000 tons. The cane area in our country is able to produce not to exceed 1,000,000 tons annually. This leaves 3,000,000 tons, which can be furnished from home-grown beets if tariff legislation remains favorable during the intervening years.

Europe, with much less available beet area than the United States, produced in 1900 5,950,000 tons of beet sugar. Every European country making a success of the industry maintains not only a protective tariff of from 1 cent to 8 cents per pound, but also a direct bounty of from one-fourth of a cent to nine-tenths of a cent per pound. If Europe can produce beet sugar, we can, if given an opportunity.

To produce 3,000,000 tons of beet sugar annually would require 600 plants each having a daily capacity of 500 tons of beets. These plants would represent the following investment and annual business:

Invested in plants	$300,000,000
Working capital	$50,000,000
Acres of beets	3,000,000
Valua ion of land growing the crop	$150,000,000
Tons of beets	27,000,000
Tons of sugar	3,000,000
Value of beets	$135,000,000
Annual pay roll for labor in factories	$42,000,000
Tons of coal used annually	5,500,000
Tons of lime rock used annually	1,890,000
Tons of coke used annually	208,000
Freight paid railroads annually	$27,000,000
Annual payment for bags and barrels	$6,000,000
Farmers' families raising beets	750,000
Men employed in factories	125,000
Men employed in raising beets during season	1,200,000

An industry with such possibilities can be established in the United States within the next ten years. The entire question depends upon tariff legislation. Leave the tariff as it is and the industry is assured. Remove it and this is impossible. Will this gigantic industry be allowed to thrive and enhance the entire agricultural interests of the country, permeating every avenue of business, or will it be destroyed and the sugar market of the United States be surrendered to a trust whose policy is dictated by one man?

If permitted to thrive, the competition between these 600 beet-sugar factories will ultimately reduce the price of sugar far below the price it would reach if controlled by a single corporation. Such reduction will come gradually, as the development of the business under keen competition will justify. The beet-sugar industry stands to-day at the turning point. The trust recognizes this fact and is putting forth every effort to crush the industry. Will Congress stand for the people or for the trust?

THE OPEN DOOR.

It has been suggested that in the event of our according any special trade concessions to the Philippines not conceded to the people of foreign countries that we will, to an extent, close the open door to our trade in China. In other words, if we extend certain special privileges to the people of our own possessions we will suffer at the hands of foreign powers in respect to our trade relations in China. And has it come to this, Mr. President, that we dare not have a domestic policy of our own, that we dare not establish commercial relations with people who inhabit territory belonging to us, and who owe allegiance to the American flag, without endangering our commerce with foreign powers?

The question of our trade with China and our capacity to successfully compete for that trade with England, Germany, Russia, and France is one wholly outside of and independent of the question of our domestic policy, and depending on other conditions. But were it otherwise, then better forfeit whatever benefits we might otherwise enjoy rather than surrender our right to treat fairly and justly and equitably a people inhabiting our own territory and bearing allegiance to the American flag. Let us have an open door, or, if not that, at least a partially open door for trade relations between people of our insular possessions and those of the main land, even though it implies a partial sacrifice of trade benefits in other directions.

The distinguished Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], chairman of the Committee on the Philippines, in his opening speech in support of this bill, said:

It has been suggested that in the duties imposed in the Philippine Islands upon articles imported there a discrimination should be made in favor of articles the growth and product of the United States.

And then he remarked that—

The objection to that seemed to your committee, and seems to me, to be fatal.

And then the distinguished Senator assigned three reasons in support of this objection:

The first is, that if we discriminate in our own favor upon articles entering the Philippines from the United States, we seriously diminish the principal source of revenue of those islands; secondly, because we must, under Article IV of the treaty of Paris, give Spain the same discrimination that we give to ourselves; and thirdly, and which the Senator characterizes as being far broader and more fatal than either of the other two, that if we discriminate in the Philippine tariff in favor of our own products, "we," to use the language of the distinguished Senator, "at once break down the policy of an 'open door,' for which we contend in China."

The first of these objections, which relates simply to the amount of revenue that will be affected, I pass over without stopping to discuss, further than to say that the modifications proposed by the amendments I submitted to the committee would not very seriously diminish the revenue, and, besides, other means of raising revenue should be devised, if not practicable now, very soon, which would impose less restrictions on the trade and commerce between the United States and the Philippine Archipelago.

THE MOST-FAVORED NATIONS DOCTRINE CAN NOT APPLY.

The second objection I concede; that is to say, I concede that under the Paris treaty we are bound to grant Spain the same privileges in the archipelago that we have, but I deny the consequences which the distinguished Senator asserts will follow. I deny that the concessions made to Spain in the Paris treaty can have the effect of either jeopardizing our rights to the full benefits of an open door in China or of conferring any rights or privileges on any foreign power by reason of the most-favored nations doctrine.

The answer to these two objections are ready and conclusive. The rights thus enjoyed by Spain for the period of ten years do not vest in that nation in virtue of any commercial treaty or trade arrangement between the United States and Spain, but, on the contrary, this provision in the treaty of peace was a part of the price, plus the $20,000,000 in cash, and plus the precious blood of our soldiers and sailors, which we paid Spain for all her improvements and rights in the Philippine Archipelago, in Porto Rico, and in Guam.

It is clear, therefore, even if the doctrine of an open door can be applied to our own country, which I deny, this arrangement with Spain could not be held to interfere with it. Besides, this concession to Spain, as part consideration for the purchase of the Philippines, or, perhaps, more properly speaking, for the purpose of obtaining the signatures of the Spanish commissioners to the Paris treaty of peace, was consummated long prior, long before the doctrine of an open door in China, as at present understood, was seriously thought of by the United States or by any other power.

And in view of the fact that this concession to Spain was but one of the many considerations and stipulations in a treaty of peace concluded by the two countries after a decisive war in which we were victorious, and not a concession made in a commercial treaty having but one purpose, the promotion of commerce between the two nations, the doctrine of the favored nations clause can not possibly apply. Hence it is no foreign power can claim any commercial rights as against us because of the settlement the United States saw fit to make with Spain in the treaty of peace.

The construction which has always been placed on the most favored nations clause is that it only relates to favors gratuitously granted. It has no application to purchased concessions, no relation to favors for which there is a consideration, express or implied.

August 27, 1894, Congress passed a law putting salt on the free list, with a provision that duties at the rate existing prior to the passage of the act should be collected on salt "imported from any country, whether dependent or independent, which imposes a duty on salt exported from the United States." The German Government at that time exacted a duty on American salt going into that country; but notwithstanding this, that Government made a claim that by reason of the American act putting salt on the free list as to all countries which did not exact duties on American salt, German salt was, in virtue of the doctrine of the most favored nations clause, entitled to come into the United States free of duty. The question was submitted to United States Attorney-General Olney, who, after citing the doctrine of the most favored nations clause as I have just stated it, said:

The form which the provision of our recent tariff act relating to salt may have assumed is quite immaterial. It enacts in substance and effect that any country admitting American salt free shall have its own salt admitted free here, while any country having a duty on American salt shall have its salt dutiable here under the preexisting statute. * * * Germany of course is entitled to that concession upon returning the same equivalent. (21 Opinions of the Attorney-General, 80-83.)

The doctrine I have just stated was clearly recognized by the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Bartram v. Robertson, decided May 23, 1887, Mr. Justice Field delivering the opinion of the court (122 U. S., 116).

In that case the court held that the provisions in the treaty between the United States and Denmark, concluded April 26, 1826, and revived by the convention of April 11, 1857, did not authorize the importation duty free from Danish dominions of articles made duty free by the convention of January 30, 1875, between the United States and the King of the Hawaiian Islands, but otherwise subject to duty by a law of Congress. And this upon the ground that the concession which was allowed the King of the Hawaiian Islands was for a compensation wholly different from that involved in the Danish treaty. In other words, the doctrine enunciated was and is that a purchased concession, one for a special, valuable consideration—as is that of the concession to Spain—does not operate to confer rights on other nations under the most favored nations clause.

This same doctrine was announced by Mr. John Quincy Adams, Secretary of State, in his letter to M. de Neuville, French minister, December 22, 1817, and referred to in Wharton's, II, 38, in referring to the eighth article of the treaty of April 30, 1803, ceding Louisiana to the United States, which provided that, "and ships of France shall be treated upon the footing of the most favored nations in the ports of the ceded territory," said:

> The eighth article does not say, and can not be understood to mean, that France should enjoy as a free gift that which is conceded to other nations for a full equivalent. If French vessels should be admitted into the port of Louisiana upon the payment of the same duties as the vessels of the United States, they would be treated upon a footing more favored than any other nation; since other nations, with the exception of England, pay higher tonnage duties, and the exemption of the English vessels is not a free gift, but a purchase at a fair and equal price.

All works on international law recognize this as the correct exposition of the doctrine relative to what is known as the "most-favored-nations clause."

OUR FOREIGN TRADE WILL NOT BE ADVERSELY AFFECTED IF WE DIFFERENTIATE IN FAVOR OF OUR INSULAR POSSESSIONS.

And as to the third objection, that to accord trade preferences to the people of the Philippine Archipelago, over those of foreign nations, will, in any manner or to any extent, or under any conceivable circumstances, affect us adversely as to our policy in reference to an open door in China, I most emphatically deny.

And I assert in the most positive manner of which I am capable that the doctrine involved in such a claim is not only one that can not be successfully maintained for one minute, but, on the contrary, it is a doctrine pregnant with danger to the commercial interests of the United States, and one which this Government can not afford to concede, and can not concede, except by a partial surrender of the rightful prerogatives which attach to us as a sovereign and independent Government. It is, in my judgment, a doctrine of the most dangerous import; it is a partial surrender, without any compensating benefits, of one of the very highest prerogatives this Republic possesses.

What, in brief and succinctly, is the proposition, let us inquire? It is simply this: That we, a sovereign nation, can not establish such domestic commercial relations between the United States and our own insular possessions as we may deem for our best interests, and for the best interests of the people of our outlying possessions, without by such act giving good cause of complaint against us by some foreign power, and establishing a right in morals and under the principles applicable to the comity of nations, on the part of some, or all of the foreign powers, to object and to make our action the basis of a right to retaliate by doing something that will affect our trade relations in China, and which will thus close to us the open door in China.

Such a doctrine, Mr. President, to my mind is simply monstrous. But not only so, but dangerous in the extreme as a virtual surrender of our vested, constitutional, and sovereign right to regulate our own internal and domestic commercial and trade relations to suit ourselves. As well might all the foreign powers on earth combine and protest against our American policy to reserve our coastwise trade exclusively for American vessels.

What is meant by the "open door?" I accept as substantially correct the definition of the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts that it is "a tariff which treats all nations without discrimination." This, when applied to China, as I understand it, means simply this: That while China as a sovereign power may levy such customs duties on imports into that country and such export duties from that country to other countries as she may deem proper, she must not discriminate in favor of any nation by giving differentials to one that are not accorded to all others.

But because we stand for such a policy in respect to the China trade, does it follow that we as a nation must adopt a similar policy in reference to our own country? Most certainly not. And if we do adopt such a policy, is that any just ground for dissent upon the part of any power on earth? Most certainly not. If our right to participate in the benefits of an open door in China involves such a sacrifice of sovereign rights on our part, then better that door be forever closed.

When, I inquire, did the United States ever agree, and with whom and on what terms, to surrender our sovereign and indisputable and indestructible right to establish such commercial and trade relations between the United States and Porto Rico, Hawaii, and the Philippine Islands as we might deem for the best interests both of the people of the United States and of the inhabitants of those islands, respectively? No such agreement, either express or by implication, was ever entered into.

Never has the United States stooped to such a humiliation, and it never will; but, standing erect in all its unimpeachable majesty, this Republic will ever maintain the American doctrine of its undisputed and indisputable right, and inherent sovereign power, to establish and regulate its commercial and trade relations between its own people and the people inhabiting any and all of its outlying possessions, whether in the frigid regions of Alaska or in the distant islands of the seas.

Are we to stand supinely by and see Russia, and Germany, and England, and France, and other foreign powers absorb the great bulk of the Philippine trade, as they are now doing? Are we to be duressed and driven into an abandonment of what we know to be our rightful, constitutional, sovereign powers by fear of a partial loss of trade in China?

England's policy for the last one hundred years or more has been one of differentialism in favor of the people of her colonies, and so with France, and so with all other European colony-holding countries. And yet we, the greatest power on earth, will hesitate to declare a policy of justice and right affecting our own people for fear of suffering in the great international competition for the trade and commerce of the world.

I am for one unwilling to advocate any policy that will tend to prevent us from being a beneficiary in the fullest sense of the term in the trade and commercial benefits that are to flow from an open door in China. I am not unmindful of the fact that we have now a market in China for many of our surplus products. I am cognizant of the fact that our present shipments of cotton goods from the United States to China amounts to more than $10,000,000 annually and is increasing largely every year.

And I am not unaware of the fact that we are to-day falling far short of selling China our proper proportion of her imports. China's total imports amounts annually to $161,353,000, of which amount we furnish only about $11,081,146, or but 6.8 per cent. Nor do I fail to remember that we are needing many of the products of the Orient which we do not produce in this country. And therefore, to a certain extent and on certain lines, the principle of reciprocity can very properly be applied in respect to our trade relations with China.

But while I agree to all this, I deny in the most emphatic terms that because we may deem proper to establish a domestic policy of our own in respect to our commercial relations between the United States and the people of our insular possessions that we do by this in any manner or to any extent jeopardize our rights to all the benefits we would otherwise enjoy in respect to the opportunities of an open door in China.

Neither China herself nor any one of the foreign powers interested in oriental commerce has any right to criticise or find fault with such a policy, nor do I believe they will. And any suggestion on our part that we must, in order to avoid criticism and opposition on the part of foreign powers in this respect, refrain from establishing a domestic policy which we believe and know to be right, is an evidence of governmental cowardice on our part. It is, in my judgment, a servile surrender of one of the highest attributes attaching to our sovereignty, as the greatest and grandest republic on earth.

An open door in the Orient is all well enough, but if the price of it is to be the surrender of a principle, of the right to exercise the very highest prerogatives attaching to us as an independent sovereign power, then that door had better be forever closed. We, as a nation, it seems to me, have passed beyond that point in our nation's history when we, in order to advance the trade and commerce of our country, are compelled to kneel in servile submission to either England, France, Germany, Russia, or any other power on the face of the earth.

Let our first great effort be to legislate so as to secure the domestic tranquillity and promote the prosperity of our own people, whether inhabitants of the mainland or of our insular possessions, and to promote and advance the common welfare of all; and we may be sure in such a course we will command the admiration and respect of every civilized nation on the face of the globe, and in such case our trade and commerce in all directions, instead of being hampered and injured, will, in my judgment, be encouraged, enlarged, promoted, and benefited.

While keeping in mind the question of revenue, Congress should, it occurs to me, legislate with a view to developing trade and commerce between the United States and our insular possessions; and whenever the principle of reciprocity can be applied, by permitting such of our products to enter those possessions as can successfully compete with like articles from foreign countries, then no customs burden should be imposed on such products, and they should have an open door into those possessions, free from any trade restrictions.

The marvelous development of our resources, the unparalleled increase in our manufacturing, agricultural, horticultural, and dairy products, our amazing capacity for still further annual increase in the production of these varied products to amounts in most instances far beyond the demands for home consumption and home markets, should impel us, while carefully guarding our own industries and our own labor, to be on the lookout in every direction for markets for our surplus products. For this purpose we should look not only to our insular possessions, not only to the countries of this hemisphere, but to all foreign countries of this and the other hemisphere as well.

This was the great central idea sought to be taught and enforced on the American mind by the late President McKinley in his last great speech at Buffalo. In that speech he, among other things, said:

> Already our capacity to produce has developed so enormously and our products have so multiplied that the problem of more markets requires our urgent and immediate attention. Only a broad and enlightened policy will keep what we have. No other policy will get more. In these times of marvelous energy and gain we ought to be looking to the future, strengthening the weak places in our industrial and commercial systems, that we may be ready for any storm or strain.

Our capacity to hold our proper share of the oriental trade, outside of that with our insular possessions, depends, in my judgment, on other grounds than those which may grow out of our commercial regulations with a people of our own territory. It depends mainly on our capacity to control the great lines of transportation. Our merchant marine must be lifted from its present insignificance as a factor in the carrying trade of the world, and we as a nation must rise paramount and take our position as a commercial nation in the front rank of those engaged in controlling the world's transportation.

When this is done, then, and then only, will we be in a position to reap the full commercial benefits rightfully belonging to us, not only in our insular possessions, but through the means of the open door in the Orient.

THE RECENT ALLIANCE BETWEEN GREAT BRITAIN AND JAPAN.

Moreover, it may be truthfully said that nothing we could do or leave undone would tend so strongly, in my judgment, to keep wide to us an open door in China as the recent alliance between Great Britain and Japan.

This alliance seems a most decided checkmate to Russia in connection with her designs in reference to Manchuria. Had Russia succeeded in her purpose in securing and maintaining a permanent foothold in Manchuria, and in dominating that province with Russian influence and power, the trade door to the United States, as to that portion of China at least, would have been completely closed. But now that these two great powers, Great Britain and Japan, have joined hands in a solemn compact to the end that the integrity and independence of the Chinese Empire shall be preserved, and that there shall be no destruction of the territorial status quo, either in China or the adjoining regions, it means not only to these powers and all other foreign powers, but to the United States as well, an open door as to the trade of the entire Chinese Empire.

While the United States may not, by reason of her traditional policy, enter into any alliance with these powers, it is, or in my judgment at least, should be, a source of congratulation upon the part of the United States that this alliance between Great Britain and Japan has become an accomplished fact. It is, in one sense, a recognition of the wise policy inaugurated months ago by our own Government in reference to conditions, present and future, in the Orient.

OUR FOREIGN TRADE.

A careful inquiry into the present state of the commerce of the world, and of the relation borne to it by the United States, and the share in that trade and commerce in which the United States at present participates, makes it clearly apparent that something must be done, by legislation or otherwise, that will tend to bring to the United States a greater portion of the world's trade and commerce than we now enjoy.

We are not to-day furnishing any country on the face of the globe—and especially is this true with reference to European and Asiatic countries—our proper proportion of the total products being purchased annually by foreign countries.

For instance, the share of the United States to-day of the total of European imports annually is but a fraction over 14 per cent. The total of European imports to-day annually (I speak now particularly with reference to the year 1900) reaches the enormous sum of $7,895,831,000, while our share of this amount is but $1,114,952,953.

The largest proportion of trade enjoyed by the United States in any European country is that of the United Kingdom. The total imports of the United Kingdom for the year 1900 were $2,548,260,000, of which amount the United States furnished $602,221,375, or 23.6 per cent.

The next highest in any European county is Germany, where our share is 14.2 per cent of the whole. Germany's total imports for the year 1900 amounted to $1,389,264,000, of which total amount the United States furnished $197,603,400, or 14.2 per cent.

The country in which the United States enjoys the smallest proportion of the trade compared with the whole is that of Switzerland (with the single exception of Roumania), which is only thirteen one-hundredths of 1 per cent. Switzerland's total imports for the year 1900 amounted in value to $214,800,000, of which amount we furnished but $297,283.

This disproportion runs through every one of the European countries. Our share of Austria-Hungary's imports is but 2.2 per cent; of Belgium, 10.9 per cent; of Denmark, 13.9 per cent; of France, 9.3 per cent; of Greece, 1.3 per cent; of Italy, 10.7 per cent; of the Netherlands, 10.5 per cent; of Portugal, 8.8 per cent; of Roumania, 0.07 per cent; of Russia, 2.8 per cent. Russia's total imports in the year 1900 amounted to $294,837,000, our share being but $8,498,950. Our per cent of Spain's imports for the year 1900 was 8.8 per cent of the total; of Sweden, 5 per cent, and of Turkey, 3.4 per cent.

But this same lack of a proper proportion of the trade is also apparent when we come to consider our trade with Asia. The total Asiatic imports for the year 1900 reached the enormous amount in value of $1,125,882,000, of which amount our share was but $60,500,519, or but 5.3 per cent.

The country to which we furnish the largest proportion is Japan. Japan's total imports for the year 1900 amounted in value to $143,630,000, of which amount the United States supplied $26,492,235, or 18.4 per cent.

Our share in China, as I have already said, is but 6.8 per cent. Our share in the imports of Aden in the year 1900 was 5.5 per cent.

In India, whose total imports in the year 1900 amounted to $377,950,000, our share was but $7,508,120, or but 1.9 per cent of the total amount.

In Ceylon, out of the imports into that country in 1900, amounting in all to $40,779,000, the United States furnished $212,300, or but five-tenths of 1 per cent.

Of the $57,044,000 in value of the imports into the Straits Settlements in 1900, our share was but $973,600, or but 1.6 per cent.

In the Dutch East Indies our proportion was but 2.5 per cent, we furnishing in all $1,994,858 in value in a total of $76,911,000 of the imports into that country in the year 1900.

In the French East Indies the disproportion is still greater, as out of $37,170,000 in value imported into that country in 1900 we sent but $118,102, or but three-tenths of 1 per cent of the total.

While of the over $125,000,000 of value of imports into Hongkong in the year 1900 the United States supplied but $9,373,239, or but 7.5 per cent.

Our proportion in Korea, out of a trade amounting to nearly $6,000,000, was but $130,297, or but 2.4 per cent.

In Asiatic Russia, out of a total of imports into that country in 1900 in value of $14,458,000, our share was but $1,390,558, or only 9.6 per cent.

To Siam we sent products in the year 1900 amounting in value to the sum of $164,311, while the total imports of that country in that year were of the value of $12,644,000, our share being 1.2 per cent.

Of the $32,500,000 of imports into Asiatic Turkey in the year 1900, our share was the miserable pittance of $241,000, or seven-tenths of 1 per cent.

By a reference to our trade with African countries we find we are far in the rear in obtaining our due proportion of the trade of those countries. The total value of imports for the year 1900 into African countries was $373,884,000, of this amount the share of the United States was but $22,518,725, or but 5.9 per cent of the total.

For instance, British Africa imported in that year the sum total in value of $167,469,000, while of this amount the United States furnished but $19,190,658, or but 11.4 per cent.

The total value of the imports into French Africa for that year was $107,756,000, of which the United States furnished $926,550, or eight-tenths of 1 per cent.

German Africa imported $8,233,000 worth in that year, of which amount the United States furnished the pittance of $2,757, or about three one-hundredths of 1 per cent.

In Portuguese Africa the United States did slightly better. Of the $16,655,000 worth imported into that country in the year 1900 the United States furnished $837,368, or about 5 per cent of the total as her share.

We exported into the Congo Free State in the year 1900 products of the value of $8,550, while the sum total of the imports into that country for that year was $4,771,000. Our share, therefore, was about 1 per cent of the total.

Liberia has but little trade. The total of her imports for 1900 being $886,000, of which amount the share of the United States was $27,355, or about 3 per cent of the total.

Egypt has quite a large trade. The total value of her imports for the year 1900 was $67,675,000, of which amount the United States furnished $1,524,144, or about 2.2 per cent of the total.

Tripoli has but small trade. The total value of her imports for 1900 was $2,430,000, of which amount the United States furnished $1,345, or five one-hundredths of 1 per cent.

Coming to the North American countries we find the United States fares somewhat better, but not as well as she should do and must do in the future.

The total imports of all North American countries, or, in other words, for North America, for the year 1900 was in value $388,591,000, of which amount the United States furnished $200,978,000, or 51.7 per cent.

In this connection, and for the sake of brevity, I submit the following table, showing the amount of imports into each of the North American countries during the years, in the main, of 1900, one of them for the year 1898, and five of them for the year 1899, and showing the share of the trade in these countries, respectively, enjoyed by the United States, both in amount and per cent:

Coming now to a consideration of our trade with South American countries, we find the total value of imports going into all South American countries for the year 1900 to be $341,778,000, the share of the United States being $41,247,590, or only about 12 per cent of the total.

I submit the following table showing the amount of imports into each of these South American countries during the year 1900, with the exception of Colombia and Venezuela, in which the figures are given for 1898, and Peru for 1899, and also the share of the United States, respectively, both in amount and in per cent of the total:

From all that has been said it will be seen that the total imports of all foreign countries at the present time, or at least up until within the last year and a half, was of the value of about $10,398,189,000, of which amount the United States imported into all of these foreign countries the sum of $1,468,373,470, or only about 14.1 per cent of the whole amount.

OUR NATION'S MARVELOUS INCREASE IN WEALTH.

But, notwithstanding this great disproportion in the share of the world's trade now enjoyed by the United States compared with that of all other foreign countries, the United States has been bounding ahead in the increase of national wealth in a manner calculated to bewilder the nations and command universal admiration.

About one-half a century ago, in 1850, the wealth of this country was but $7,135,780,228; in 1860 it had more than doubled, and was then $16,159,616,068; while in 1890 it had more than quadrupled what it was in 1860, as in that year it reached the enormous figure of $65,037,091,197; while in the year 1900 the wealth of the country had increased to the startling amount of $95,000,000,000.

Some of our Democratic free-trade friends may reply, "Take off your tariff on the products of these foreign countries, and you will swell the volume and value of our own exports with these countries." To this I respond, most assuredly; and I believe this should be done either by reciprocity arrangements or by direct act of Congress whenever it can be done without bringing these foreign products, the result of cheap labor, into ruinous competition with like products, either of the farm or of the shop, produced in our own country.

But whenever the introduction of the product of any foreign country does threaten the death or seriously endanger the existence of any American industry or affects adversely the welfare of the American laborer, then, I say, put up the bars, just as it is our policy to exclude Chinese laborers from this country, even though it may to some extent reduce the volume and value of our exports into foreign countries.

And while it is true we have a comparatively small proportion of trade in the various foreign countries, as compared with all other countries, it is, nevertheless, a fact that our domestic exports to-day are much greater than any other country, the monthly average being higher than that of any other country. While our domestic exports for the nine months ending with the month of September last amounted, as I have just stated, to $1,024,605,181, the United Kingdom, the second largest exporter of domestic products of any country in the world, exported in the same nine months but $1,018,845,768, or less than the amount exported in that time by the United States by $5,760,413.

Besides, is it not a fact apparent to all that but for the protective policy our foreign trade would not be to-day by many millions in either volume or value what it is? It is an historic and indisputable fact that when the Wilson free-trade tariff act was in operation our annual exports were but a fraction over $880,000,000, while to-day, under the upbuilding provisions of the protective system, as embodied in the Dingley bill, our exports have reached the enormous amount of considerably over one thousand million dollars annually. In fact, according to the official report of the Bureau of Statistics of the Treasury Department, our exports of domestic products for the nine months ending September 30 last were $1,024,605,181.

An apt and speaking illustration of the fact that our protective tariff is not to be held justly responsible for the lack of a proper proportion of our export trade into the various foreign countries is found in our trade with Canada.

In a speech of Mr. John Charlton, member of the Canadian Parliament, made before the New York Chamber of Commerce in November last, on trade relations between the United States and Canada, he showed that Canada was the third largest customer in the world for the products of the United States; that Canada in the fiscal year ending June 30, 1901, purchased United States products valued at $119,306,000, while the exports from Canada into the United States during the same year were—exclusive of gold and silver—of the value of but $39,497,000, or less than one-third of our exports into Canada.

Why this discrepancy? It is because our protective system cheapens all American products; and although Canada and the mother country have been doing all in their power for years to swing Canadian purchases to Great Britain by a system of discriminating duties in favor of Great Britain and against the United States, still Canada continues to purchase of the United States, and why? Simply because of the cheapness in price of our products compared with that of like products in Great Britain and other foreign countries.

It is clearly evident, therefore, that so far as our protective policy operating to reduce the amount of our exports into foreign countries the very reverse is true. And if, instead of this policy, we had had free trade for the past fifty years in this country our export trade would not be, in my judgment, one-half what it is to-day. In the face of such a record of our trade with Canada, it is clear we have nothing to gain and much to lose from the establishment of a system of reciprocity with Canada.

THE SUBSTITUTE PROPOSED BY THE MINORITY.

While I regret the able committee—the Philippines—of which the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts is chairman, could not have seen their way clear to recommend further amendments to the House bill looking to trade stimulation in the direction of the amendments proposed by me, I can not give my consent to the substitute proposed by the minority of that committee; and with the alternative presented—while the amendments proposed by the committee are not all I desire, and for which I have labored, they are nevertheless a great improvement, in my judgment, over the House bill—there is but one course for me to pursue, and that is to support the committee amendments.

What, Mr. President, is the precise proposition of the minority, as embodied in the proposed substitute and as elaborated in the accompanying views of the minority? It is, in brief, a proposition that the United States shall, subject to a temporary occupation of the archipelago by the United States, until the people thereof have established what the minority are pleased to designate as "a stable government," and until "sufficient guaranties have been obtained for the performance of our treaty obligations to Spain, for the safety of those inhabitants who have adhered to the United States, and for the maintenance and protection of the rights which have accrued under their authority," relinquish all claim of sovereignty over and to the archipelago known as the Philippine Islands.

To do this, Mr. President, is to call a halt and take a backward step in the grand advance made by this nation in the past few years to the forefront as a world power. To do this is to acknowledge our incapacity as a nation to successfully compete with the civilized nations of the earth in the competitive race of nations toward a higher and better civilization. To do this would, in the language of President Roosevelt, which we find in his late message, "mean that they" (the islands) "would fall into a welter of murderous anarchy." To do this would be, to again repeat the language of the President, "such a dereliction of duty on our part as would be a crime against humanity."

If, by anything or everything that we have done in the past few years, by legislation or otherwise, a trust has been imposed on us in respect to our dealings with the people of Cuba, an infinitely higher and more sacred trust is imposed on us by what has transpired in the past few years, in war and in peace, in respect to the people of the Philippines.

Are we now, after a successful war, in which our armies and navies, by their incomparable valor and unparalleled victories, have brought to the American name an imperishable glory, have attracted the astonishment and commanded the admiration of the world, to surrender ignominiously the fruits of these great triumphs? Are we, after the precious blood that has been shed, after the loss of human life that has been sacrificed, to say nothing of the millions of money expended, and after and in pursuance of the treaty of peace, ratified and confirmed by both nations, the sovereignty of those islands has been transferred to us and the allegiance of their people transferred from that of the Spanish Crown to that of the American flag, are we after all these things have transpired, and after we have entered upon the performance of the sacred trust of leading these people to a higher and better national life and to a civilization of which they never dreamed—are we, I say, after all these things have transpired, to renounce our sovereignty and turn our back upon these people, haul down the American flag, declare these islands foreign territory, and abandon ignominiously a national trust, the most important, the highest, and most sacred ever imposed upon any nation since the beginning of time?

And yet this is what is proposed, as I understand it, by the minority of the committee. To do this would be to do that in reference to which the pages of history fail to furnish a national parallel. To do this would be to detract from our national prestige. It would be a voluntary surrender of one of the highest of our national prerogatives, a confession of our inferiority as a world power and it would bring upon us the ridicule and contempt of all self-respecting nations.

Had the minority of the committee, in their substitute and accompanying views, recognized and accepted the legitimate results of the Spanish war and the resulting treaty of peace and the facts of history, and the principles of international law as they must necessarily be applied to and determine the status of our insular possessions, and then openly and firmly taken their stand upon the doctrine of an absolute free interchange of products between these possessions and the United States, and between the islands respectively, then they would have an issue that would have commanded the respect of all, even of those who are of the opinion that there should, for the purpose of revenue, be temporary trade restrictions.

But when they in their proposed substitute ignore history, fling to the wind all the fruits of a successful war, brush aside as worse than useless all acquired by the grand victories of our Army and Navy and accepted and approved by our treaty of peace, repudiate the principles of international law as applicable to existing conditions, insist on the relinquishment of all claim to American sovereignty in our insular possessions, demand the withdrawal of the protection of the American flag, turn back the wheels of progress and erect a blockade in American civilization, concluding with the remarkable and startling proposition that from and after the passage of their proposed substitute the Philippine Archipelago shall be foreign territory—I say when such a proposition is assumed by our friends of the minority of the committee it leads in a backward direction, and the American people, the best representatives of the Anglo-Saxon race now extant, have never yet in all their incomparable history even halted, much less taken a backward step, in the great international contest for primacy in the grand work of industrial progress and of the promotion of the principles of human liberty, the amelioration of the condition of the downtrodden and oppressed, in the elevation of the human race, and, in my judgment, they never will.

And in this connection it does seem to me our friends of the minority are somewhat inconsistent. This Chamber has been ringing for the past two weeks with fervid and emphatic denunciations of the various laws, rules, and regulations enacted by the Taft Commission. They, or many of them at least, have been assailed as tyrannical in the extreme, as subversive of liberty, as gross invasions of civil and political rights, as constituting a disgrace to American citizenship. Especially was my friend the Senator from Washington [Mr. TURNER] both eloquent and emphatic in these denunciations. He denounced these laws as a "work of tyranny, too black even for the most despotic and tyrannical government that exists on the face of the earth."

He insisted, further, that the leaders of the Republican party had dishonored the nation by their greed for power and spoils. "They have done so," said he, "in their greed for power and spoils; they have done so under the false and blasphemous pretense that they were serving the Almighty God by advancing liberty and religion. Instead of advancing the cause of liberty," said he, "they have struck it the worst blow it has received since it first found a foothold on the American continent," while my greatly esteemed friend the venerable Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER], in referring to one of these Philippine laws, said: "The statute is a violation of every fundamental principle of free people and free government."

And yet the minority of the committee in their proposed substitute for the pending bill, after providing that the United States shall continue to occupy and govern said archipelago until the people thereof shall have established a stable government, and until sufficient guaranties have been obtained for the performance of our treaty obligations with Spain, for the safety of those inhabitants who have adhered to the United States, and for the maintenance and protection of all rights which have accrued under their authority, conclude with this remarkable statement:

That until the people of the islands shall establish a government, as hereinbefore provided all laws, rules, and regulations—

Every last one of them, those that are tyrannical and those that are not—now in force for the government of the islands, and the raising of revenue therefor, shall be in force, except as the same may be in conflict with this act.

There is nothing in the act which conflicts. It is a plain proposition that they propose to extend every one of these laws indefinitely so far as the provisions of the substitute are concerned.

Mr. RAWLINS. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. MITCHELL. Certainly.

Mr. RAWLINS. The Senator's criticism, as I understand it, is that the final clause of the substitute of the minority proposes to continue in force the existing laws pending the temporary occupation of the islands by the United States, I suppose including the provisions of the sedition act making it an offense to advocate independence in the islands, I ask the Senator whether he does not think that provision would be in conflict with this act, the very purpose of which is to secure independence to the islands?

Mr. MITCHELL. I think not.

Mr. RAWLINS. The Senator thinks not?

Mr. MITCHELL. I think not. I think this——

Mr. RAWLINS. I will further say to the Senator, by his permission, that at the time that clause was inserted the members of the minority had not had laid before them the various acts of the Philippine Commission, and especially had their attention not been called to the act known as the sedition act. We indulged in what was then to us the reasonable, but now turns out to be a violent, presumption that the eminent men we had sent over there would only adopt measures reasonable in their character for the purpose of providing temporarily a government for the people, and we thought we ought to provide a status quo. But I wish to add further, if the Senator will permit me one moment——

Mr. MITCHELL. I should like to answer at that point. The last answer of the Senator from Utah is a good one; the first answer was a very bad one, in my judgment.

Mr. RAWLINS. I am glad——

Mr. MITCHELL. If it is true, as stated by the Senator, that this clause was inserted before they knew anything about the fact of the laws being tyrannical, then the answer is a good one.

Mr. RAWLINS. That is correct; and I further wish to state that the minority of the committee have a proposition, since they made the discovery as to the character of those laws, to annul and disapprove them. I think the minority will vote for that provision, and I hope the Senator will do so.

Mr. MITCHELL. In other words, as I was about to state, notwithstanding the infamous character of all or many of the laws, rules, and regulations now in force for the government of these islands—as so strenuously insisted upon in the speeches to which I have referred—our Democratic friends, at least that portion of them who signed the minority report, as well as all who support that substitute, recommend and urge that they be continued in force. If these acts or any of them are of a tyrannical and oppressive character, as stated, why continue them in force? Why not demand their immediate repeal? Why not insist that such tyrannical acts should at once be wiped from the statute books of the country?

Congress unquestionably has the power to repeal the Spooner amendment, to abrogate every law enacted by the Taft Commission, and even to abolish the Commission itself. Why not do this instead of recommending that the laws, rules, and regulations which they have denounced as tyrannical and subversive of the principles of human liberty be continued on the statute books of the country? This seems to be a most remarkable recommendation when considered in connection with the speeches to which we have been listening. I can not bring myself to believe that this proposed substitute can receive the hearty approbation and approval of all our Democratic friends.

The distinguished, erudite, and able Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MONEY], I imagine, does not take very kindly to it. He has a scheme of his own. But while he told us in his interesting speech the other day that he expected to vote for the minority substitute, he at the same time told us that he had not "examined it carefully." "I shall give it my vote," he tells us, "while not thoroughly approving the method." And he tells us further, in speaking of the proposed substitute, this: "There are a great many things I would have left out, and some things I would have inserted."

All these statements taken together can hardly be construed as any very cordial or enthusiastic indorsement of the proposed substitute. Just what the "great many things" are which the Senator would have left out of the substitute the distinguished Senator does not tell us; nor does he deem it advisable to inform us what any or all of the "some things" are which he would have inserted.

It is to be regretted that our Democratic friends can not agree on just what ought to be done, or just what their platform on this subject is to be in the next Presidential contest.

OUR TITLE TO THE PHILIPPINE ARCHIPELAGO IS UNASSAILABLE.

The distinguished and able Senator from Washington [Mr. TURNER] denies our right to the Philippine Archipelago, under what he claims are the well-recognized principles of international law, and he bases his argument on an assumption of fact which is without any just foundation. He assumes and asserts as a fact that the Filipinos had achieved independence and established an independent government in the islands prior to the fall of Manila.

If this were really true, then the deduction of the Senator would, I concede, indeed be right. If, as a matter of fact, the Filipinos had, prior to the date of our destruction of the Spanish fleet, really achieved independence and established an independent government of their own—a government recognized by the conquered Spain and by other foreign powers—then I concede our victory over Spain would not have had the effect, under the well-recognized principles of international law, of transferring the sovereignty of those islands to us or the allegiance of the Filipinos to our flag; and in such event no right, either in virtue of the victory of our armies and our fleets, nor yet by virtue of the Paris treaty of peace, would have vested in us to those islands.

But I deny the claim of the distinguished Senator as to the assumed fact. I deny that the Filipinos had prior to the fall of Manila ever succeeded to their independence. The indestructible facts of history will not sustain the assumption of the Senator. I deny that they had ever at any time prior to the fall of Manila established an independent government. When did Spain recognize their independence? When did any other power on earth recognize their release from Spanish sovereignty? When did either Spain or any other of the great powers ever concede that they had achieved their independence or established an independent government? The utter fallacy of the whole argument of the distinguished Senator abides in his assumption of an alleged fact which never had any existence.

This is the clearly discernible vice, this is the deadly "fly in the ointment," which utterly destroys the very plausible argument of the distinguished Senator. Any claim, therefore, that there is any defect in our title to the Philippine Archipelago, based on the strange suggestions of our Democratic friends and so strenuously insisted upon by the distinguished Senator from Washington in his recent speech, that at the time of the Paris treaty the Filipinos were in possession of those islands and had conquered Spain and secured their independence and established an independent government of their own, is wholly barren of support.

As a matter of fact, those people, so far from having achieved independence and established an independent government of their own, had not been even urging a war for independence. They were professedly contending with Spain for other and wholly different purposes than that of independence. They had not prior to the destruction of the Spanish fleet by Dewey made any claim that they were contending for independence. They claimed to be fighting simply for the purpose of compelling certain reforms, as they claimed, such as the right to representation in the Cortez, the expulsion of the friars, and the restoration of the people to their lands, with a division of the Episcopal sees between the Spanish and native priests, the freedom of the press, religious toleration, economic autonomy, and laws similar to the laws of Spain.

But even were it true that they had been fighting for independence and had virtually accomplished such purpose, as claimed by the distinguished Senator, it is not true, as I have stated, that their independence had ever been recognized by Spain, the United States, or any other sovereign power of the world, and by the universally accepted rule of international law until this is done the territory remained under the sovereignty of Spain and the people were subjects of Spain. By that treaty, therefore, the United States was endowed with absolute sovereignty over these islands, and it was specifically provided, as follows:

The civil rights and political status of the native inhabitants of the territory hereby ceded to the United States shall be determined by the Congress.

In the absence, therefore, of any action on the part of Congress, what, I inquire, was the President's sworn constitutional duty on the ratification of that treaty, in view of the then existing state of affairs in the island of Luzon? It must be remembered that two days before the ratification of that treaty Aguinaldo and his Tagal followers had made war upon our soldiers in the island of Luzon. They had fired on the American flag. They had committed open acts of insubordination and insurrection. This was continued after the ratification of the treaty.

It was therefore an insurrection upon the part of the inhabitants of those islands, or a small portion of them, against the sovereignty of the United States. And while it is true the President has no power under the Constitution to declare war, he not only has the power, but it is his sworn constitutional duty, to call out the military and naval forces of the United States for the purpose of suppressing insurrections. This authority, as we must all agree, is expressly conferred upon the Chief Executive of the nation, first, by section 3 of Article II of the Constitution of the United States, which provides, among other things, that the President shall take care that the laws are faithfully executed, and by two statutes that have remained unrepealed on the statute books of the Republic, one for more than one hundred years and the other nearly one hundred years; the one was passed February 28, 1795, and the other March 3, 1807.

Mr. RAWLINS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KEAN in the chair). Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. MITCHELL. Yes, sir.

Mr. RAWLINS. Is not the Senator aware of the fact that on the 22d of July, prior to the fall of Manila, Admiral Dewey telegraphed to the Secretary of the Navy that the Filipinos expected independence; that prior to the fall of Manila a constitution and form of government had been adopted providing for an independent government; that General Otis, after the fall of Manila, prior to the making of the Paris treaty, officially reported that that government, at the head of which was Aguinaldo, had control of all the islands, including a considerable part of Mindanao; that his authority was dominant even in Manila; that an order for the celebration of the death of Rizal was universally obeyed throughout the islands, including Manila; that all business was suspended throughout the islands on that day; that during that same time, according to the report of Admiral Dewey, three eminent naval officers, commissioned by him to that service, went to the island and found peace prevailing, life and property secure, and the people operating under an organized government?

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, an answer to that question is to be found in the report of the first Philippine Commission sent out from Manila, which is signed by——

Mr. RAWLINS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. MITCHELL. The Senator will excuse me a moment. I wish to answer his question.

Mr. RAWLINS. Very well.

Mr. MITCHELL. I hold in my hand the report of the first Commission sent by this Government to the Philippine Islands, signed by Jacob Gould Schurman, George Dewey, Charles Denby, and Dean C. Worcester. That report is dated November 2, 1899.

Mr. RAWLINS. The report to which I allude relates to the condition prior to the arrival of that Commission.

Mr. MITCHELL. This report relates to the condition which existed in the Philippines prior to the downfall of Manila, and I desire to read from the report in answer to the question of the Senator from Utah.

Mr. RAWLINS. Mr. President——

Mr. MITCHELL. Wait a moment. This is an extract from the report:

If the foregoing statements regarding the attitude of the Filipinos toward independence seem to be in contradiction with the fact that some Filipinos are now engaged in resisting the sovereignty of the United States, it should be recalled that the Tagalog insurrection is an inheritance from Spain, and that if the idea of independence is now one of its animating forces it had originally no place in the movement, and that it is to-day a much weaker force than the selfish ambitions of leaders who deceive the misguided people or than that distrust and hatred of the white race which has been engendered in them by three centuries of experience with the only branch of it they have ever known.

The Tagalog leaders also appreciate the value in foreign markets of the idea of independence as a justification of rebellion; but it is not that idea which secured them soldiers, or munitions of war, or tributes from other provinces, but the strong hand of force, coupled with persistent misrepresentations of the purposes and objects of the American Government, for the dissemination of which both circumstances and the native suspicion of the white man were peculiarly favorable. Nor can it with any propriety be said that an insurrection confined to Tagalogs—who, if all are included, number 1,600,000 souls—has for its object the independence of the peoples of the Philippine Islands, who number about 8,000,000.

And even among the Tagalogs the idea of independence is a more or less superfluous appendage to the insurrectionary movement. For the rebellion (in which the United States has merely succeeded to Spain's place) arose out of definite grievances and sought redress for definite wrongs. In a proclamation in the Tagalog dialect, bearing the pseudonymous signature "Malabar," which was extensively circulated in July, 1897, the ends sought by the insurgents—

I call the attention of the Senator to what they were fighting for—the ends sought by the insurgents, who had been in rebellion since 1896, were succinctly and clearly stated in the following terms:

"1. Expulsion of the friars and restitution to the townships of lands which the friars have appropriated, dividing the incumbencies held by them, as well as the episcopal sees, equally between peninsular and insular secular priests.

"2. Spain must concede to us, as she has to Cuba, parliamentary representation—

Not independence, but—

"parliamentary representation, freedom of the press, toleration of all religious sects, laws common with hers, and administrative and economic autonomy.

"3. Equality in treatment and pay between peninsular and insular civil servants.

"4. Restitution of all lands appropriated by the friars to the townships or to the original owners, or in default of finding such owners, the State is to put them up to public auction in small lots of a value within the reach of all and payable within four years, the same as the present State lands.

"5. Abolition of the Government authorities' power to banish citizens, as well as unjust measures against Filipinos; legal equality for all persons, whether peninsular or insular, under the civil as well as the penal code.

"The war must be prolonged to give the greatest signs of vitality possible, so that Spain may be compelled—

To do what? To grant independence? No, sir; but—

"to grant our demands, otherwise she will consider us an effete race, and curtail rather than extend our rights."

Now follows what the Commission, including Admiral Dewey as one of the commissioners, said:

This certainly is no scheme of independence.

Whatever Admiral Dewey may have telegraphed, we find him here in his official report joining with his cocommissioners, after reciting the grievances of these people for the redress of which they have been contending against Spain for many years, in making this statement:

This certainly is no scheme of independence. It is a statement of grievances, a demand of reforms, and, by implication, a bill of rights. In detail, the items of the programme are: (1) The expulsion of the friars, and the restitution of the lands held by them to the townships or to the original owners; (2) the recognition of Filipino priests in filling the incumbencies vacated by the friars; (3) absolute religious toleration; (4) the equality of all persons—Filipinos as well as Spaniards—before the law; the assimilation of the laws of the archipelago to those of Spain, and the equality of Filipinos with Spaniards in the civil service; (5) the freedom of the press; (6) the establishment of representative institutions; (7) home rule; (8) abolition of deportation and other unjust measures against Filipinos, and (9) the continuance of the war as a means to coerce Spain into granting these rights.

Not for the purpose of coercing them into granting independence, but into granting the rights just enumerated.

Mr. RAWLINS. Mr. President——

Mr. MITCHELL. I will yield in a moment. Admiral Dewey and his co-commissioners say:

It was not the intention or desire to shake off Spanish sovereignty, but merely to abolish its abuses and to vindicate and secure under its ægis the civil, political, and religious rights and liberties of the Filipinos.

Mr. RAWLINS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. MITCHELL. I yield.

Mr. RAWLINS. Mr. President, the proclamation to which reference has been made by the Senator was issued in 1897, and doubtless sets forth the desires of the Filipino people at that time. They succeeded in obtaining a treaty with Spain securing, as they supposed, those ends in the latter part of 1897, known as the treaty of Baguabac.

Every one of the stipulations of that treaty having been violated, the Filipino people again resorted to arms; and when war was declared by the United States against Spain, the Administration at Washington was informed, and the President sent the information with his approval to the Senate, that those people had informed our consular officers and Admiral Dewey that what the people there expected as the basis of their cooperation with us was independence. Before leaving Hongkong a proclamation setting forth those purposes was issued and carried to the islands by Admiral Dewey——

Mr. MITCHELL. I did not yield to the Senator for a speech but for a question.

Mr. RAWLINS. And promulgated, if the Senator will permit me, to those people, and a copy sent to the President. Admiral Dewey on the 22d of July telegraphed to the Secretary of the Navy explicitly—and it will be found in his official report—that the people there expected independence. While it is true—without going through in detail what has been time and time again shown in the debates here—that in 1897 and succeeding that the people desired what is there set forth, and what they thought they had obtained by the treaty of Baguabac, they were disappointed; and when they again took up arms they took up arms for the purpose of achieving their independence and had practically achieved it before the treaty was made between Spain and the United States.

Mr. MITCHELL. In answer to what the Senator has said, I desire to ask him a question. I ask, Did Spain ever recognize the independence of those people? I desire an answer to that question.

Mr. RAWLINS. No.

Mr. MITCHELL. Never did?

Mr. RAWLINS. Spain did not; but the people, as a matter of fact, had achieved their independence, for before the treaty of Paris was made, December 8, and especially before it was ratified by the Senate in February, Spain had been driven from the islands.

Mr. MITCHELL. That is not an answer to my question.

Mr. RAWLINS. Spain did not then have control of a foot of territory anywhere in the archipelago.

Mr. MITCHELL. Now, Mr. President, I undertake to say that neither Spain nor any other power on earth ever recognized the independence of those people in the Philippine Islands prior to the downfall of Manila or at any other time, and I assert it as a doctrine of international law, which the distinguished Senator, because he is a good lawyer, will not deny, that until their independence was recognized by foreign powers the sovereignty of the mother country did not pass to and attach to the people claiming to be independent.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. MITCHELL. Yes.

Mr. TELLER. I do not wish to interrupt the Senator, but I wish as a lawyer to enter my denial that that is international law.

Mr. MITCHELL. But I insist, Mr. President, the Senator will find that it is international law if he will study it carefully.

Mr. RAWLINS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. MITCHELL. Yes.

Mr. RAWLINS. My attention has been called by a man most familiar with international law, whose opinion is much better than mine upon that subject, to the fact that there have been many instances where people had revolted from their parent country and struggled for independence, whose independence has been recognized by other nations without any recognition on the part of the mother country.

I do not agree with the Senator's proposition that recognition by the mother country of the independence of a people who have in fact achieved their independence by force of arms is necessary to the recognition of that fact, and I deny also, as a matter of international law, that the recognition of that fact by any nation is essential if it has been established that the people in reality have achieved their independence.

Mr. MITCHELL. But, Mr. President, the Senator has submitted a different proposition entirely from the one he entered upon in the first place. I undertake to say that the Senator can not point to any recognition, either by Spain or by any other government, of the independence of those people; neither can he point to any established government erected by those people prior to the downfall of Manila.

Now, I want to ask the Senator this question: Does he contend here and now that at the date of the Paris treaty sovereignty did not rest with Spain?

Mr. RAWLINS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon yield?

Mr. MITCHELL. Yes, sir.

Mr. RAWLINS. My answer, in a word, is that sovereignty is the actual power of control which one government may have over a people or a territory. There can be no such thing as constructive sovereignty. The moment any nation loses the control of a people so that its laws are no longer in force or respected by that people—after those people have enforced and practically applied the rules adopted by themselves—just at the moment that occurs sovereignty ceases to exist.

It may be only suspended. It is possible that Spain might have reconquered the islands, but I do say that on December 1, 1898, Spain was not in possession or in control as a sovereign exercising actual sovereignty over a foot of the archipelago. That being true, she had no sovereignty there, and was not in possession of anything to which it could be transferred.

Mr. MITCHELL. The doctrine the Senator advocates is that there can be such a thing as a shifting sovereignty; that if a mob obtains control for a moment, sovereignty then attaches. Is that so?

Mr. RAWLINS. No; I do not think that follows; but where a people have organized a government, promulgated law, established institutions, raised armies, and have enforced the laws which they have promulgated under regulated authority, and in that way gained the dominion and control of a people and territory, that is sovereignty. It may exist for a month or a year, it may be overthrown, but while it does exist in that form it is sovereignty; and that condition, if we are to believe the official reports of General Otis and the dispatches that were sent here covering the period in question by those who were actually representing us upon the ground, was the condition prevailing in the archipelago prior to the treaty.

Mr. MITCHELL. I think the Senator would have the greatest difficulty in finding any recognition in any work on international law of the doctrine he advocates. The truth is that the sovereignty of Spain was recognized by every power on earth at the date of the Paris treaty. There was no recognition of something that did not exist as a matter of fact, and there could not have been.

Mr. RAWLINS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. MITCHELL. I do.

Mr. RAWLINS. The distinguished Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN], who does not entirely agree with the minority in some phases of this question, but who is familiar with international law, places the ground of our title to the Philippine Islands upon conquest—not upon cession—by conquest, he claims, because we had captured Manila. In my view, as pointed out by the Senator from Washington [Mr. TURNER], because we had gained possession and control of the islands our sovereignty attached and displaced that of Spain.

Mr. MITCHELL. The victory we won at Manila was a victory over Spain, not over the Filipinos. It was Spain we were warring with.

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator allow me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. MITCHELL. Yes, sir.

Mr. TILLMAN. There were two victories at Manila—one over the Spanish fleet and one over the Filipinos. Which one does the Senator refer to?

Mr. MITCHELL. I am speaking of the fall of Manila.

Mr. TILLMAN. When did Manila fall?

Mr. MITCHELL. When Dewey captured it with his guns.

Mr. TILLMAN. Not at all. The city was not surrendered until General Merritt, or some other—I believe it was General Merritt who was in command of the American army—aided by the Filipino army, besieged and captured Manila.

Mr. MITCHELL. Does the Senator from South Carolina hold that the people of the Philippine Islands had achieved their independence at the date of the treaty of peace?

Mr. TILLMAN. I hold that they had driven the Spaniards out of the islands and held every foot of them, except the cities of Manila and Iloilo.

Mr. MITCHELL. Had they achieved their independence, established a government, and been recognized?

Mr. TILLMAN. They were much nearer to it than were the American colonies in 1783.

Mr. MITCHELL. Being very near to and being right there, are two different things.

Mr. TILLMAN. If we had acted toward the Filipinos with the same magnanimity that France acted toward us, we would have recognized the independence that the Filipinos had won, but we did not do it.

Mr. MCCOMAS. I should like to ask a question of the Senator from Oregon, who has so admirably analyzed the substitute of the Senator from Utah [Mr. RAWLINS] who has just taken his seat.

Mr. MITCHELL. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. MCCOMAS. I wish to remind him that the first three lines of the substitute presented by the Senator from Utah assume that Spain had sovereignty over the archipelago, assume that Spain ceded the archipelago and sovereignty to us in terms. The substitute provides:

That, subject to the provisions hereinafter set forth, the United States of America hereby relinquish all claim of sovereignty over and title to the archipelago known as the Philippine Islands.

In addition to that the Senator has well characterized the project of having the existing laws, rules, and regulations now in force perpetuated until the people of the islands shall establish a government.

I ask the Senator, as a student of international law—I mean the Senator from Oregon, not the Senator from Utah, who has so suddenly and strangely shifted from his former position to his statement a moment ago—I ask the Senator from Oregon how it is possible that when we have relinquished all claim of sovereignty as the substitute provides, "subject to the provisions hereinafter set forth," none of which contemplate the retention of that sovereignty—how under international law we could possibly perpetuate, when we leave the islands without a treaty-making power, any laws, rules, and regulations? Would we not just leave the islands a chaos?

Mr. MITCHELL. I prefer to leave the answer to that question to our Democratic friends of the minority.

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. MITCHELL. Yes.

Mr. TILLMAN. I am no lawyer, but I have a little common sense. I want to ask the Senator and his colleagues, who are referring with a great deal of unction every once in a while to the substitute, whether they are ready to adopt the substitute?

Mr. MITCHELL. I am not.

Mr. TILLMAN. Of course not; and yet you take the substitute, pick it to pieces, and ignore the fundamental principle involved in the first section, which recognizes that those people shall have liberty, shall have government, which we will assist them to establish after destroying the one they had established. We have conquered them; we have subjugated them; we have destroyed every semblance of government they have ever established; and we recognize that—the Democrats do, but you do not; you claim that they never had a government.

Mr. MITCHELL. The answer to that is simply this, that two days before the ratification of the treaty of peace Aguinaldo and his followers made war on our soldiers and on the American flag, and the United States, in pursuance of a constitutional duty, entered upon the business of suppressing that insurrection.

THE CONSENT OF THE GOVERNED.

Mr. President, a great deal has been said in this debate about the consent of the governed. I want to call the attention of our Democratic friends to a little history on that subject made by the Democratic party. Our Democratic friends claim to be following in the footsteps of the Democratic party for the last fifty years or more, in reference to the great questions cognate to those now agitating the country, and they make the welkin ring in opposition to a government without the consent of the governed.

I beg to attract the attention of our friends to the position of the Democratic party on this question, as illustrated by the Democratic administration of President Pierce in what is known in history as the "Ostend manifesto." What were the facts in connection with that manifesto, and what was the manifesto itself?

Franklin Pierce, a Democrat, was President of the United States. William L. Marcy, another leading Democrat, was his Secretary of State. James Buchanan, another Democrat, and afterwards President of the United States, was minister to England. J. Y. Mason, another Democrat, was minister to France, and Pierre Soulé was minister to Spain.

Minister Soulé, our minister to Spain, was charged by President Pierce to open negotiations with Spain on the subject of the acquisition of Cuba. Pending this, President Pierce directed those three ministers plenipotentiary to meet and confer upon the subject and to submit their joint views. In pursuance of these instructions they met at Ostend, in Belgium, in October, 1854, and after a conference they addressed a letter embodying their conclusions.

This letter was addressed to William L. Marcy, the then Secretary of State, and this letter is what is known in our political history as the "Ostend manifesto." It was in every essential particular a Democratic document, embodying the then principles of the Democratic party upon the subject of expansion. And what was the doctrine upon the subject of expansion announced in that manifesto? It was in substance and effect that the United States should acquire Cuba, if possible, by purchase from Spain; but if that were found to be impossible, then we should wrest it from Spain without the consent of the Government of Spain or of the people of Spain or of Cuba.

By that manifesto it was proposed that the United States Government should offer Spain a price for Cuba, to use the language of the manifesto, "far beyond its then value," and that if such offer was refused by Spain then, to again use the language of the manifesto, "We shall be justified by every law, human and divine, in wresting it from Spain if we possess the power."

Now, what followed? The Republican party in its national convention of 1856 denounced this Ostend manifesto and the doctrine which it enunciated. And why? Not because it might not have favored the peaceable purchase of Cuba, but because that party then, as now, was opposed to wresting by force from any sovereign on this or any other continent any foreign territory whatever.

When our Democratic friends, therefore, talk about governing without the consent of the governed I would point them to this record of their own party, so recent as 1854, which shows that they then favored the forcible acquisition of foreign territory, not only without the consent of the sovereign, but without the consent of the people of the territory to be ceded or of those remaining under the old sovereign.

As bearing upon the question of our responsibility in connection with the present and future management and control of our insular possessions, I give unqualified approval to the following sentiment expressed by President Roosevelt in his interesting history of the Cuban war:

> The guns that thundered over Manila and Santiago left us echoes of glory, but they also left us a legacy of duty. It is more than idle for us to say that we have no duty to perform and can leave the islands to their fate.
> Let us, as we value our self-respect, face these responsibilities and meet and perform them in a way to redound to our glory, with a high resolve for the widest freedom of individual initiative, pursuing no policy that is hostile to the welfare of the many. While our nation's first duty is within its own borders, it is not to be absolved from facing its duties as a whole, and if it refuses to do so it forfeits its rights to struggle for a place among the people that shape the destiny of mankind.

Mr. HOAR. May I ask the Senator from Oregon a question?

Mr. MITCHELL. Certainly.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator has been asking our Democratic friends whether they stood by the old Democratic doctrine of the consent of the governed. Considering the recent history of our own party, may I ask the Senator if he proposes to stand by the old doctrine of the Republican party? Which does he agree with—the Republican or the Democratic doctrine?

Mr. MITCHELL. I do not agree with the Democratic doctrine of that day, nor with the doctrine advanced in the substitute proposed to the pending bill by the minority of the committee.

Mr. HOAR. I want to ask the question whether the Senator agrees with the doctrine of the Republican party of that day?

Mr. MITCHELL. I agree with the doctrine of the Republican party as enunciated in the platform of 1856.

Mr. HOAR. So do I.

Mr. MITCHELL. In which they denounced the "Ostend manifesto," because by that manifesto the Democratic party took the position of obtaining Cuba in any way, at any cost, or under any circumstances. They even proposed to pay a higher price for it than it was worth, and if Cuba refused, then to take it by force of arms. The Republican party of that day denounced that proposition, and I agree with them, and the Republican party stands to-day precisely where it stood in 1856 upon the great subject of expansion and in its attitude toward foreign nations.

Mr. HOAR. The difference between my friend and me is that on the Philippine question I stand by the old doctrine of the Republican party and the Senator does not.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. MITCHELL. I have yielded the floor.

Mr. TELLER. I want to suggest to the Senator from Oregon that the Republican party seems to have adopted the Democratic position of 1854, and the Democratic party, I believe, has got on the Republican platform of 1856.

I should like to say while I am on the floor that the Democratic party as a party never adopted the principle of the "Ostend manifesto." It was not a Democratic measure, though it was the work of three quite illustrious and prominent Democrats.

Mr. President, I asked to-day to have inserted in the RECORD an order of General Bell. Several Senators desire to have it read, so that it may go into the RECORD to-morrow morning. I ask now that it may be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Colorado asks that the order from General Bell, referred to by him, be read. The Secretary will read it, in the absence of objection.

The Secretary read the order, which will be found in full preceding Mr. MITCHELL'S speech.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the junior Senator from Colorado [Mr. PATTERSON].

Mr. MONEY. On behalf of my colleague [Mr. MCLAURIN], who is unavoidably absent attending a sick brother, I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] to the pending bill, and also a proposed amendment to another section of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Are both amendments offered on behalf of the Senator's colleague?

Mr. MONEY. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator desire to have them read now?

Mr. MONEY. No, sir; but I should like to have them printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments will be printed.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, what is the pending question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending question is on the amendment offered by the junior Senator from Colorado.

Mr. PATTERSON. I trust no vote will be pressed upon any of these amendments until the discussion is entirely through. I know there are some Senators who desire to speak upon that amendment—the one I offered—and whenever the discussion is through, and I am of the opinion it will not continue very long, then all these amendments can be taken up seriatim.

Mr. LODGE. If we could agree on a time for taking a vote on all the amendments, then all the amendments could wait until the end; but if we carry on the debate in this way there is nothing open to us except to have the question put on the amendments as they arise, unless Senators are ready to debate them.

Mr. PATTERSON. I think no delay is occasioned by simply allowing the amendments to stand. As soon as the debate is concluded, then, without any further delay, votes will be taken on the amendment and then upon the bill.

Mr. LODGE. No delay, of course, is occasioned by allowing the amendments to stand, because agreements always carry the amendments as well as the main question; but the delay is caused by Senators not being ready to go on with the debate, and yet saying they wish to have the debate continue from day to day. All that remains under those circumstances is to press the votes as they occur on each amendment. I would much prefer, if I could, to make an agreement on a reasonable time which would bring all the amendments to the final vote and would enable Senators to consult their own convenience with respect to speaking. It is very disagreeable to me to keep pressing the bill in this way at a time when it is not convenient for Senators to speak, but until an agreement to vote is reached no choice is left to me.

Mr. PATTERSON. Let me ask the chairman of the committee whether Senators on the other side of the Chamber expect to make speeches.

Mr. LODGE. I do not know. I know of only one Senator on this side who has said anything to me about making a speech.

Mr. PATTERSON. Is that the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER]?

Mr. LODGE. The Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. PATTERSON. That speech is to be made, at least.

Mr. LODGE. It is not to be made on this amendment, and I am certain the Senator from Wisconsin will not interfere with any agreement as to a time for taking a vote.

Mr. PATTERSON. It is not altogether improbable that the Senator from Wisconsin will talk about the sedition laws of the archipelago, and I think it very safe to predict that he will. If the Senator from Wisconsin will say that he will not discuss that subject, then we would be on more even terms in determining whether these amendments shall go over.

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator from Colorado give me some reason for asking me to enter into a stipulation as to what I will discuss and what I will not?

Mr. PATTERSON. I have no reason at all to give, but I am appealing to the chairman of the committee to allow the amendments to go over until the time comes when we shall have votes upon the amendments as well as on the measure itself.

Mr. SPOONER. I do not want to have this bill delayed a moment in order to enable me to make a speech.

Mr. LODGE. I knew that was the Senator's feeling.

Mr. SPOONER. I waive all that.

Mr. LODGE. I would be only too glad to have amendments wait until the final vote, and not press the vote on any amendment. I have no power to insist upon a vote at any time. My appeal to the opponents of the bill, now that we have been four weeks upon it, is that they should kindly make some agreement at which time we may take a vote. If we do not, I am forced to keep the bill before the Senate continually and to press a vote on each amendment as it comes up, which I dislike to do as much as anyone.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Votes on amendments can be postponed only by unanimous consent.

Mr. LODGE. Precisely.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. And only one amendment is in order at a time.

Mr. MONEY. If a vote is desired simply because nobody will speak, I will speak myself for a little while, although if the Senator from Utah is about to make a motion I will yield to him.

Mr. RAWLINS. I was simply going to make a suggestion to the Senator from Massachusetts. I am sure there is no disposition to delay voting on the amendments or on the bill.

Mr. LODGE. If there is no disposition to delay, then why should we not come to an agreement to vote at a reasonable time?

Mr. MONEY. Fix a time.

Mr. RAWLINS. There is a very thin Senate at present, and I dislike at this juncture to undertake to bind Senators to a definite time without knowing precisely who desire to speak upon the bill. But I am sure that if this matter is permitted to take its course we shall reach a vote within a reasonable time. We will reach it in the usual way, with which the Senator has never found any difficulty. There are a number of Senators, I think, on this side who may want to talk, and there are at least one or more on the other side, and I should not want to make any arrangement now which would interfere with the purposes of those Senators. The latter part of next week, or sometime next week, very likely we will get a vote.

Mr. WELLINGTON. I should like to say that before a vote is had on this bill I desire to submit some remarks upon it. I should have had no objection to speaking to-day, but it is now after 4 o'clock, almost half past 4, and I dislike very much to begin at this hour. I understand, however, that the Senator from Massachusetts who has this bill in charge will not call it up to-morrow, and very probably an adjournment will be had over Saturday. I should be glad to begin on Monday, if that be agreeable.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator from Maryland has stated correctly, that I do not propose to call up this bill to-morrow. We have two unanimous-consent agreements for to-morrow, one for eulogies upon a deceased Representative at 4 o'clock, and one at 3 o'clock for the consideration of unobjected pension bills, and between the conclusion of the routine morning business and 3 o'clock the time is to be given to the census bill. If the census bill is not concluded to-morrow, we shall sit, I suppose, on Saturday, in order to finish it. If it is concluded to-morrow, it is my intention to move that we adjourn until Monday. There is some executive business which the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations desires, I believe, to lay before the Senate on Monday. If that is disposed of early, I believe there will be a general desire to devote the remainder of that day to the Calendar.

On Tuesday it is my intention to ask the Senate to resume the consideration of the Philippine bill, and I shall then be forced, as the time has run so long now, to ask the Senate to exclude all other business and to sit longer hours. I dislike extremely to do it, and I was in hopes that some agreement could be reached as to the time for taking the vote. I am not disposed to press unreasonably for that date at all, but the Senator from Utah says a reasonable time, and a reasonable time for an agreement I am more than willing to make.

Mr. TILLMAN. What would the Senator from Massachusetts consider a reasonable time, if I may ask him?

Mr. LODGE. It is for the Senator from Utah to make the proposition about a reasonable time, because it is on the other side of the Chamber that the speeches are to be made.

Mr. PATTERSON. We already know of two speeches on the other side.

Mr. LODGE. The speech of the Senator from Maryland, I take it, will be on your side.

Mr. PATTERSON. Well, physically it will not be.

Mr. LODGE. Physically it will not be, but the physical part is not the important part of the Senator's speech.

Mr. RAWLINS. There are a number of Senators who are absent and do not anticipate a vote on this question until they have an opportunity to return. As I said, I think very likely we will be able to reach an agreement for a vote some time next week. Let it go until Tuesday, and then we will determine it.

Mr. LODGE. I have stated very frankly to the Senate what my purpose is in giving way to-morrow and on Monday, and I hope the Senator from Utah, who represents the minority report, will be willing on Tuesday to try to reach some agreement as to time. As I have said, I have no desire to make a very short limit. I want him to suit his own convenience. I think it will accommodate Senators on the other side much more if there is a time agreed upon. Then they can make their speeches at their own convenience, and the amendments will all go up to the final vote. I trust that on Tuesday, when I shall renew this request, the Senators on the other side will be willing to make some arrangement with us for taking the final vote.

Mr. WELLINGTON. I understand from the Senator from Massachusetts that it is not his intention on Monday next to press the Philippine bill. Then I shall not be present on Monday, but I shall be ready to proceed and shall claim the floor if it be convenient——

Mr. HOAR (to Mr. WELLINGTON). Take it now.

Mr. WELLINGTON. I can take the floor now and resume it on Tuesday morning for the purpose of speaking on the Philippine bill.

Mr. LODGE. That is entirely agreeable to me. I shall, of course, ask the Senate to proceed to its consideration immediately after the morning business.

Mr. WELLINGTON. Immediately after the morning business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. What is the pleasure of the Senate?

Mr. HOAR. What is the pending amendment? I do not care to have it read. I want to know what it is about.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending amendment is one proposed by the junior Senator from Colorado [Mr. PATTERSON]. It is short. Does the Senator desire to have it read?

Mr. TELLER. Is not the pending amendment the one I proposed?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the senior Senator from Colorado comes one later.

Mr. TELLER. I do not suppose anybody desires to go on with the debate at this hour. If not, I should like to make a motion that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think we ought to have a brief executive session, if the Senator will make that motion.

Mr. LODGE. I will make the motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator from Colorado yield to me?

Mr. TELLER. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] has the floor.

Mr. LODGE. I yield to my colleague.

APPEALS AND WRITS OF ERROR.

Mr. HOAR. There is a very brief and simple bill in regard to appeals and writs of error, the consideration of which was postponed because the time of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] was taken up by his remarks in the Senate and he had no opportunity to examine it. It is the bill (S. 2952) to regulate the practice in the United States courts as to appeals and writs of error. I should like to know whether the Senator from Colorado has had an opportunity to examine the bill.

Mr. TELLER. I have not had a chance to look at it. However, if the Senator from Massachusetts thinks it is all right, I will not object.

Mr. HOAR. It is not important enough to press it against any Senator's objection.

Mr. TELLER. I will try to-morrow to get a chance to look at it.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to call up that bill to-morrow morning after the routine business; and as it will take only a minute and will lead to no debate, I shall ask the Senate to pass it.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to suggest to the Senator the question I had in mind, which is whether it is properly provided that parties who do not wish to take an appeal can get a judgment, as they ought to do. Now, if that is secured so that the Senator is satisfied it is all right, I shall not make any further suggestion.

Mr. HOAR. That is all right. I ask the Senate to consider the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Massachusetts for the present consideration of the bill indicated by him?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment, to strike out section 2, as follows:

SEC. 2. That in any case in which an appeal or writ of error has heretofore been dismissed for nonjoinder of a party or parties, appellant or appellee, plaintiff or defendant in error, after the time limited for appeal or writ of error had expired, the appellant or plaintiff in error shall have the further time of six months after the passage of this act within which to take a new appeal or writ of error, and on such appeal or writ of error the record and copies thereof filed shall stand as the record in the new appeal or writ of error.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That no appeal or writ of error now pending or hereafter brought in any court of the United States shall be dismissed for misjoinder or nonjoinder of parties because any joint plaintiff or joint defendant in any judgment or decree has not been subjected to summons and severance or other equivalent proceedings. But in the event such parties are deemed necessary in any court of error or appeal, their appearance and joinder may be obtained or dispensed with by such orders or amendments as shall be deemed needed. And no writ of error or appeal shall operate as a supersedeas or suspend any process of execution except as to party prosecuting the same and joining in the bond therefor.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 4 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, February 14, 1902, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, February 13, 1902.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read, corrected, and approved.

DEPOT FOR REVENUE-CUTTER SERVICE.

The SPEAKER announced the change of reference of the bill (H. R. 10778) to provide for a site for a depot for the Revenue-Cutter Service from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

LIGHT-HOUSE KEEPER'S DWELLING AT CALUMET HARBOR.

Mr, MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 7675) to construct a light-house keeper's dwelling at Calumet Harbor.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to have constructed a light-house keeper's dwelling at Calumet Harbor, Lake Michigan, Illinois, at a cost not to exceed the sum of $10,000.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 6 strike out the words "ten thousand" and insert in lieu thereof the words "seven thousand five hundred."

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Before consent is given, I would like to know why this bill should be given unanimous consent. There are other bills of like import and of as much importance. I can not understand why we should go to work and single out separate bills and put them before the House. The rules provide how they shall come up, and unless there is some very urgent reason I shall object. I am willing to hear the statement of the gentleman, but I can not see why this bill should be given preference over 10,000 other bills pending here.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I am not able to explain to the gentleman the theory of unanimous consents in the House. It has been too long in vogue, and the gentleman is too well acquainted with that matter. As to the bill itself, I may say that the Department has for several years reported that the light-house keeper's dwelling now established at this point is unfit for habitation, and has earnestly recommended in several reports that $7,500 should be appropriated.

There is a life-saving station at this point now, and it is necessary that there should be a light-keeper's dwelling there. The light-keeper's dwelling is now there, but unfit for habitation. The Department has reported that it was not fit for people to live in, and in their last report, just published, they say that the dwelling is much worse than ever before. I may say to the gentleman from Tennessee that all of these bills which come from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce have been invariably called up in the House by request for unanimous consent for consideration, and I know of no case here of a bill of this kind, recommended by the committee and by the Department, where objection has ever been made to consideration.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. The gentleman is altogether mistaken in that. Now, if this bill was regularly on the Calendar, would it not be reached at any time after a call of committees, after taking one hour, to move to go into the Committee of the Whole to consider this business under your rules?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I suppose there is no doubt whatever that this bill might be reached upon the Union Calendar in the regular way; but the gentleman knows very well that under the practice of the House that would practically postpone the consideration of the bill; very likely the consideration of it would never be reached; and if that should become the practice of the House, it would absolutely do away with the passage of any bills by unanimous consent.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. How much does the bill carry?

Mr. MANN. Seven thousand five hundred dollars.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. MANN, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

JAMES L. PROCTOR.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill H. R. 718.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 718) to correct the military record of James L. Proctor.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to grant an honorable discharge in lieu of the dishonorable discharge heretofore granted to James L. Proctor, of the county of Kings, State of New York, late a private in Company F, Ninetieth Regiment of New York Veteran Volunteers: Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emoluments shall become due or payable by virtue of the passage of this act.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. FITZGERALD, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

AMERICAN REGISTER FOR BARKENTINE HAWAII.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the Senate bill I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 1970) to provide an American register for the barkentine Hawaii.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to cause the foreign-built barkentine Hawaii, owned by James Rolph, jr., of San Francisco, Cal., a citizen of the United States, to be registered as a vessel of the United States; and said vessel shall not engage in the coasting trade of the United States except between the Pacific coast and the Hawaiian Islands.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. KAHN, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

TRANSFER OF LOT IN WOODLAND CEMETERY TO CITY OF QUINCY, ILL.

Mr. JETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 6196) transferring a lot in Woodland Cemetery to the city of Quincy, Ill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and is hereby, authorized to convey to the city of Quincy, Ill., all the right, title, and interest of the United States in and to a certain parcel of land known and described as lot No. 33, in block 1, in Woodland Cemetery, in the county of Adams and State of Illinois, according to a plat of said cemetery as the same is recorded in the recorder's office of said county.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I would like some explanation of that.

Mr. JETT. I will say to the gentleman from New York that this is a bill authorizing the Secretary of War to convey whatever right, title, or interest the Government of the United States has in lot 33, in block 1, of a certain cemetery at Quincy, Ill., to the city of Quincy. It was conveyed to the Government in 1870, and it was provided that, whenever it ceased to be used for the purposes of a burying ground, then it should go back to the city of Quincy. That was the provision in substance in the deed, that it was only conveyed to the Government for the purposes of a burying ground, and the War Department has reported that it is no longer used for that purpose, and they recommend this bill. In fact, the War Department suggested the provisions of the bill itself.

Mr. CANNON. Whereabouts in the city of Quincy is this situated?

Mr. JETT. At what is called Woodlawn Cemetery.

Mr. CANNON. Near the banks of the river?

Mr. JETT. Yes, sir.

Mr. CANNON. How many acres?

Mr. JETT. This piece of land is 90 by about 120 feet. The Government was compelled to take up the bodies and remove them to another burying ground on account of the fact that the land was washing away.

Mr. CANNON. Have the remains of the soldiers buried there been removed?

Mr. JETT. They have been all removed, and it is so stated by the Quartermaster-General. He states emphatically that the Government uses it no longer for the purposes it was conveyed for, and recommends that whatever title the Government has shall be conveyed back to the city of Quincy.

Mr. CANNON. That was the condition of the grant the gentleman said?

Mr. JETT. That was the condition of the deed when it was conveyed by the city of Quincy to the Government for a burying ground.

Mr. HULL. I think the deed says it was conveyed for cemetery purposes, without any provision that it should revert back. This is a bill that was reported by Mr. Marsh in the last Congress, but it failed to become a law from the fact that it was started too late in the session. I do not think there is any objection to it at all.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. JETT, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

WILLIAM T. PRATT.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to be recognized to ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole House from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 3297) to correct the military record of William T. Pratt, as it is a bill that ought to be passed.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole be discharged from the further consideration of the bill which the Clerk is about to report, and that the same be now considered.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to remove the charge of desertion now standing against the record of William T. Pratt, late a private of Company A, Fifty-first Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and died November 28, 1864.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask if this bill has been reported from the committee?

Mr. CANNON. This bill passed the House and Senate last session, but so late that it failed of approval, and has been reported now, and the report states the whole story. The facts are, this soldier is shown to have died on the march. The circumstances are such that there can be no reasonable doubt about his death; that he was left by the wayside and has not been heard of since. This bill was amended by the Senate on the motion of Senator COCKRELL, as is usual in such cases. It seems to me that it is in proper shape.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, was read the third time, and passed.

ASSISTANT CLERKS TO COMMITTEES.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the Committee on Accounts to present the following three privileged reports which I send to the desk, and ask that they be taken up in the order of their number.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California makes three privileged reports from the Committee on Accounts, and the Clerk will read the first.

The Clerk read as follows:

[Report to accompany House resolution No. 93.]

The Committee on Accounts, to whom was referred House resolution No. 93, authorizing the appointment of assistant clerks to the Committees on Military Affairs and Naval Affairs, each of said clerks to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House at the rate of $6 a day during the sessions of the present Congress, have had the same under consideration and recommend its adoption.

The Committees on Military Affairs and Naval Affairs, besides having jurisdiction of the appropriation bills for the support of the Army and Navy, which involve upon the regular clerks to said committees a large amount of work, are called upon to consider a vast number of bills of a general and private nature relating to the Army and Navy establishments and to their personnel, involving many details and requiring clerical assistance in their proper consideration, reference, and disposition by the committees. The number of bills referred to those committees, in addition to general legislation, for the removal of charges of desertion, to correct military and naval records, and in regard to muster and pay, etc., run into the thousands, and to docket them, refer them to subcommittees, systematically arrange them for ready reference, together with the papers in each case, and to attend to the correspondence with the departments and reply to the questions of members and others in relation thereto requires the additional clerical assistance which those committees have been accorded in a number of past Congresses, and which, with the natural growth of the business of the House, is even more necessary, it seems to your committee, at this time. We therefore recommend the adoption of the accompanying resolution.

House resolution 93.

Resolved, That the chairmen of the Committees on Military Affairs and Naval Affairs be, and are hereby, authorized to appoint an assistant clerk to each of said committees, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House at the rate of $6 per day for each clerk during the sessions of the Fifty-seventh Congress.

Mr. UNDERWOOD addressed the Chair.

Mr. LOUD. I desire to retain the floor; but I will yield to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD].

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Do I understand the gentleman from California that this resolution comes here as a privileged resolution from the Committee on Accounts?

Mr. LOUD. It does.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Then I would like to ask the gentleman whether the Committee on Accounts did not some time ago bring in a resolution reorganizing entirely the matter of committee clerks in this House and allowing the chairmen of committees to appoint their individual clerks, the same as other members of the House have the right to do, and then to dispense with the additional committee clerks?

Mr. LOUD. Oh, yes; and I will say that the committee did hope to so reorganize finally the matter of clerkships that this pressure would cease, but I suppose the pressure will go on long after the gentleman and I have been laid in our graves, and it has become so great that it is almost impossible to resist it.

In this case, however, the committee having charge of the legislative appropriation bill provided for these clerks, the provision to take effect after the last day of next June. Therefore, in view of the fact that the House had acted on this question, we thought it just to provide——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I should like to ask the gentleman whether it is proposed not only to give these committees the regular session clerks that have been allowed heretofore, but, in addition, to give the same clerical force that we had last year?

Mr. LOUD. That is just what we now propose, and it is just what this House resolved to do, so far as we have the power, in its action on the legislative bill, and I have no doubt that the Senate will concur in our action. This resolution merely carries out what this House resolved upon in the consideration of the legislative bill last week.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. As I understand the gentleman, the only reason for adopting this resolution is that the "pressure" from the committees of the House is so great that it can not be resisted.

Mr. LOUD. I do not know that I would put the matter in quite so plain language, but I will say the House provided that after June 30 these additional clerks should be allowed. Personally, I have been opposed to all these provisions, but the House having adopted a provision of this kind to take effect after the 30th of June, I would favor making it operate from the present time.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Does the gentleman think it is necessary that there should be appointed both the individual clerks of the chairmen of these committees and also these additional clerks, being more than the committees had in the last Congress?

Mr. LOUD. Representing the Committee on Accounts, I will say that evidently the committee came to that conclusion, or they would not have reported this resolution.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I am asking the gentleman for his own view on the question.

Mr. LOUD. Well, at this time I should dislike to express an opinion, after the House has disposed of the question. We can endeavor to stop what may be undertaken in the future, but we can not stop what has passed.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, representing in part the minority of the Committee on Accounts, I voted for this resolution in the committee and shall vote for it in the House. The reasons which actuated me to vote for it in the committee and which will impel me to vote for it in the House I shall state briefly.

The Committee on Accounts have endeavored, by the resolutions heretofore adopted in regard to giving clerks to chairmen of committees, to put these gentlemen, so far as their personal clerks are concerned during the session, upon the same plane with other members of the House who are not chairmen of committees. We found that under the resolution as originally adopted, allowing personal clerks to members of this House, the members of the House who were chairmen of committees, with annual clerks, were not paid during the session of Congress anything for clerk hire. They were therefore compelled to pay out of their private funds considerable sums of money during the session in order to have their individual business or correspondence as Representatives of their districts attended to.

We also found that the time of the clerks of committees was taken up with the business of the committees, and that in this way an unnecessary and an unjust burden was placed upon these gentlemen who are chairmen of committees by requiring them to pay out of their own pockets expenses necessarily incurred for attending to their individual business as members of the House. The other members of the House—members who are not chairmen of committees—are allowed by law a certain sum per month for clerk hire, but this has not been allowed heretofore to chairmen of committees during the session of Congress.

Now, for one I have endeavored as far as I can to be economical; but for one I did not think that it was just and right to the chairmen of these committees. In the first part of the session the Committee on Accounts reported a resolution in which we assigned to the gentlemen who were the chairmen of committees $100 a month each, appropriated out of the contingent fund, for their personal clerks. Now, the Committee on Military Affairs, the Committee on Naval Affairs, and the Committee on the Judiciary have come before this Committee on Accounts—both minority members and majority members—and have stated to us that it is absolutely necessary, not for the convenience of the chairmen, or anything of that sort, but necessary for the public business, that these assistant clerks should be assigned to them.

Now, I take it for granted that these gentlemen—the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, and the chairman of the Judiciary Committee, and the various members of those committees who came before the committee of the House—would not have come before that committee and insisted and urged that these assistant clerks were necessary unless they were needed. And, relying as we are bound to do upon the statement of these gentlemen that assistant clerks to those three great committees of the House are necessary in order to carry out the public business, in order that the chairmen of these committees shall not be subjected to the expense of paying from their own pockets for clerk hire to transact the business of Congress, I have voted for this measure in the committee, and I propose to vote for it in the House.

It is not a wasteful expenditure of money; it is a necessary expenditure of money, in my judgment, in order that the chairmen of these committees may be put on the same footing with the other members of the House here in the matter of clerk hire, in order that they may attend properly to their business as members, and in order that these committees may transact the large amount of business that is before them—public business, not for the individual benefit of the chairmen of those committees, but for the benefit of the members of this House.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL].

Mr. HULL. I think, Mr. Speaker, I will want but two or three minutes. I shall confine what I have to say to the matter of the Committee on Military Affairs. We have over 2,000 bills now before that committee, and while the greater number of them are personal and private bills, still they necessitate the constant attention of one clerk to properly record them and to answer questions of members in regard to what subcommittee a bill is before. I want to say to this House that never, since I have been chairman, have I had any benefit from the clerkships provided under the rule for the ordinary correspondence of members. It is absolutely impossible for the Committee on Military Affairs to transact its business in a manner satisfactory to the members of this House unless an extra clerk is provided.

Under the rule giving me an extra clerk as my own, I took him from his desk for one day, but was compelled to let him go back to the work that he had been doing, which was recording bills and assigning them to subcommittees, answering questions of members, referring bills to the War Department, and taking care of papers, so that every member could come there and find out where his bills were, what their condition was, and what papers were necessary; and if any member of the House will go into the room of the Committee on Military Affairs at any time of the day he will find other members of this House there asking questions of this extra clerk. It is necessary for your business, gentlemen, that at least this committee have an extra clerk.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN].

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, all I have to say in regard to this proposition to allow the Committee on Military Affairs an extra clerk is this, that not a day goes by without half a dozen to a dozen members of this House interviewing me personally and urging me to give attention to bills which they have before the Committee on Military Affairs. Now, if so many of them come to me, it is reasonable to suppose that many more go to the majority members of that committee, who unquestionably have more influence and more power in bringing out reports upon their bills. As the chairman of the committee [Mr. HULL] has stated, there are about 2,000 bills before that committee, and the members who have sent bills to that committee seem to possess unusual zeal in the prosecution of those bills to a report at least. This morning one of the subcommittees of which I happen to be a member has spent about two hours in digging bills out of the respective boxes in which they have been placed and going over the records, with a view to trying to make a report to gratify members who are pressing upon them for that purpose, and it is impossible for us to give the attention required and requested by members unless we have this additional aid.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

JANITOR TO COMMITTEE ON PRINTING.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Accounts, to whom was referred House resolution No. 101, providing for the appointment of a janitor for the room of the Committee on Printing, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House, at the rate of $60 per month, during the present Congress, have had the same under consideration, and recommend its adoption, with an amendment.

Twenty-three committees of the House are provided with janitors by law, who also act as messengers. Your committee are of the opinion that the volume and importance of the work of the Committee on Printing also warrants the granting of janitor and messenger service, as contemplated by the resolution.

The following amendments are recommended:

In line 4, after the word "present," insert the words "session of," so that the employment of a janitor for said committee under this resolution will not extend beyond the present session of Congress.

In line 5, before the word "until," insert the word "or."

So that the resolution as amended will read:

"Resolved, That the chairman of the Committee on Printing is hereby authorized to appoint a janitor to said committee room, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House, at the rate of $60 per month, during the present session of Congress, or until otherwise provided for by law."

Mr. LOUD. I want to state that the legislative appropriation bill also provided for this after the 30th of next June.

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

ASSISTANT CLERK TO COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Accounts, to whom was referred House resolution No. 112, authorizing the appointment of an assistant clerk to the Committee on the Judiciary, said clerk to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House during the sessions of the Fifty-seventh Congress at the rate of $6 per day, have had the same under consideration and recommend its adoption.

This resolution proposes to give to the Committee on the Judiciary the same clerical assistance which it had in the last Congress. The personal clerk allowed the chairman under the resolution adopted January 15, 1902, does not render an assistant clerk to the committee less necessary than formerly.

The work of the Committee on the Judiciary, as shown by its chairman, is voluminous in the consideration of the large number and various kinds of proposed legislation submitted to it affecting the judicial system of the United States, often and almost constantly necessitating, it was stated, work upon the part of the chairman and clerk during evenings and Sunday as well as during the day. The employment of an assistant clerk, who combines a knowledge of the law with stenography, and thus be able to render expert professional service, is thought to be necessary for the proper transaction of the business of this important committee, and your committee therefore recommend the adoption of the accompanying resolution.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint an assistant clerk for said committee during the sessions of the Fifty-seventh Congress, his salary to be paid from the contingent fund of the House at the rate of $6 per day.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Speaker, there should be an amendment. If the amendment is not there I will state that I will offer an amendment, the same as accompanies the other resolution, "until otherwise provided for by law."

The Clerk read as follows:

Add at the end of the resolution "until otherwise provided for by law."

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I would like to ask the gentleman whether this is also carried in the legislative appropriation bill?

Mr. LOUD. I will state, Mr. Speaker, that it is not.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Then I would like to ask the gentleman what is the reason for providing for this additional clerk when the resolution was adopted early in the session, when it was brought in; and I would like to know why, in the interest of economy, it is necessary to give this committee, with their members' private secretary, also an additional clerk?

Mr. LOUD. I will state, Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the committee that the Committee on Accounts evidently came to the conclusion that even after the allowance of the clerk to the chairman of the committee, the same as the gentleman from Alabama has, that there was still such a sufficient amount of work for the Committee on the Judiciary that one clerk was unable to perform it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman this: Of course it is apparent that the Committee on Accounts came to that conclusion, but I would like to find out from the gentleman from California, if I can, some reason which led the Committee on Accounts to reach the conclusion that they have.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Speaker, why I have answered that question of the gentleman—that such representations were made to the Committee on Accounts that they became satisfied that there was such an amount of work for the Committee on the Judiciary that one clerk could not perform the work.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Well, as I now understand it, the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary has a clerk to the committee, and the present private secretary, and, as an addition to that, they ask for an additional clerk. What evidence was there before the committee to show that it was necessary to have an additional clerk, in addition to the two the committee already have?

Mr. LOUD. Now, I can see from the twinkle in the gentleman's eye that he is trying to get the opinion of the gentleman who is presenting this report. The gentleman who does present the report is endeavoring, as far as he can, to represent the committee. I say again that the committee became convinced that there was a demand for this clerk.

Mr. LANHAM. I will state to the gentleman from Alabama that we have the same clerical service that we had on the Committee on the Judiciary last Congress.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Well, of course, the effect of this resolution that we adopted some time ago would give to the chairman of the committee an additional clerk.

Mr. LANHAM. I want to suggest to my friend from Alabama, who served for a long time on the committee, that he is conversant with the amount of work to be done and the clerical assistance necessary. I do not suppose there is a harder-worked committee in the House than the Committee on the Judiciary, or one that has more important measures come before it for consideration, and therefore it does seem to me we ought to have all the clerical assistance we need.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I had the pleasure of serving on that committee with the gentleman from Texas and with a lot of very pleasant associates; but it is because of the fact that I had served on the Committee on the Judiciary for some time that I was convinced that two clerks were amply able to do the work of that committee. But as the Committee on Accounts have come in——

Mr. BARTLETT. I want to interrupt my friend from Alabama to say that the Committee on the Judiciary, under a resolution passed by this House and reported by the Committee on Accounts, has but one clerk.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Oh, well, but we gave them another.

Mr. BARTLETT. And that the clerk that you speak about as a clerk to the committee is the personal clerk to the chairman of the committee.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I understand that fiction thoroughly.

Mr. BARTLETT. It is not a fiction, but a fact.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Heretofore the Committee on the Judiciary, and these other committees, had a committee clerk, and then they had an assistant clerk, who acted as a private secretary to the chairman during the session of Congress. Now, as the law stands, they have a regular clerk, and in addition to the regular clerk they have a private secretary provided for the other members who takes the place of the assistant clerk in acting as the private secretary of the chairman, and in addition to that the Committee on Accounts of the House proposes to give an additional clerk. Well, I have got no objection, but in the interest of economy I would like the matter to go on record.

Mr. BARTLETT. The gentleman will allow me to say that we had an additional telegrapher, that was more of a sinecure than anything else, and the gentleman was very much in favor of that.

Mr. LOUD. I call for a vote.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. LOUD, a motion to reconsider the several votes by which the various resolutions were passed was laid on the table.

MOUNTING OF MAPS.

Mr. HEATWOLE. Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the Committee on Printing to ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota, by direction of the Committee on Printing, calls up the following resolution for consideration, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 117.

Resolved, That the superintendent of the folding room, by and under the direction of the Doorkeeper, be, and he is hereby, directed to mount with rollers and hangers the quota of printed United States maps allotted to Congress for 1900, at a price not to exceed 30 cents each, payment for same to be made upon certified bills approved by the Committee on Accounts.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the resolution? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The resolution was considered, and agreed to.

On motion of Mr. HEATWOLE, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

CIRCUIT COURTS OF APPEAL.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will now call the standing committees of the House.

When the Committee on the Judiciary was called—

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Speaker, I call up in behalf of the Judiciary Committee the bill (H. R. 109) to amend section 7 of "An act to establish circuit courts of appeal and to define and regulate in certain cases the jurisdiction of the courts of the United States, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1891, as amended by act approved February 18, 1895, and further amended by act approved June 6, 1900.

The SPEAKER. Is this by authority of the committee?

Mr. RAY of New York. By authority of the committee.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York, the chairman of the Judiciary Committee, by authority of that committee, calls up the following bill, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the seventh section of the act entitled "An act to establish circuit courts of appeal and to define and regulate in certain cases the jurisdiction of the courts of the United States, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1891, as amended by act approved February 18, 1895, and again amended by act approved June 6, 1900, be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 7. That where, upon a hearing in equity, in a district court or in a circuit court, or by a judge of a district court or of a circuit court in vacation, an injunction shall be granted or a receiver shall be appointed, or an injunction or receivership shall be continued, refused, or dissolved, or an application to dissolve an injunction or receivership shall be refused by an interlocutory order or decree, whether an appeal in such cases from the final decree would be to the circuit court of appeals or to the Supreme Court, an appeal may be taken from such interlocutory order or decree granting an injunction or appointing a receiver, or continuing, refusing, dissolving, or refusing to dissolve an injunction or receivership, to the circuit court of appeal: Provided, That the appeal must be taken within thirty days from the entry of such order or decree, and it shall take precedence in the appellate court; and the proceedings in other respects in the court below shall not be stayed, unless otherwise ordered by that court or by the appellate court, during the pendency of such appeal: And provided further, That the court below may, in its discretion, require, as a condition of the appeal, an additional bond."

SEC. 2. That this act shall be in force from and after its passage.

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Speaker, I now yield to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. OVERSTREET], who has charge of the bill.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Speaker, the act creating the circuit court of appeals, approved March 3, 1891, contained a provision granting the privilege of appeal to the defendant in an action granting an injunction, but did not accord the privilege of appeal to the plaintiff. This act was first amended by the act of February 18, 1895, in which amendment the privilege was granted to both parties, putting both plaintiff and defendant on a footing of equality in matters of appeal. On June 6, 1900, the original act was again amended by Congress by granting appeals from interlocutory orders in receiverships.

The draftsman of that amendment evidently had before him only the language of the original bill, for the reason that when the act of June 6, 1900, was considered and passed it was in the language of the original act, and not as amended by the act of February, 1895; and consequently that omission deprived the plaintiff of the privilege of appeals in matters of injunctions.

This bill now under consideration corrects that mistake and does no more than place upon an equality both parties in any such suit, and restores the language which was placed in the original bill by the amendment of February 18, 1895.

I may say for the information of the House that this bill, in the identical language it now contains, passed the House at the last Congress, but so late in the session that it was not considered in the Senate. It is recommended by the American Bar Association, and is, as I state, merely to correct what the committee believes to have been a mistake by the draftsman at the time the act of June 6, 1900, was passed.

Mr. BARTLETT. I would like to make a suggestion to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BARTLETT. The gentleman refers to the act of 1900, which contained the right of appeal in cases where a receiver was appointed and an injunction not granted. I want to state that I was the author of that bill that amended the act, and that the change in the bill I drew, whereby the omission was made which the gentleman seeks to correct, was made by a subcommittee of the Judiciary Committee before whom my bill went. The mistake was not in my original draft of the bill referred to that committee.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Very probably the mistake occurred in the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. BARTLETT. The bill as originally drafted and introduced into the House, and which the Judiciary Committee sought to correct, and which this bill will correct, contained the language in the original bill as amended. The mistake, if any, was committed unintentionally by the subcommittee of the Judiciary Committee of the House.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I think the gentleman from Georgia is correct, and this bill is merely to correct that unquestionable mistake.

Mr. PERKINS. As I understand the gentleman, this bill allows an appeal by the plaintiff where a temporary injunction has been dissolved.

Mr. OVERSTREET. It puts both the plaintiff and the defendant on an equal footing on the question of appeal, not only in injunctions but in interlocutory orders in receiverships.

Mr. PERKINS. What provision does it contain to continue temporary injunctions in case of appeal?

Mr. OVERSTREET. It makes no change in that. This bill makes no change or provision with reference to that, and whatever the law is to-day it continues.

Mr. LACEY. What provision does it make in relation to superseding these orders appealed from by appropriate bonds?

Mr. OVERSTREET. My recollection is that the same provision relative to the period within which appeals may be made and the question of bonds are continued the same as existing law. I think I am correct in that. The proviso of this bill states that the appeal may be taken within thirty days from the entrance of such an order and decree and shall take precedence in the appellate court. Proceedings in other respects in the court below shall not be stayed unless ordered by that court or by the appellate court during the pendency of such appeal; and that the appeal must be taken within thirty days from the entry of such order or decree, and it shall take precedence in the appellate court; and the proceedings in other respects in the court below shall not be stayed, unless otherwise ordered by that court or by the appellate court, during the pendency of such appeal.

Mr. LACEY. If there is an order appointing a receiver which has not been executed, or which has been executed, and subsequently an appeal is taken, whether or not a bond could be furnished to supersede that order. Or, an order dissolving an order for the appointing a receiver, whether the dissolution or the vacation of that order could likewise be superseded, and a bond taken in place of the order. Is there any change in the existing law?

Mr. RAY of New York. There is no change in the existing law in that regard, except the bill requires that the appellant shall give adequate additional bond providing for all costs and court damages that may occur to the other party by reason of the granting of the order. The law now makes ample provision in the case of appeal by the party now allowed an appeal for all costs and damages during a suspension of the operation of the order. This act requires an additional bond, in the discretion of the court, because the law as it stands, not having provided for the appeal permitted by this act, made no provision for a bond to take care of the interests of the adverse party pending such an appeal. If the appeal is to be allowed, as provided by the act now under consideration, the party taking it should be required, if the court so orders, to give a bond.

Mr. OVERSTREET. If no gentleman desires to ask a further question, I call for a vote.

The question being taken, the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. OVERSTREET, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

SPANISH-AMERICAN CLAIMS COMMISSION.

Mr. RAY of New York. I call up, by authority of the Committee on the Judiciary the bill (H. R. 8586) amending the act of March 2, 1901, entitled "An act to carry into effect the stipulations of Article VII of the treaty between the United States and Spain concluded on the 10th day of December, 1898."

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 4, chapter 800, page 878, second session Fifty-sixth Congress, is hereby amended by adding thereto the following provision:

"Such rules and mode of procedure shall conform, so far as practicable, to the mode of procedure and practice of the circuit courts of the United States; and the said Commission is hereby vested with the same powers now possessed by the circuit and district courts of the United States to compel the attendance and testimony of parties, claimants, and witnesses, to preserve order, and to punish for contempt; and said Commission shall have power to compel the production of any books or papers deemed material to the consideration of any claim or matter pending therein.

"That the marshal of the United States for the District of Columbia, or his deputies, shall serve all process issued by said Commission, preserve order in the place of sitting, and execute the orders of said Commission.

"That said Commission, or any commissioner appointed by it to take testimony, is hereby authorized to appoint an officer to serve any subpœna or process issued by said Commission or commissioner."

Mr. RAY of New York. I yield the floor to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. JENKINS], who has charge of the bill.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, the bill has been read; and the House seems to be informed as to its object and scope. Unless some gentleman desires to ask some question——

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. I should like to ask a question.

Mr. JENKINS. I yield to the gentleman for that purpose.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. I should like to know the reason for conferring upon this Commission the power to punish for contempt. That struck me, as I heard it read, as a rather extraordinary proposition.

Mr. JENKINS. Well, I will say to the gentleman that the only power that this Commission has at present with respect to matters of this kind is under section 4 of the act creating the Commission, which reads as follows:

That the Commission is empowered to make all necessary or convenient and proper rules and regulations of practice and procedure for the transaction of its business.

That is the only power this Commission has to procure testimony and to preserve order in the court. There is now pending before that court or Commission, whatever you may please to call it, claims amounting to some $75,000,000 which the Commission are expected to examine into, and they are asking now that they be empowered the same as the circuit and district courts of the United States to compel the attendance and testimony of parties, claimants, and witnesses to preserve order and to punish for contempt. They certainly ought to have this power. I might say also that this bill, without any amendment, has been passed by the Senate this morning. The Commission feel at present almost powerless, and have asked the Judiciary Committee to be expeditious in procuring the passage of this bill, so as to assist them in the proper discharge of their duties.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. It may be very proper that this Commission should exercise many of the authorities enumerated in this bill, but it does seem to me extraordinary that it should require a power to punish for contempt, and not only contempt committed in the presence of the Commission, but contempt outside. I should like to ask the gentleman whether the Committee on the Judiciary gave any consideration to that question?

Mr. JENKINS. I will say to the gentleman that the Judiciary Committee gave to this the same attention that they give to all matters coming before them. I do not want the gentleman or the House to understand that anything coming before that committee does not receive all the consideration it is entitled to. This matter was thoroughly considered and the bill unanimously reported from the committee.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. My inquiry is whether the question of giving the Commission power to punish for contempt was specifically considered by the committee?

Mr. JENKINS. I would like to ask the gentleman whether he has any reasons—and if he has I am perfectly willing to yield to him that he may point them out to the House—whether he has any reasons for believing that this Commission should not have power to punish for contempt? This is an important commission.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. I will say to the gentleman that if the extraordinary power to punish for contempt—to imprison a man without the right of trial by jury—is to be given in this case it should only be given upon due consideration, and I do not believe that this part of the bill has received that due consideration. [Applause on the Democratic side.] The power to punish for contempt is a most extraordinary power, and in my opinion it ought not be conferred on anybody except a court of justice.

Mr. JENKINS. The Commission have now the same power, so far as that is concerned, to determine claims that come before them. We are simply proposing by this bill to give them the same powers that the circuit and district courts of the United States have.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. I understand that, but my point is that a commission differs essentially from a court. The power to punish for contempt is an extraordinary power, quite likely to be abused. I do not suggest that it will be abused by the members of this Commission, for whom I entertain the highest respect, but it seems to me that we ought not to confer this extraordinary power upon any commission; and if the gentleman will yield to me I will move to amend by striking out that part of the bill.

Mr. LACEY. May I be allowed a suggestion?

Mr. JENKINS. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, we had this same question up as to courts-martial in the last Congress; and we passed a law, not authorizing courts-martial to punish for contempt, but making the disobedience of a summons a punishable offense. We had the same question up the other day in this House in regard to witnesses summoned to appear before receivers and registers of land offices; and in order to meet the question we provided that disobedience to a summons to appear before a register or a receiver of a land office should be a misdemeanor; so that the party offending could be punished upon trial in a court, where he might have all the rights accorded to an individual in a court.

And the same question comes up as to bringing witnesses before committees of the House. I do not believe this Commission is a court, and therefore that power to punish for contempt in the ordinary way could not be lawfully delegated to it.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, if I may be permitted——

Mr. JENKINS. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MOODY.]

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. It seems to me that the suggestion made by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] is a wise one, and I hope the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. JENKINS] will move to recommit this bill and report it with such provisions as have been described by the gentleman from Iowa. Everyone wishes this Commission to be protected in the dignity and order of its proceedings; and it can be done by creating the offense of contempt, which shall be punishable in a court in the ordinary way, and I hope the gentleman, without a motion from anyone else, will move to recommit this bill for the purpose of correcting it in this regard.

Mr. JENKINS. I will say to the gentleman that I have not any such intention at the present time.

I want to say first, Mr. Speaker, that the Commission feel as though they ought to have this power, in view of the fact of the enormous responsibility thrust upon them by this original act. Now, this is not the time or place to receive Democratic applause with reference to punishment for contempt in the absence of a trial by jury. That question is going to be determined at another time and at another place, and I have very decided views with reference to that question, if I can ever be permitted to express them; but, at the same time, I did not think it appropriate, as far as I was concerned, to draw this line upon this Commission. If we are going to take away this power to punish for contempt without trial by jury, it should be taken away entirely and from all of the courts of the United States; but, inasmuch as this bill passed the Senate this morning, I did not feel like yielding for the purpose of having the bill recommitted or to have any amendment made here. I want now, for a moment, to yield the floor to my colleague from New York, the chairman of the committee, who has asked me to do it.

Mr. LACEY. I should like to ask the gentleman one question before he yields the floor.

Mr. JENKINS. I will yield for the purpose of answering the question.

Mr. LACEY. I will ask him if, in his opinion, the power to punish for contempt can be delegated to a mere committee or a commission?

Mr. JENKINS. I have no doubt, I will say to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY], as to the power of Congress to delegate that authority. The wisdom of it may be entirely another question. As I have said, I have very decided views with reference to it and I have openly expressed them, but I do not care to discuss that question now.

Mr. LANHAM. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. Is not the object of this bill to facilitate the Government in getting testimony necessary to protect the interests of the Government?

Mr. JENKINS. I will say to the gentleman from Texas that it is to aid the Government.

Mr. LANHAM. That is what I understood.

Mr. JENKINS. And not to delegate any extraordinary power to that Commission. The question whether the Commission amounts to the dignity of a court is not of any importance here. I want to yield now to the gentleman from New York [Mr. RAY].

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Speaker, I trust we may have order, because this is an important matter. When the proposition to create this Commission was made in the last Congress, and the bill came in from the Committee on War Claims creating this Commission, I opposed the measure strenuously and bitterly, because I believed, as I said before, that these matters aggregating one hundred or more million dollars in claims against this Government ought to go to and be adjudicated by and before one of the courts already established. I believed then, as I believe now, that all these claims ought to have been sent to the Court of Claims for adjudication. I succeeded at first in having that disposition made of the bill, and it was referred back to the Committee on War Claims with instructions to report a bill referring these claims to the Court of Claims.

The Committee on War Claims, I think, with some reluctance obeyed the instruction of the House; but that committee came in in such a half-hearted way that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MOODY] and others, anxious to have this Commission created—and the gentleman from Massachusetts will remember it——

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. The gentleman is quite mistaken about that.

Mr. RAY of New York Do you think I am mistaken?

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. I think so.

Mr. RAY of New York. I think if the gentleman will turn to the RECORD he will find I am correct. If I am incorrect I shall be glad to be corrected; but my recollection is that when it came up again the gentleman from Massachusetts was one of the most strenuous advocates of this Commission. Now I shall apologize humbly and abjectly if I am mistaken; but that is my recollection.

However that may be, the result was that the former instruction of the House was disagreed to, and this Commission was authorized. Now, the interests of the people of this country are at stake. We have here how many millions of claims already?

Mr. JENKINS. Seventy-five millions of dollars of claims.

Mr. RAY of New York. These claims arose largely and almost entirely in the island of Cuba, and out of matters connected with that island and its affairs before the Spanish war. The probabilities are that the most of these claims will be acted upon favorably by that Commission. The Commission finds itself to-day without the power to bring witnesses in behalf of the Government, to give testimony in the interest of the Government, and without power to compel a witness to give evidence or answer questions. These claimants have no difficulty in bringing their witnesses from all quarters of the earth. From Spain, from Cuba, from Porto Rico, and all the adjacent islands and territories they bring their witnesses. They have no difficulty. Now, the Commission desires the power to compel those persons who have knowledge of the facts and who are within the jurisdiction of the Commission to appear and to give testimony.

Now, I ask the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MOODY], as a lawyer, how can this Commission take care of the interests of this Government, how can we produce the evidence, how can we compel the attendance of these witnesses to give evidence in behalf of the Government if that Commission is without power to punish the witness who refuses to appear and give evidence—who refuses to answer when present?

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. In a very simple manner.

Mr. RAY of New York. Will you tell me how?

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. In a very few words.

Mr. RAY of New York. Well, tell me.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. By making it an offense for anyone unwarrantably to refuse to testify before this Commission, or in any way to resist a subpœna, and to punish that offense in the courts having jurisdiction where it is committed.

Mr. JENKINS. Will my friend from Massachusetts yield for a question?

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. Yes.

Mr. JENKINS. How are you going to enforce that order in Cuba? And there is where the witnesses are.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. How are you going to enforce the power to punish for contempt in Cuba?

Mr. JENKINS. The contempt may be committed here, but the witnesses are all in Cuba.

Mr. WHEELER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. RAY of New York. In a moment. Wait until I have answered the question of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MOODY], and then I will listen to you with pleasure. I want to ask my friend from Massachusetts: In the courts of justice of his State, when a witness refuses to appear, refuses to give testimony, refuses to answer, do the parties go without the testimony or may he be punished for contempt? Do they adjourn the suit until a prosecution can be brought in another court to recover damages of the witness because he will not come and answer?

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. I will say to my friend that no commission in Massachusetts, and there are many, have the power to punish for contempt.

Mr. RAY of New York. Take this Commission. You have clothed it with all the powers of a court, with all the dignity of a court, excepting simply you have not given it the power to maintain order during its sessions, nor have you given it any power to produce evidence in behalf of the Government.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman permit me?

Mr. RAY of New York (continuing). Why, you have given it power already to decide millions of dollars of claims against this Government without any power to protect the interests of that Government? Now, there is another question I want to answer which was put by the gentleman from Massachusetts. He asked my colleague on the committee if the Committee on the Judiciary gave consideration to this question of the power to punish for contempt—whether it was wise so to do. The Committee on the Judiciary did consider that question, and there was not a dissenting voice on the committee at that time. It was deemed proper and wise, if we are to have a court, clothed with the dignity of a court, clothed with the power to pronounce a judgment against this Government to the amount of $75,000,000, to clothe it with the power to compel the attendance of witnesses in behalf of the Government of the United States. And I am astonished that a gentleman from the old Commonwealth of Massachusetts, where the courts are empowered to punish for contempt, should raise his voice here against a tribunal of the United States, created by the Congress pursuant to the Constitution, having the power to punish a man if he refuses to appear in court to answer proper questions, or refuses to go upon the witness stand and give his evidence if in court, or refuses to obey a subpœna. It does not interfere with the rights of a citizen; and if it should be true that these gentlemen who now occupy these high positions, appointed to that Commission by the President of the United States and confirmed by the Senate of the United States, will unjustly punish, or if it be true that we can not safely confer upon them this power—the same power that a justice of the peace has, the same power that a county judge has, the same power that all judges and courts have—we better abolish the Commission to-day or as soon as possible and start again. Now I will answer my friend.

Mr. WHEELER. This Commission has an attorney to represent the Government before it.

Mr. RAY of New York. It has assistant attorneys-general, as I think they are called.

Mr. WHEELER. They are lawyers representing the Government.

Mr. RAY of New York. They have assistant attorneys-general authorized by the law.

Mr. WHEELER. These attorneys have the right to take depositions in behalf of the Government, have they not?

Mr. RAY of New York. No; the attorneys do not have that right; but the commissioners appointed by the Commission have.

Mr. WHEELER. The Commissioners have the right to authorize the taking of depositions for the purpose of elucidating questions considered by them?

Mr. RAY of New York. They have the right to go to different points and have the witnesses called before them and take their statements. The trouble is there, that if the witness refuses to appear, or having appeared and being in the presence of the Commission, refuses to answer, the Commission is powerless. We will suppose that the Commissioner or the Commission itself goes right to the man who knows all the facts, and presents itself before him and says here, "Answer this question pertinent to the case," and the witness refuses to answer, refuses to open his mouth, the Commissioners are powerless and the Government is powerless in such a case.

Mr. WHEELER. Let me go along a little further. Any commissioner of the United States has the right to take this proof.

Mr. RAY of New York. There the gentleman is mistaken. The act creating this Commission provides that it shall be taken by the Commission itself or certain commissioners appointed by them.

Mr. WHEELER. And the Commission has no right to call upon United States commissioners to take this proof?

Mr. RAY of New York. You refer, I suppose, to the ordinary United States commissioners. No: the bill does not, if I remember it correctly, give any such authority.

Mr. WHEELER. If the gentleman is correct about that statement, I do not see how there can be any question but this should become law.

Mr. RAY of New York. I do not think there is any question.

Mr. WHEELER. It is very extraordinary that this Commission should not have the power to go to an ordinary United States commissioner and have him take proof in a case pending before the Commission to which the Government is a party.

Mr. RAY of New York. Now, I will state the condition exactly as it is. The Commission, as originally appointed, is authorized to appoint a certain additional number of commissioners to take testimony; but it does not confer any power whatever upon the commissioner or commissioners to compel the witness to appear or to compel him to answer a single question; and it leaves this Government, as I said before, absolutely powerless. This Commission has not the power of a justice of the peace in your town or mine or your county or mine. This Commission has not the power and authority that we have conferred by law upon the United States commissioners all through this land.

Mr. LANHAM. And the appeal for this legislation comes from the officers of the Government and not from the claimants?

Mr. RAY of New York. Why, certainly. Of course this proposed act is objected to by the claimants, those who make these enormous claims against the Government; they do not want it because they see that now the United States is at a great disadvantage.

Having looked up the record, I am pleased to say that I was mistaken in stating that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MOODY] favored the creation of this Commission. He opposed it, and voted against it even after I had "changed my mind"—and I did, under pressure—and spoke and voted for the bill creating the Commission. I again make my apology to the gentleman.

Mr. LESSLER. Does not the report that accompanies the bill show that a similar power has been given to a similar commission?

Mr. RAY of New York. Yes.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I want to ask the gentleman from New York if this confers an authority on the Commission to compel the attendance of witnesses on behalf of the claimants as well as on behalf of the Government?

Mr. RAY of New York. It is in general terms, and I think it will. It ought to; it ought to be fair and equal in its applications.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The thought occurred to me that if the claimants, as matter of fact, do procure the attendance of witnesses, unless the power resides in this tribunal, which I regard as a judicial tribunal—unless the power resides in this tribunal to compel the attendance of witnesses on their part, if their claims are disallowed they will besiege Congress in future years for an allowance of claims disallowed by this Commission, because they will say that the court was not constituted to give them a fair hearing.

Mr. RAY of New York. Of course they would say it was a court that acted on such evidence as was volunteered, and no more, and that as there was no power to get evidence which was necessary to them, that they had not had a full hearing or a fair show.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I think this is a wise measure and one that ought to pass.

Mr. RAY of New York. The Judiciary Committee has given this matter close and careful attention, and it seems to me a commission that has the power to pronounce judgment against the United States of $75,000,000 ought to have the power and right to protect the Government. [Applause.]

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, I want to say to the House that this power that is sought by this bill to be conferred upon the Spanish Claims Commission is identical with the same power conferred on the Alabama court of claims, so called. It is neither more nor less. It does not exceed the powers conferred by law upon the district and circuit courts of the United States. Now, I want to yield ten minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER].

Mr. WHEELER. Before the gentleman from Wisconsin yields, I want to say a word. Some members on this side of the Chamber have an idea in their minds that this Commission has no judicial power. I desire to inquire if the Commission is vested with judicial powers, and that its findings shall have the same effect as the findings of the Court of Claims, and if Congress is expected to appropriate the money for their judgments?

Mr. JENKINS. I so understand it.

Mr. BREAZEALE. I want to ask the gentleman a question. Do I understand him to say that the power herein sought to be conferred on this Commission is similar in scope to that conferred on the Alabama Claims Commission?

Mr. JENKINS. Yes; identically the same. I now yield to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER].

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Indiana by his question touched the kernel of this matter. When upon the War Claims Committee I found that after the civil war there had been a Commission, without court powers, which investigated the various claims against the Government and reported which should be paid.

That Commission, acting only upon such evidence as might be brought before it, and without the power to investigate and try and determine as a court, had operated as a commission to perpetuate claims against the Government, claims which, although refused over and over again in various Congresses, were finally by some more complacent Congress passed.

It had caused millions of dollars of loss to the Government because, while the facts were fresh, it had not caused all cases to be heard and determined. When the bill constituting this Commission came before this House I felt that the one fault in the bill was that it did not expressly make that Commission a court with powers to hear and determine, oyer and terminer, and end each case as to the claimant and as to the Government.

This defect has been felt by the Commission. They are trying to do justice, and therefore to get in all the evidence that any claimant may choose to bring before them, and all the evidence that can be got by the powers of the Government while the matter is fresh and so to determine these claims once and for all so that they will not have to be tried over again. The Commission is not called a court in express language, but its duties and constitution are those of a court. The name is of no importance. The men who sit in England for the trial of criminal cases under a commission of oyer and terminer, and nisi prius, are none the less a court because they are called a commission. What makes a court is the powers given to it, and this bill proposes to give power to issue process, to compel the attendance of parties and witnesses, and then to award by way of final judgment and so to end the matter. Unless this be so this Commission will only serve to perpetuate claims by taking down evidence which can be referred after fifty years when the opportunity to impugn that evidence is gone.

With the powers granted by this bill the Commission will do justice between the Government and the claimant upon the law as upon the facts. It can compel the attendance of parties and the testimony of witnesses, as well as the production of books or papers, and the marshal is required to serve all process issued by the Commission. Thereupon their determination assumes the force of a judgment, being the determination of a public authority upon full hearing in pursuance of law.

Mr. KEHOE. Has anybody thus far refused to produce any books before the Commission or refused to answer any questions?

Mr. PARKER. I know of no power of the Commission to compel the parties to come and abide by the determination of the Commission.

Mr. KEHOE. But has the business of the Commission been interfered with in any way by the refusal of persons to attend, or to produce books or papers, or to answer questions?

Mr. PARKER. I so understand. The report of the Attorney-General will speak more clearly on that point. As I understand, the Commission finds itself in difficulty because it can not compel the complete trial of any particular matter coming before it for determination.

Mr. RAY of New York. It was so represented before the committee by the attorney on behalf of the Government of the United States, who came before us and was given a hearing.

Mr. KEHOE. It was represented that business has been interfered with in this way?

Mr. RAY of New York. Yes, sir; the Commission finds itself embarrassed.

Mr. JENKINS. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. FLEMING], a member of the committee.

Mr. FLEMING. It seems to me that members of the House ought to have no difficulty in accepting this bill in the form in which it is placed before them. Under the laws of the United States a commissioner authorized to try little revenue cases out in the mountains is clothed with sufficient power to punish for contempt in his court—to compel a witness to answer; and it seems to me that if the liberties of American citizens can be intrusted to one man sitting under those circumstances, there certainly can be no danger to those liberties when those powers are intrusted to five judges, sitting in the capital city of the nation.

Mr. LACEY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FLEMING. I will.

Mr. LACEY. The gentleman is aware, is he not, that the commissioner sitting, for instance, in a moonshiner case is an officer of a court and is subject to the orders of the court?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. And is subject to the Constitution and the laws.

Mr. FLEMING. I know that the commissioner sits as a court, and I also know that for all practical purposes this Spanish Claims Commission is sitting as a court, and furthermore that it is sitting as a court in pursuance of the power given to us in the Constitution to grant those powers. That is my answer.

Now, Mr. Speaker, what abuse——

Mr. PERKINS. May I be allowed a question—only for information?

Mr. FLEMING. Certainly.

Mr. PERKINS. I understood from the statement of the chairman of the committee that most of these witnesses are necessarily residents of Cuba, and that therefore it is difficult for the Government to obtain the evidence which in many cases is needed. Now, how can any steps be taken which would be effectual in compelling any such witness to appear before this Commission?

Mr. RAY of New York. Such a witness will not be harmed by this bill.

Mr. PERKINS. I am asking my question only for information.

Mr. FLEMING. I think the gentleman's question is quite pertinent, and I do not believe that this bill, if passed, will cover the case he suggests. But there are a great many other abuses which are being practiced, I understand, in reference to claims, abuses which this bill will correct. Suppose that this Commission has before it a claim for $5,000 in behalf of some citizen of the United States. Suppose that citizen brings forward his testimony and establishes a prima facie case. Suppose that the officers of the Government ascertain that there are some witnesses in this country who, if placed upon the stand and compelled to testify, will break down the prima facie case made out against the Government. Now, at present, the Commission has no power to force those witnesses before it to give testimony to the truth.

Mr. PERKINS. One other question for information. Does the process issued by this Commission for the attendance of witnesses run to any part of the United States?

Mr. FLEMING. I imagine it will do so, for all practical purposes, under this amended bill.

Mr. PARKER. No; I think not.

Mr. FLEMING. Well, I am not sure how far it will go, but I imagine it would go to that extent.

Mr. PARKER. The process of the circuit and districts courts extends only within the State in which it is issued; and this bill proposes to give to the Commission the same power exercised by the circuit and district courts.

Mr. PERKINS. Does the process of this Commission operate only within the District of Columbia?

Mr. PARKER. The Commission does not necessarily sit in the District of Columbia; its powers will operate in any State in which it may be sitting.

Mr. RAY of New York. The Commission may go to any State of the Union—for instance, to Florida—where there are many witnesses; may organize there, and may issue its process, which would run to all parts of Florida.

Mr. PERKINS. But it is now sitting in Washington?

Mr. RAY of New York. It is; and while sitting in Washington its process can not reach into remote parts of the Union—Texas, Oregon, etc.—in order to compel witnesses to come from those points to attend the hearings of the court.

Mr. PERKINS. Process issued in the District of Columbia would only run in the District of Columbia?

Mr. RAY of New York. Yes; but the Commission may sit in any of the States.

Mr. FLEMING. My answer made a moment ago was, I think, entirely correct. This bill will give this Commission power to obtain the testimony of any witness in the United States. The place where the witness will be summoned to give his testimony will be within the jurisdiction of the circuit court within which he is residing. That is my answer to it. My first answer I consider was entirely correct.

Now, Mr. Speaker, let us assume this sort of a case—and I call it to the attention of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MOODY]: Suppose a case is on trial before this Commission, and the officers of the Government ascertain that certain witnesses in any State of the Union are in possession of evidence or information which if placed on record as testimony will break down the case that has been made against the Government. This Commission summons one of those witnesses, and I will suppose that that witness comes into the room where he has been summoned to testify, and has taken his oath. Now, suppose he refuses to answer the questions propounded. Shall the whole machinery of the Government be stopped?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. JENKINS. I yield the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. FLEMING] two minutes more.

Mr. FLEMING. I say, Shall the whole machinery of the Government be stopped until, as suggested by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MOODY], a Federal grand jury can be summoned and the witness indicted for violating a law of the United States and then tried and convicted? And even then, perhaps, you would never get the testimony out of him, if he is willing to stand the punishment. Now, Mr. Speaker, that is all there is to it. I think this is a wise, a conservative, a proper, and, I may add, a necessary provision for the proper performance of the duties of this court Commission. There are five judges, I believe, are there not?

Mr. JENKINS. Yes; five.

Mr. FLEMING. And if, as I suggested in the first instance, a United States commissioner can sit up in the mountains in internal-revenue cases and punish for contempt a witness who appears before his court, and if the liberties of American citizens are not endangered by that, surely we are not running any great risk when we allow five well-trained lawyers, lawyers who are selected for their probity and for their skill and ability, constituting a court or a commission, here in the city of Washington, to exercise the same powers.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MOODY].

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, there is no reason whatever for confusing the issue which I raised by the question which I propounded to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. JENKINS]. This Commission ought to be clothed with suitable powers to do their work. I have no disposition to deny them any constitutional powers which will enable them to do their duty properly and protect the interests both of the claimants and of the United States. The only criticism which I made upon the bill was directed against that part of it which confers upon the Commission the right to punish for contempt; that is, the right to punish people for acts committed within or without their presence, and without the trial guaranteed by the Constitution. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. FLEMING] asks me if I would not be willing to grant that power to five as distinguished gentlemen as those who compose that Commission.

Mr. Speaker, in answer to that I will say that I would not grant the right to imprison any citizen of the United States without a trial according to law to any five gentlemen of the United States, no matter how distinguished, at least unless they are acting under the responsibilities of judicial power. There is a way to provide for this. It is by following the suggestion of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY]. It is a familiar suggestion to my mind, because commissions in city governments are enabled to perform their duties of investigation in precisely the manner indicated by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY]; but it is suggested that this Commission is a court and ought to have the powers belonging to a court. I deny it. It is not a court. It can not be a court under the provisions of the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. RAY of New York. May I ask the gentleman why not?

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. Because the members do not have a tenure of their office during good behavior. There is no doubt about it.

Mr. RAY of New York. Has my friend read that provision of the Constitution which says that the Congress of the United States may establish tribunals inferior to the Supreme Court? And whenever it establishes a tribunal with judicial powers, as we have done here, it becomes a court. It may have greater jurisdiction or lesser jurisdiction.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. The gentleman does not display his usual accuracy.

Mr. RAY of New York. The nature of it is determined by the functions it performs and not by the name you give it.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, let me call to the gentleman's mind the provision of the Constitution of the United States.

ART. III. The judicial power of the United States shall be vested in one Supreme Court and in such inferior courts as Congress may from time to time ordain and establish. The judges, both of the Supreme and inferior courts, shall hold their offices during good behavior.

Mr. RAY of New York. Well, now——

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. Let me finish about this, and then I will yield.

Mr. Speaker, all of us remember the case that arose in Florida, the name of which escapes me for the moment. I know the occupant of the chair remembers it. I know the gentleman from New York must remember it. It was Insurance Company v. Canter. It arose with reference to the courts that were constituted by Congress in Florida. These judges were not holding a tenure during life. The point was made that they were not constitutional courts and had not the right to exercise the judicial power of the United States.

Mr. RAY of New York. Right there——

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. Let me finish my sentence.

Mr. RAY of New York. I should think you would not want to hear what I have to say.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. Let me finish my sentence. The Supreme Court held that those courts were lawful courts, because they were not the courts of the United States which were mentioned in the article of the Constitution to which I have referred. They were not constitutional courts, but were legislative courts. Does the gentleman suggest that within the United States, where that provision of the Constitution is unquestionably binding, courts can be constituted except upon the condition that the judges shall hold their positions during good behavior?

Mr. RAY of New York. The Congress of the United States have established courts in all the Territories of the United States, and we have vested them with judicial power, and they are the only courts that we have in the Territories, and in every single instance we have provided by law a certain tenure of office which is less than life—most of them four years, and some of them other terms.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. I quite agree.

Mr. RAY of New York. Does my friend from Massachusetts claim that they are not courts, that they are not judges, that they do not have judicial power?

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. I do not. I agree that they have judicial power, but it is not the judicial power of the United States that is mentioned in the Constitution.

Mr. RAY of New York. What judicial power is it, when Congress gives it?

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. It is the judicial power which is exercised by the authority of Congress, in that provision which gives Congress the right to make needful rules for the disposition of the territory and other property of the United States.

Mr. RAY of New York. They have inherent power, the Supreme Court of the United States holds, to punish for contempt.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. There is nothing that I have said in the slightest contradictory or contrary to that.

Mr. RAY of New York. You say that the inferior tribunals of the Territories are not courts.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. I did not. I will not be misrepresented by the gentleman, or misunderstood.

Mr. RAY of New York. Wait one minute. Did you not say this: That these Territorial courts do not have the judicial power that is spoken of in the Constitution?

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. I did.

Mr. RAY of New York. You claim they do not?

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. I do.

Mr. RAY of New York. Where do they get their power to punish for contempt? There is nothing in the acts of Congress creating them, as I remember, that gives any such power. It has been held over and over again that they do have it. Where do they get it? Tell me that.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. Congress, as I have already said, is given this power to constitute the courts of the Territories under a provision of the Constitution which I am trying to find, and will in a moment; but as I am not able to find it at present, it is one with which we are all familiar.

Mr. GROW. Section 8, I guess.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. It is the provision which gives to Congress the power to dispose of and make rules and regulations respecting the Territory and other property of the United States. I think I quote it with substantial accuracy. It is an extra constitutional power, and it has been held by the Supreme Court of the United States that that power is exercised outside of the limits and restrictions of the Constitution.

Mr. PARKER. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. Certainly.

Mr. PARKER. Are not these commissioners appointed for good behavior? It seems to me that they are under the act. The act constitutes, in my judgment, a special court, which only lasts for two years, but any commissioner appointed by that court holds for good behavior.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. It had not occurred to me that such was the case.

Mr. PARKER. Have you looked at the terms of the act recently?

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. I have not.

Mr. PARKER. I would just like to quote it:

The President shall appoint, with the advice and consent of the Senate, five suitable persons, learned in the law, who shall constitute a commission, whose duty and jurisdiction shall be to receive, examine, and adjudicate all claims.

Stating what they are, the Spanish claims.

It shall adjudicate said claims according to the merits of the several cases on principles of equity and international law.

It then provides that attorneys-general shall practice before them.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. I hope the gentleman will not read any more.

Mr. PARKER. I will not read at all; it is long act. It makes an award which is to be final, except in cases of appeal or submission to the Supreme Court, and that the powers and jurisdiction granted to the Commission shall last only for two years, with the provision of its continuation for six months. That seems to me to constitute a temporary court, of which the members hold during good behavior, but only during the term of the existence of the court.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, it does not seem to me, with all due deference to the gentleman from New Jersey, that gentlemen who hold their offices for two years and six months hold them for good behavior in the meaning of the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. RAY of New York. Now, allow me to call the gentleman's attention to a clause of the Constitution that he has evidently forgotten, although he has doubtless read it a hundred times. It is that section of the Constitution that defines the express power of Congress and, among other things, contains this provision: "To constitute tribunals inferior to the Supreme Court." It is under that provision that our Territorial courts are organized. They are tribunals inferior to the Supreme Court, and the Supreme Court of the United States has always so held.

Mr. JENKINS. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BELLAMY].

Mr. BELLAMY. Mr. Speaker, this tribunal, known as the Spanish Claims Commission, is for all practical purposes a court, and has the same jurisdiction, except as to the question of contempt, of all Spanish war claims, as I understand it, as the Court of Claims has on ordinary claims committed to its jurisdiction by law. Now, Mr. Speaker, I think it ought to have conferred upon it the power to punish for contempt; and it would be far more preferable to the power of punishing a witness who fails to attend by indictment. A few days ago when we had under discussion in this body the Lacey land bill, you may call it, with due respect to that gentleman and that committee, I thought the power then conferred to indict for a misdemeanor witnesses who failed to attend that tribunal was a great outrage. You can conceive a case where a witness living 600 or 700 miles from the tribunal, and who, by reason of sickness or any other good cause, fails to attend; if you make him indictable for a misdemeanor in a United States district court you are involving him in an enormous expense which ought not to be entailed upon him if he is innocent of willful disobedience to the subpœna.

It is not reasonable to suppose that the five able and honest lawyers who constitute the Spanish Claims Commission will abuse their power to punish for contempt any more than it would be to presume that the power in this respect of any of the United States judges would be abused.

The right to punish for contempt for willful and contemptuous disobedience of a subpœna is one that every court should possess, because its proceedings would be hampered very much, if not in many cases altogether interrupted, unless this power is conferred.

Let us presume that our judges are honest, and this presumption is well founded by the century's experience with our judicial system.

Anyone that has any practice in the United States courts knows that the defendant in an indictment is never allowed his witness fees unless, under certain circumstances, he invokes the power of the courts to summon them beforehand. He gets an order from the district judge, on account of his poverty, to procure their attendance. I say that a witness who resides 600 miles away and is compelled to attend, and who has a good case, if he be indicted, is required to go before that tribunal, summon his witnesses, and take them there, and even if he is declared innocent of any willful violation of the order of the court, can only be absolved by the payment of several hundred dollars; whereas if the power of contempt is conferred on the tribunal, that individual can be attached for contempt, and if he purges himself of the contempt by affidavit the courts will excuse him. I say, therefore, that as a practical matter it is better for the interest of the citizen to confer on the court the power to punish for contempt than to make it indictable in the courts of the United States.

Mr. CLARK. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. BELLAMY. Very well.

Mr. CLARK. Does the gentleman think that because we passed a bad bill the other day that that is a justification to extend the power of punishing for contempt in this matter?

Mr. BELLAMY. Certainly not; but I say that the power to punish for contempt is preferable to making the witness indictable for the same offense, when the indictment is attended with so much cost to the witness, even if he be innocent of a willful violation of the court's order.

Mr. OLMSTED. Does the gentleman recollect whether the Interstate Commerce Commission has the power to punish for contempt?

Mr. BELLAMY. It has not; but I think it ought to be conferred upon it.

Mr. OLMSTED. But it has the power to certify the matter to the district court of the United States.

Mr. BELLAMY. I think so.

Mr. OLMSTED. Does not the gentleman think that would be the proper power to confer upon this Commission?

Mr. BELLAMY. No; I think it would be better for the witness to have the privilege of purging himself by an affidavit than to have him indicted and brought into court.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Iowa, and at the close of his remarks I will demand the previous question.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I am in hearty sympathy with the purpose of this bill, and think there ought to be a provision by which the Commission can secure the attendance of witnesses. The Interstate Commerce Commission is charged with duties more responsible and more important, the registers and receivers in the land offices in the course of years try cases of more value than this Commission will try, large as it is, and courts-martial also ought to have the same authority to bring witnesses before them. This question is one of method.

Why should gentlemen insist on adopting a method which is unconstitutional? Why do they insist on enacting a provision of law under which, if they attempt to arrest a witness, the court would discharge him on habeas corpus? The Interstate Commerce Commission had the same difficulty, and it was answered by an act of Congress passed in 1893:

Any person who shall neglect or refuse to attend and testify, or to answer any lawful inquiry, or to produce books, papers, tariffs, contracts, agreements, and documents, if in his power to do so, in obedience to the subpœna or lawful requirement of the Commission shall be guilty of an offense, and upon conviction thereof by a court of competent jurisdiction shall be punished by fine not less than $100, nor more than $5,000, or by imprisonment for not more than one year, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

Now, I am loath to object to anything that the Judiciary Committee reports—a committee as distinguished and able as it is. I should hesitate to criticise the provision in the bill, but this is a matter that I have had occasion to investigate at various times for the last twelve years, and during that time I have been endeavoring to secure legislation in regard to obtaining evidence before the registers and receivers in the land offices. The question is, therefore, one to which I have given some thought, and I feel perfectly sure that the provision embraced in this bill would be declared unconstitutional, and that anyone arrested thereunder would be discharged on habeas corpus by any court of competent jurisdiction.

It is perfectly easy to obtain the desired end in a right way. The Interstate Commerce Commission and courts-martial had the same difficulty, and it would be easy to frame a bill on the same lines as applied to them. The Judiciary Committee is composed of lawyers. Yet they can not issue a subpœna to bring a witness before that committee and testify in any proceeding before the committee.

They can send for persons and papers, but if the persons and papers do not come they can not arrest for contempt; and yet that tribunal would be a safe one to vest the power in if the Constitution permitted it. Therefore the statute provides that such witnesses can be punished for misdemeanor for violating the subpœna, and it seems to me where the line is so well marked out by previous legislation there is no reason for departing from it now. The fact that the Commission has asked for it in this form does not justify us in adopting a form which would be invalid. Why not take the method heretofore adopted by Congress in dealing with this question?

Mr. JENKINS. I now ask the previous question on the bill to its passage.

Mr. McCALL. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. JENKINS. Just for a question.

Mr. McCALL. I should like to ask the gentleman from Wisconsin whether this Claims Commission does not have authority to sit within the Territories of the United States?

Mr. JENKINS. I can not answer that question. The act is here, and the gentleman can examine the law.

Mr. McCALL. I mean the Commission as constituted by the original act.

Mr. PARKER. Under the original act I think they have power to sit wherever they please.

Mr. McCALL. Then, I would like to ask whether the authority given to Congress by the Constitution to provide for Territorial courts would in any way apply to this case, and whether, under the original act, judicial powers would not be exercised within what everybody must concede to be the territorial limits of the United States by a tribunal not having the judicial tenure?

Mr. PARKER. This Commission holds its sessions in the city of Washington.

Mr. RAY of New York. The Territorial courts are not courts of the United States in the same sense as are the circuit and district courts.

Mr. THAYER. Will the gentleman from Wisconsin yield to me just a minute?

Mr. JENKINS. I have not the time, or I would gladly yield.

Mr. THAYER. Well, half a minute.

Mr. JENKINS. I have not the time.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Speaker, I believe this question is debatable, and I want to suggest to the gentleman from Wisconsin, if he will allow me——

Mr. JENKINS. I move the previous question on the bill to its passage.

Mr. MAHON. If the gentleman is going to undertake to railroad this bill through the House, he will need a quorum.

Mr. JENKINS. If the gentleman wants to filibuster, let him do so.

Mr. MAHON. You can not cut off members in this way on this bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. OLMSTED). The question is on ordering the previous question.

The question having been put,

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The noes seem to have it.

Mr. JENKINS. I call for a division.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, am I not now entitled to be recognized, the previous question having been refused?

Mr. JENKINS. I have demanded a division.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The House is dividing.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. I beg pardon. I thought the result had been announced.

The question having been taken, there were—ayes 45, noes 48.

Mr. JENKINS. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. I ask unanimous consent to suggest to the gentleman from Wisconsin this proposition: It seems to me we ought not to be consuming time——

Mr. RAY of New York. I rise to a point of order. The yeas and nays have been ordered, and argument or debate is now out of order.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. Very well.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 131, nays 78, answered "present" 9, not voting 138; as follows:

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts moves to recommit the bill, with an instruction, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 2, line 1, strike out the words "and to punish for contempt."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts to recommit, with the instructions reported by the Clerk.

The motion was rejected.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question now is on the passage of the bill.

The bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. JENKINS, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

TRANSFER OF CARROLL COUNTY, GA.

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Speaker, I now call up the bill (H. R. 10780) to transfer the county of Carroll from the northwestern division of the northern district of Georgia back to the northern district of Georgia of the United States district and circuit courts, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Georgia calls up a bill, which the Clerk will report.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the county of Carroll, in the State of Georgia, be, and is hereby, transferred from the northwestern division of the northern district of Georgia to the northern district of Georgia of the United States district and circuit courts; and that all subpœnas, summonses, and other processes heretofore issued returnable at Rome, Ga., be held good returnable at Atlanta, Ga.

The following amendments, recommended by the committee, were read:

That section 1 be amended by striking out the word "back" after the word "Georgia," line 5.

That the following words in lines 6 to 9 be stricken out, to wit: "and that all subpœnas, summonses, and other processes heretofore issued returnable at Rome, Ga., be held good and returnable at Atlanta, Ga." and that the following words be substituted in their stead, to wit: "but this transfer shall not affect any suit or legal proceeding begun prior to the passage of this act."

Mr. RAY of New York. I desire to yield to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. FLEMING], who is a member of the committee and has charge of the bill.

Mr. FLEMING. Mr. Speaker, this is simply a bill to transfer one county in the State of Georgia, in the northwestern division of the northern district, back into the northern district.

Two years ago a bill was passed creating a separate division, and the county of Carroll was placed in the northwestern division. Since then it has been ascertained that that was against the wishes of the members of the bar and, I may say, of the people of the county. The northwestern division had its business attended to at the city of Rome. The northern division had its business attended to in the city of Atlanta, and the members of the bar of the county of Carroll are unanimously in favor of attending at Atlanta instead of at Rome. The judge, I understand, is also favorable to the change, or raises no objection. The bill was introduced by my colleague, Mr. ADAMSON, who lives in the county of Carroll. My colleague, Mr. MADDOX, who was the author of the bill passed two years ago, has authorized me to say that he raises no objection to the transfer as far as he is concerned. So I hope that the bill will be passed with the amendment unanimously reported from the committee. The amendment is simply to allow all cases that have heretofore been filed in the northwestern division to be completed in that division.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

By unanimous consent, the title of the bill was amended so as to read:

A bill to transfer the county of Carroll from the northwestern division of the northern district of Georgia to the northern district of Georgia of the United States district and circuit courts, and for other purposes.

On motion of Mr. FLEMING, a motion to reconsider, the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

WHITE RIVER RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. JOY (when the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce was called). Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, by direction of the committee, the bill S. 650.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 650) granting to the White River Railway Company the right to construct, maintain, and operate a single-track railway across the lands of the United States in the south half of the southwest quarter of section 22, township 14 north, range 8 west of the fifth principal meridian, in the county of Independence, in the State of Arkansas, reserved for use in connection with the construction of Lock No. 3, Upper White River, Arkansas.

Be it enacted, etc., That the White River Railway Company, a corporation created and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Arkansas, its successors and assigns, be, and they are hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a single-track railway over and across the lands of the United States in the south half of the southwest quarter of section 22, township 14 north, range 8 west of the fifth principal meridian, in the county of Independence, in the State of Arkansas, reserved for use in connection with the construction of Lock No. 3, Upper White River, Arkansas, said railway to be constructed, maintained, and operated upon the following terms and conditions, to wit: The railway track so authorized shall be carried across the above-described land on a trestle affording not less than 13 feet longitudinal clearance between bents, the cap timbers of said trestle to be not over 12 feet in length, and the batter of the inclined posts not to exceed 3 inches horizontal distance to 1 foot vertical distance. Said White River Railway Company, its successors and assigns, shall build and maintain, at their own expense, at some near-by point, a siding or spur track from which the United States can receive and forward freight, either in carload lots or less than carload lots. Said railway company shall, during the time of the construction of the lock and dam, establish Lock No. 3 as a flag station for all trains carrying passengers. Said White River Railway Company shall not use the river banks within a distance of 150 feet above and below the limits of the lock walls of said Lock No. 3 as a place for depositing spoil and waste, except under such conditions as may be approved by the United States engineer officer in charge of the improvements of Upper White River, Arkansas.

SEC. 2. That there is hereby specially reserved to the United States the right to erect chutes or other structures over and under said trestle, and in such manner as not to interfere with the movement of trains; to load or unload cars while on the main track of said railway in the vicinity of Lock No. 3, provided regularly scheduled trains shall not be thereby delayed; and to build temporary warehouses and other structures, not only along the said railway trestle, but also along the railway track adjacent to said reservation for said Lock No. 3, on each side thereof, and as close thereto as can be done without interfering with the safe movement and operation of trains, and the said White River Railway Company shall permit the United States to enter upon its right of way adjacent to the Government reserve for the purpose of so doing: Provided, That the United States, in exercising its right to excavate under the aforesaid trestle, will not be responsible to the said railway company, its employees, passengers, patrons, or the public for any delay or injury caused by said excavation.

SEC. 3. That all work done by said White River Railway Company under this act shall be subject at all times, during and after its completion, to the approval of the Secretary of War, and shall be done under the supervision of the engineer officer of the United States Army in charge of the improvement of Upper White River, Arkansas.

SEC. 4. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

Mr. CORLISS. Mr. Speaker, the right to construct cable lines is a public utility or franchise held by the people. Its control is an inherent right of the nation. No one has a right to lay a cable without permission of Congress.

There is no law in existence under which cable lines may be laid. Congress, by a special act in 1867 (15 Stat., 10), authorized the American Atlantic Cable Company to lay, land, and operate cable lines on the Atlantic coast, except the coast of Florida, expressly reserving the right to alter, amend, or repeal the permission granted. The reservation of the Florida coast in the foregoing act was in consequence of the act of May 5, 1866 (14 Stat., 44), authorizing a cable from the coast of Florida to the West Indies.

While these acts confer privileges to the companies named, they contain no provision of a general character upon the subject. No general legislation of any character has since been had covering the subject-matter. The act of July 24, 1866, entitled "An act to aid in the construction of telegraphic lines, etc." (14 Stat., 221), authorizes any telegraph company, under certain conditions, to construct, maintain, and operate lines of telegraph in the United States. This act applies to the interior land telegraphic lines in the United States, and not to submarine cable lines of communication between the United States and foreign lands or islands in the ocean. This act has been examined and its scope determined by an opinion of the Department of Justice, written by Hon. George H. Williams, in which he held:

That telegraphic lines connecting the United States with other countries are a subject which properly falls under the regulating power of Congress, I entertain no doubt. Yet Congress has provided no general regulations concerning it. The act of July 24, 1866, entitled "An act to aid in the construction of telegraphic lines," etc. (14 Stat., 221), authorizes any telegraph company, under certain conditions, to construct, maintain, and operate lines of telegraph over and across the navigable streams or waters of the United States; but it is manifest that this act was intended to apply simply to interior lines of telegraph designed for communication between points within the United States, and not to exterior oceanic lines.

But we are not limited in the consideration of this subject to the opinion of the Department of Justice. In the joint resolution providing for the annexation of the Hawaiian Islands to the United States (vol. 30, U. S., p. 750) Congress expressly reserved to itself the right to control the public domain in the following language:

The existing laws of the United States relative to public lands shall not apply to such lands in the Hawaiian Islands, but Congress shall enact special laws for their management and disposition. * * *

In the insular cases, particularly the case of Downs v. Bidwell (182 U. S., 379), Justice Brown, announcing the opinion of the court after an extensive inquiry into the action of Congress respecting the various Territories from time to time acquired, says (pp. 278, 279):

The practical interpretation put by Congress upon the Constitution has been long continued and uniform to the effect that the Constitution is applicable to territories acquired by purchase or conquest only when and so far as Congress shall direct. * * *

Congress has assumed to control the construction and operation of cable lines in Alaska, and has authorized the Secretary of War to establish commercial business over such lines. It is important to note that in this act it was expressly provided—

That no telegraph or cable lines owned or operated or controlled by persons not citizens of the United States or by any foreign corporation or government shall be established in or permitted to enter Alaska.

Is is not far more important for the maintenance of peace and the welfare of our people to control cable communication with Hawaii, Philippine, and other islands in the Pacific?

POWER OF THE EXECUTIVE.

The right to lay ocean cables and control conditions under which they may be landed and operated is held exclusively by Congress. The Executive is not in my judgment authorized by the Constitution or laws to permit the establishment of cable lines. The precedents established by the acts of our Presidents justify my position. It is true cable lines have been laid under conditions established by President Grant, but never with the authority of the President. In order to prevent the establishment of an offensive cable monopoly, President Grant threatened to employ the Army and Navy to resist the landing of the French cable in 1869. He compelled the company to agree to certain conditions for the protection of our Government and people before he would withhold his resistence to the landing of the cable. He did not assume the power to grant permission to lay the cable, but submitted to Congress a communication fully covering the subject-matter in the following language:

I present this subject to the earnest consideration of Congress. In the meantime, and unless Congress otherwise direct, I shall not oppose the landing of any telegraphic cable which complies with and assents to the points above enumerated, but will feel it my duty to prevent the landing of any which does not conform to the first and second points as stated, and which will not stipulate to concede to this Government the precedence in the transmission of its official messages, and will not enter into a satisfactory arrangement with regard to its charges.

It will be observed that President Grant rested his authority solely upon his power to prevent the landing of the cable, which was deemed inimical to the interests of our Government and people; but the right to prevent the landing of the cable did not carry with it the right to grant permission to lay, nor did he or any subsequent President ever assume such authority.

Hon. W. Q. Gresham, one of the ablest jurists of our country, while holding the office of Secretary of State, expressly held that the President had no authority to grant permission for the laying of cables without authority of Congress.

In a communication bearing date August 15, 1893, in reply to an application of a company for the privilege of laying a cable, he held:

There is no Federal legislation conferring authority upon the President to grant such permission, and in the absence of such legislation executive action of the character desired would have no binding force.

This position was in full accord with the opinion of his predecessors, Hon. Hamilton Fish and Hon. James G. Blaine. This position was sustained by Mr. Olney, Attorney-General, one of the ablest jurists that ever had the honor to fill a Cabinet position. In 1895 Mr. Olney held:

There is no Federal statute conferring authority upon the Executive to grant or withhold permission to land cables on the shores of the United States. This Department has, therefore, no power to act in the matter, and I am unable to comply with your request.

But it is contended that the subject has been adjudicated by the decision of Judge Lacombe (77 Fed. Rep., 495) in the case of the United States against the French Cable Company.

A bill was filed to restrain this company from laying a cable connecting Haiti with the United States without the permission of the Government. The case was brought before the court upon an application for a preliminary injunction before the presentation of the facts, and the court justly denied the petition upon three grounds: First, because the cable had already been laid and the facts relied upon in the bill had not been presented to the court; secondly, because the President had power to enforce his decisions without the aid of the court; and thirdly, because Congress was then in session, and if there was any urgent necessity could take immediate action, as it held absolute authority over the subject. In his opinion he stated:

Without the consent of the General Government, no one, alien or native, has any right to establish a physical connection between the shores of this country and that of any foreign nation.

Such consent may be implied as well as expressed, and whether it shall be granted or refused is a political question which, in the absence of Congressional action, would seem to fall within the province of the Executive to decide. It is further thought that the Executive may effectually enforce its decision without the aid of the courts, but even if the defendants are correct in the contention that the Executive has nothing to do with the matter, it is certainly indisputable that Congress has absolute authority over the subject. That body is now in session, and if any urgent necessity should call for immediate action it can settle the question with such definiteness as to leave no further room for argument. Preliminary injunction refused.

It is important to know that the defendant in this case was one of the allied companies controlled by the Commercial Cable Company, now seeking to again steal upon our shores with a cable for the purpose of establishing a foreign cable monopoly, and I desire to call attention to the language of the court, in which he says:

But even if the defendants are correct in the contention that the Executive has nothing to do with the matter, it is certainly indisputable that Congress has absolute authority over the subject.

It is therefore clear, first, that the court did not hold that the Executive had authority, but that the defendant, the Mackay

Company, now seeking to surreptitiously usurp an important public franchise in the Pacific, did contend that the Executive had no authority over such matters.

Hon. John Sherman, while Secretary of State, on May 11, 1897, expressly refused to permit the French Cable Company to lay a supplementary cable between Brest and Cape Cod, Massachusetts, on the ground that the President had no authority to grant permission to lay cables. In his opinion he stated:

The existing cable was laid under permission granted by the President of the United States in 1879, subject to the action of Congress and to certain conditions. Without discussing the question of his authority to grant that permission, I have the honor to inform you that the present Executive does not regard himself as clothed, in the absence of legislative enactment, with the requisite authority to take any action upon the application which you present.

August 23, 1901, John W. Mackay sent a cable from London to the Secretary of State, in which he stated:

I wish to lay and operate submarine cable or cables from California to the Philippine Islands by way of the Hawaiian Islands by means of an American corporation to be organized hereafter. I respectfully write to ascertain the conditions upon which such cable may be landed at the various points under the jurisdiction and control of the United States.

The same conditions that have been prescribed by the United States in connection with the landing of Atlantic cables owned by domestic corporations will be satisfactory to me in connection with this proposed enterprise.

In September, 1901, the Commercial Pacific Cable Company was formed in New York with a capital of $100,000, and a written application for permission to lay this cable was presented to the President. This application was executed by the secretary of the Commercial Pacific Cable Company and certified to the adoption by its board of directors of certain cunningly devised modifications of the conditions imposed upon all Atlantic cable companies. It must be remembered that President Grant and Secretary Blaine, in order to protect our country and people against cable monopolies and cable companies holding exclusive rights and privileges, established conditions and enforced an agreement to comply therewith before they would allow a cable to be landed. They not only compelled a forfeiture by agreement of all combinations and exclusive privileges, but allowed the landing of cables subject to the approval of the conditions imposed by Congress. Let us examine these conditions and compare them with the rascally modifications embraced in the proposal of the Commercial Cable Company.

The best way to expose such villainy is the deadly parallel. Compare them and note the changes printed in italics:

Grant and Blaine conditions under which Atlantic cables were landed.	Commercial Pacific Cable Company petition.
(1) That neither the company, its successors or assigns, nor any cable with which it connects, shall receive from any foreign government exclusive privileges which would prevent the establishment and operation of a cable of an American company in the jurisdiction of such foreign government.	(1) That neither this company, its successors or assigns, nor any cable with which it connects (and over which it exercises control), shall receive from any foreign government exclusive privileges which would prevent the establishment and operation of a cable of an American company in the jurisdiction of such foreign government.
(2) That the company shall not consolidate or amalgamate with any other line or combine therewith for the purpose of regulating rates.	(2) That the company will not consolidate or amalgamate with any other line or combine therewith for the purpose of regulating rates (except to make through rates).

John W. Mackay cabled from London in August, 1901, that—

The same conditions that have been prescribed by the United States in connection with the landing of Atlantic cables owned by domestic corporations will be satisfactory to me.

But when his company was organized and a formal application was made, the exclusive rights and monopoly held by his English ally in whose interest he made the application confronted him, and he was compelled to surreptitiously insert the words to which I have called attention.

Do you wonder that the President refused to act upon this petition?

The officers of the Commercial Company evidently thought their rascally modifications had been so ingeniously devised as not to be discovered, or that the Secretary of State and President were too stupid or indifferent to the public welfare to detect their villainy.

It is well known that Mr. Mackay personally called upon the President and urged approval of this petition. But the President, following the precedents of his predecessors, refused to grant permission and rightly called public attention to the subject in his message to Congress.

What was the next step of this American ally of the English cable monopoly? Baffled in their attempt to deceive the President, and being afraid to submit their application to the public scrutiny of Congress, they employed an ingenious lawyer to find some way to stealthfully lay their cable upon our shores and usurp the cable rights of the Pacific Ocean, and hold for their English ally the cable monoply of the East.

He found the general act of 1866, to which I have referred, relative to telegraph lines in the United States, and on the 12th day of December, 1901, filed with the Postmaster-General an acceptance of this statute, and now boldly declares that he wants no action by Congress.

I have already shown by the decision of the Department of Justice, by the act annexing the Hawaiian Islands, and by the decision of the Supreme Court in the Downs case, that this act does not apply to ocean cables. Still this American ally brazenly assumes the audacity of an English monopolist and proposes to lay, land, and operate the Pacific cable without authority from the Government of the United States, and in direct violation of the conditions imposed by President Grant and Congress upon other cable companies without any limitation as to tariff tolls or control of the cable in time of war, but in combination with the Eastern Extension Cable Company, holding the cable monopoly in the East and claiming exclusive cable rights in Guam and the Philippine Islands under Spanish grants, in direct violation of the two paragraphs referred to in the conditions imposed by President Grant and Secretary Blaine.

Are the members of this House willing to be charged with the disposition of Nero of old and sleep while this American ally usurps the rights of the people and steals the greatest public franchise now held by our country?

When the committee authorized a favorable report upon this measure the cable monopolist, recognizing the weakness of its position, but hoping to overcome the effect of a favorable report and prevent action by Congress, on the 8th day of February, 1902, filed with the Attorney-General a written communication, which will be made a part of the minority report herewith submitted.

This is another subterfuge through which the ingenious cable monopolist hopes to usurp the cable privileges of the Pacific. Let us examine this instrument.

It is a proposal in the shape of a letter, accompanied by a lease of cable privileges to be executed by the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States and signed by the Commercial Pacific Cable Company.

By what authority does the cable company assume to clothe the Secretary of the Treasury with power to make this lease? The acts with reference to Hawaii expressly deny to the Secretary of the Treasury such power. The contract is therefore voidable and of no binding force or effect.

What do they propose for the privilege they ask?

1. To lay a cable to the Philippine Islands via Hawaii on or before January 1, 1905.

Why this delay when it is well known that the cable can be constructed and laid within eighteen months, except it be for the purpose of extending to the English cable monopoly the fabulous profits, now enjoyed by this cable company, for two or three years longer than is necessary.

Why should our army, civil government, and vast interests in the Philippine Islands wait the pleasure of the cable company?

2. To land said cable on American soil only, provided the cable company finds the depth of the ocean satisfactory to enable it to go to Guam instead of the Marshall Islands, owned and controlled by Germany, where, we have justification for saying, it is their purpose to go in the construction of this cable.

It has been claimed—and we would be pleased to have this cable monopolist deny—that Germany offers a subsidy for the construction of this cable so as to connect its Marshall Islands instead of the island of Guam, where our country has a naval station that demands cable communication. The Navy Department has surveyed the route, and declares that an all-American cable can be and should be constructed. The peace of the Pacific Ocean and the supremacy of the American people demand an all-American cable, landed on American soil only, without any conditions whatever.

3. It proposes "not to receive from any foreign government exclusive privileges, which would prevent the establishment and operation of a cable of an American company in the jurisdiction of such foreign government."

Of what value is this proposal when it is known that the Eastern Extension Cable Company holds exclusive rights for cable privileges on the islands of Guam and the Philippines, and its American ally, the Commercial Pacific Cable Company, admits of an understanding between them whereby the chain of communication is to be welded and monopolized across the Pacific Ocean?

4. It proposes "not to consolidate or amalgamate with any other line or combine therewith for the purpose of regulating rates, except to make through rates."

Here we have the ingenious modifications heretofore referred to. How could they combine except with their ally holding these privileges in the East? What greater combination can be possibly desired by any monopolist? The exception gives them all the monopoly desired, and is in express violation of the conditions imposed upon every cable laid across the Atlantic.

I repeat, it remains to be seen whether Congress will, by inaction, permit the rights of the people to be usurped by this American ally of the foreign cable monopoly.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

During the delivery of Mr. CORLISS's remarks,

Mr. BARTLETT said: Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order. I desire to inquire what is before the House, and make the point of order that the gentleman is not discussing the measure before the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. CORLISS. As this is the first manifestation of an effort to get a submarine cable laid at this Congress, I am sorry that an objection should come from the Democratic side.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. We generally discover anything submarine.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would suggest to the gentleman from Michigan that the House is not sitting in Committee of the Whole, and that any debate except directly on the measure before the House is not in order.

Mr. CORLISS. I am aware of that, Mr. Speaker. I ask the indulgence that I may be permitted to address the House for ten minutes upon this important subject, the discussion of which I have commenced.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent to proceed for ten minutes in the discussion of the question upon which he started. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. JOY. I insist upon proceeding with the bill under consideration, Mr. Speaker, and will ask for the reading of the report. It is very short.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I would suggest that the gentleman can state it more briefly than the report.

Mr. JOY. At the request of the gentleman, Mr. Speaker, I will state that this bill is to provide for the laying of a railroad track in Arkansas across a corner of a piece of Government property, it being impracticable to build the railroad through the country unless it crosses this tract. I will also state that the railroad is already built under a revocable license from the War Department, and with the provision that it shall be revoked unless Congress make it a legal structure. This is simply to carry out the license heretofore granted by the War Department under the language of that restriction. The War Department approves the bill with such amendments as were recommended by the Secretary of War, and it passed the Senate two weeks ago.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. It meets with the approval of the committee?

Mr. JOY. It meets with the approval of the committee. I waive the reading of the report.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. JOY, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. JOY. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I rise to move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to consider the bill S. 88. I am authorized by the Committee on War Claims to make that motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering the bill S. 88.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 88) for the relief of parties for property taken from them by military forces of the United States.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee to go into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. HEPBURN. I would like to ask the gentleman if he has authority of the committee?

Mr. SIMS. I have the authority of the Committee on War Claims to make the motion.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. HEPBURN. Division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 46, noes 45.

Mr. HEPBURN. I did not hear the announcement.

The vote was again announced.

Mr. HEPBURN. I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will appoint as tellers the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS].

The House again divided; and tellers reported—ayes 83, noes 57.

So the motion to go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union was agreed to.

PROPERTY TAKEN BY MILITARY FORCES OF THE UNITED STATES.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill S. 88, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Quartermaster-General is directed, under such rules and regulations as may be approved by the Secretary of War, to investigate, or cause to be investigated, the claims of artillery and cavalry officers and private soldiers of the Confederate army for horses, side arms, and baggage alleged to have been taken from them by Federal troops, acting under orders, in violation of the terms of surrender of the Confederate armies, and he shall, subject to the approval of the Secretary of War, issue his voucher to such persons as shall be shown by such investigation to be entitled thereto, which voucher shall be paid out of any money in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

SEC. 2. That no claimant shall be entitled to or receive any voucher as herein provided unless he shall establish to the satisfaction of the Quartermaster-General that he, or the person through or from whom he asserts said claim, was paroled at the time of said surrender; that he had kept his parole in good faith; that he was the actual owner of the horses, side arms, and baggage for which he claims compensation; that such property was taken from him by troops of the United States acting under orders and in violation of the terms of the surrender under which he was paroled. And if the soldier has died since his parole was received, the sum he may be entitled to shall be paid to his wife; if she be dead, then to his children; if he has no wife or child or children living, then to his parents, or either of them if one of them be dead; and no other shall be entitled to receive the same. If he has minor children, the same may be paid to their guardians.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I will use but a few moments on this bill. This is a bill identical in character, and I believe in terms, with a bill that passed both the House and Senate in the last Congress, but failed to reach the President in time to be signed. Briefly stated, it is a bill to pay the officers and men of the soldiers of Lee's and Johnston's armies for private property, consisting of horses, bridles, and saddles, taken from them by the regular officers of the United States after the surrender in violation of the terms of the surrender. It is not a direct appropriation bill, but authorizes the Secretary of War to investigate. It is limited with all the conditions that are set out in the latter part of the bill.

I will not go into details as to the bill. A similar bill was introduced into the House, reported from the Committee on War Claims unanimously. The bill was introduced by my colleague, Mr. PADGETT of Tennessee, who is familiar with the details of the bill, and I yield such time to him as he may need to explain the details of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. How much time does the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIMS. I yield ten minutes.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, early in the session I introduced a bill similar to this bill in the House, and Senator BATE introduced this bill in the Senate. The bills are identical. The bill was referred to the Committee on Claims in the Senate and to the Committee on War Claims in the House. Both committees unanimously reported and recommended the passage of the bill. The Senate has acted upon the bill and passed it and sent it to the House. In order that we may take the matter up and dispose of it at once, we have called up the Senate bill.

The committee in its report gives the order and the terms of the surrender as agreed upon between General Grant and General Lee and General Sherman and Gen. Joseph E. Johnston, by the terms of which it was expressly stipulated and agreed that the soldiers were allowed to retain their side arms and horses.

Mr. GILBERT. I want to make a suggestion to the gentleman.

Mr. PADGETT. I will yield.

Mr. GILBERT. The word "child" or "children" is used here, and I want to ask if it would not be better to use the word "descendants."

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. That would involve sending it back to the Senate.

Mr. PADGETT. This bill was gone over very carefully at the last Congress, in the Senate; it was passed by the House, and in the very terms in which it is offered here. It has been considered very thoroughly by those interested in the matter, and I would not like to endanger the passage of the measure by consenting to an amendment at this time.

Mr. GILBERT. I have no doubt it has been carefully considered, but the English language is sometimes plain. If the soldier has no wife or children living, then it goes to his parents or either of them. If they be dead, no other shall be entitled to receive it. I know an instance where, under the terms of this bill, a grandchild could get nothing. The soldier has no parents and no children, but he has left a grandchild, and under the terms of this bill that grandchild could not get anything. I desire to suggest if it would not be better to make it "descendants."

Mr. PADGETT. If it were an original proposition I might consider it, but the friends of this measure have considered it carefully. It has passed three or four times before the committees, and the friends who have given it consideration do not wish to endanger the passage of the bill at this time.

Mr. GILBERT. I am friendly to the bill, but it occurs to me that there are instances where there are grandchildren who would not receive any part of the funds, although entitled to do so.

Mr. PADGETT. This measure has been examined by its friends without a dissenting vote; passed the Senate without a dissenting vote. It has the indorsement and recommendation of the Senate committee and the House committee upon two hearings at this time. It would be to me a very great pleasure, and it would be to those few Confederate soldiers who will receive the benefits from this legislation, if it should pass this House without a dissenting vote. It would be a practical demonstration of the beautiful sentiments that have been uttered upon other occasions, where prejudice has passed away and where patriotism and a common sympathy and a bond of union has taken the place of prejudice. I do hope and trust that this bill will receive the unanimous vote of this House.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GAINES].

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, this bill is identical with the Senate bill that passed the Senate last year and passed the House. That bill was very closely investigated, and was framed under and by advice of the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. BATE] and senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER].

Mr. Chairman, I need to say but a few words about this matter. Senator SPOONER said this bill "is really a bill of honor"—not simply one of dollars and cents, but "a bill of honor"—and I do myself the honor to read the exact words of that distinguished lawyer and Republican. I will read what he said from the RECORD:

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator permit me? I looked at this bill, and as it came from the House it was an improperly drawn bill. It would amount to a denial of justice to refer it to the Court of Claims. The claims are all small, and I have found in my experience as chairman of the Committee on Claims that the Quartermaster-General's Department has always made very careful and much more satisfactory investigation of such claims than the Court of Claims. This really is a bill of honor, if I may be permitted to say so. It does not assume that there was any violation by the soldiers of the United States Army, acting under orders of the terms of surrender, which authorized officers to take home with them their side arms and their private baggage and their horses, and also authorized private soldiers to do so.

There, Mr. Chairman, we find this distinguished lawyer, Senator, and Republican saying not only that it would be a denial of justice to refer it to the Court of Claims, but he goes further and says:

This really is a bill of honor, if I may be permitted to say so.

But, Mr. Chairman, he is not the only distinguished man who has investigated this question. We find that President McKinley, at Galena, in 1873, when delivering an address upon the birthday of President Grant, used this language:

The liberal terms given to Lee at Appomattox revealed in the breast of the outsider a soft and generous heart. He wanted no vengeance; he had no bitterness in his soul: he had no hates to avenge. He believed in war only as a means of peace. His large, brave, gentle nature made the surrender as easy to his illustrious foe as was possible. He said, with the broadest humanity—

Now, I ask the special attention of the House to this language—

"Take your horses and side arms, all of your personal property and belongings, and go home—not to be disturbed, not to be punished for treason, not to be outcasts; but go cultivate the fields whereon you fought and lost. Yield faithful allegiance to the old flag and restored Union and obey the laws of peace."

Commenting on this, President McKinley said:

Was ever such magnanimity before shown by victor to vanquished? Here closed the great war, and with it the active military career of the great commander.

There, Mr. Chairman, are the terms of surrender dictated by General Grant and repeated by Mr. McKinley in commending the virtues and the kindness of heart of General Grant and his lack of any disposition to humiliate, but rather conciliate, the vanquished; and it is meet and proper for Congress to see that the terms of this surrender are faithfully executed, and this bill is intended to do so—nothing more nor less.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HEPBURN. Will the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] allow me to ask him a question in regard to this bill? Has there been any estimate made of the cost of this proceeding to the Treasury of the United States?

Mr. SIMS. According to the best estimate made in the committee, the amount will be very small. The value of any single horse would not perhaps exceed $100 or $200. According to the best evidence before the committee, we thought the total amount would not exceed $20,000 or $30,000.

Mr. HEPBURN. Are you willing to put a limitation of that character in the bill?

Mr. SIMS. No; because I am not sufficiently acquainted with the case to make any limitation on the amount.

Mr. HEPBURN. Are you willing to double that sum as the amount to be paid under the bill?

Mr. SIMS. I am not able to suggest any limitation, because in attempting to do so I might do injustice; but the method of investigation authorized by the bill is so perfectly clear and specific that no fraud can be practiced; no extraordinary prices could be put upon these horses. The Secretary of War is to determine whether any claim is just and entitled to payment. We know, as a matter of history, that there were not a great many of these horses taken by orders of regularly authorized officers of the United States. These horses were taken chiefly, I believe, at Strawberry Plains, East Tennessee. I can not undertake to state specifically the amount of the claims, but I think it will be small. My colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GIBSON], has investigated the matter more thoroughly than I have, and I shall be glad if he will answer the question of the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Let me quote again the language of Senator SPOONER:

These claims are all small.

That is the identical language of Senator SPOONER after he had investigated the case—investigated not only the bill we are asking to have passed, but investigated the amount of the claims.

Mr. HEPBURN. The amount of the claims taken individually would perhaps be small; the largest would probably be for the value of a single horse. But the question is, How many of them are there? The bill fixes no limitation. It provides for a roving commission consisting of a single officer, who is to go all over the country and take these proofs, and then to issue vouchers, payable at the Treasury of the United States. This is a most extraordinary method of ascertaining the indebtedness of the Government in matters of this kind.

Mr. PADGETT. The report says that these claims will not exceed 450 in number.

Mr. HEPBURN. But the bill does not limit payment to 450. You open the door for possibly 450,000 claims.

Mr. PADGETT. The claims can not reach that amount, because there were not anything like that many horses.

Mr. HEPBURN. Will the gentleman accept an amendment limiting the expenditures under this bill to the amount of the claims now filed? I believe that wherever a soldier or officer has had his horse or his arms taken from him in violation of a parole, he ought to be reimbursed. But I do not like this kind of legislation; it opens too wide a door. I think the gentleman, in order to have this matter pass off pleasantly, had better agree to some limitation, either as to the number of claims filed or as to the gross amount that may be expended.

Mr. PADGETT. There have been no claims at all filed.

Mr. HEPBURN. Well, then, limit it to the number of claims reported by the committee, or double that if you please. I am not particular about the amount. I want every man to be paid, but it does seem to me that this legislation is dangerous. Suppose that a mistake is made by the Secretary of War in the selection of an officer. Suppose he gets the wrong man—a man who is not honest. He issues his vouchers in unlimited quantity, and they become payable at the Treasury.

Now, I am not opposing your bill. I believe its general purpose is right, but I do think that in the interests of economy and fairness, and to prevent frauds against the Treasury, you ought to be willing to consent to some limitation.

Mr. TALBERT. If the gentleman will allow me to make a suggestion——

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. To whom does the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIMS. I yield to the gentleman from South Carolina to make a suggestion.

Mr. TALBERT. My friend is on the right track. He wants to have the right thing done. Would it not be well to say $50,000 or $75,000, if so much be necessary.

Mr. HEPBURN. I will not quarrel with that proposition.

Mr. TALBERT. If so much be necessary.

Mr. SIMS. I want to reply to the gentleman from Iowa. I fully appreciate the good feeling of the gentleman and am satisfied that he has nothing except what is good in view in trying to protect the Treasury; but by the very terms of the bill I do not see how there can be any danger to the Treasury. I will read that part of the bill to the House. It is more explicit than anything I can say:

SEC. 2. That no claimant shall be entitled to or receive any voucher as herein provided unless he shall establish to the satisfaction of the Quartermaster-General that he, or the person through or from whom he asserts said claim, was paroled at the time of said surrender; that he had kept his parole in good faith; that he was the actual owner of the horses, side arms, and baggage for which he claims compensation; that such property was taken from him by troops of the United States acting under orders and in violation of the terms of the surrender under which he was paroled. And if the soldier has died since his parole was received, the sum he may be entitled to shall be paid to his wife; if she be dead, then to his children; if he has no wife or child or children living, then to his parents, or either of them if one of them be dead; and no other shall be entitled to receive the same.

That makes it so specific that anyone who may show himself entitled to anything under this bill should certainly be paid, even if the amount was a million dollars. I have stated to the gentleman that I do not believe proof can be made for exceeding the value of 200 horses. But if it could be, it certainly ought to apply to everyone who can come under the conditions of the bill.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I want to ask the gentleman from Tennessee if he is willing to put in the amendment I suggest, after the word "troops," in line 8 in the first section, to insert the words "after the surrender at Appomattox." I shall insist on that amendment, or I shall not be free to support this bill.

Mr. SIMS. After the surrender at Appomattox?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Yes.

Mr. SIMS. Well, this applies to Lee's and Johnston's armies. They did not both surrender there.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I mean after that surrender.

Mr. SIMS. You mean for horses taken after that surrender, in violation of the terms of surrender?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Yes. You see, the vice in the bill as drawn is this: I know it is capable of construction either way, but its most reasonable construction would be to pay for all the horses taken from Confederate soldiers during the whole of the war, if the final surrender at Appomattox would have entitled them to retain their horses. This will make it entirely plain, by putting after the word "troops" the words "after the surrender at Appomattox."

Mr. SIMS. As I understand the bill, I have no objection to that amendment.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I offer that as an amendment to the bill.

Mr. SIMS. The only trouble about it is that this will take the bill back to the Senate.

Mr. GROSVENOR. It will not cause it to go through a long controversy in the Senate. It will be acquiesced in the very moment it is reported to the Senate.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Tennessee yield for the purpose of allowing the gentleman from Ohio to offer the proposed amendment?

Mr. SIMS. Certainly.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I offer that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert after the word "troops," in line 8, section 1, the words "after the surrender at Appomattox."

The CHAIRMAN. That amendment is now pending.

Mr. SIMS. The gentleman from Ohio understands that Johnston surrendered after that date, did he not?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Yes; he did; quite a number of days afterwards.

Mr. SIMS. I wanted to be sure of that.

Mr. GROSVENOR. And if the gentleman would prefer to have it, instead of saying "after the surrender at Appomattox," I would say "after the 9th day of April, 1865."

Mr. SIMS. No; the other language is definite enough.

Mr. GROSVENOR. It covers the point.

Mr. PADGETT. Would it not be better to say "at and after?"

Mr. GROSVENOR. I have no objection to that.

Mr. PADGETT. I suggest that modification of the amendment.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Very well.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, that modification will be made to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

The amendment as modified was agreed to.

Mr. HEPBURN. I want to know if the gentleman will agree to put in an amendment limiting the amount?

Mr. PADGETT. I stated I was willing to accept an amendment of $100,000—"not to exceed $100,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary."

Mr. HEPBURN. That seems to be a very large amount to pay for 450 claims of this kind.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I would state, Mr. Chairman, that in the debate in the Senate the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. BATE], who is entirely familiar with the details of this matter, in response to an interrogatory on the floor of the Senate, stated the value of these claims would not exceed $30,000. I will read from the RECORD:

Mr. BURROWS. Let me ask the Senator how much is carried by the bill?
Mr. BATE. I can not tell exactly. It depends upon the number; but it will not exceed $30,000.
Mr. BURROWS. How much in the aggregate?
Mr. BATE. Twenty-five or thirty thousand dollars will cover the whole thing. A great many of them are dead and gone.

Mr. HEPBURN. Make it $50,000.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Put it right at the end of the section.

Mr. PADGETT. I understood the gentleman to say that $75,000 would be satisfactory.

Mr. HEPBURN. I said so at the time, but I had not heard from the gentleman from Tennessee. [Laughter.]

Mr. PADGETT. If the gentleman will place it at $75,000, or so much as will be necessary, it will be satisfactory.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, I move to add, at the end of line 17, "provided, that the expenditure under this act shall not exceed $50,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "appropriate," in line 14, page 1, add the following: "Provided, That the expenditure under this act shall not exceed $50,000."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee, that the committee rise and report the bill favorably to the House.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, before the gentleman makes that motion, I want to suggest to him the propriety of amending this bill so that on the auditing of these claims, as other claims for back pay and bounty to Federal soldiers, that they shall be certified to Congress for appropriation. I do not recollect of any act which enables the Secretary of War to take money out of the Treasury on vouchers.

It seems to me, and I do not say this to antagonize the claims, that after they had ascertained that they should be reported to Congress, as claims for pay and bounty, and generally all kinds of claims are, they should be brought to the consideration of Congress for appropriation. Take what is known as the 4th of July claims. The gentleman is aware that for many years appropriations were made as a matter of course, and substantially for all of them. Once in a while, on investigation, it was found that some of them ought not to be paid, and exceptions were made. And so for supplies and various things, in the main, all that have passed the auditing officers have been appropriated for; but in some cases very considerable amounts have been cut out, because on investigation frauds appeared. It seems to me that the bill might well be amended in that particular.

Mr. SIMS. Why, Mr. Chairman, I admit the general good sense and general good judgment of the suggestions made by the gentleman from Illinois, but if the War Department is to investigate these claims this long time afterwards, and has to report back, and then they have to come here in the nature of a private bill for appropriation, we might just as well not pass this measure. The bill is hedged in and guarded in every way. These horses were taken, and not in the nature of a tort, but by the orders of Federal officers, who did not mean to violate the terms of the surrender. At this late day it seems to me very hard to require any additional legislation after this bill passes.

Mr. CANNON. I do not seek legislation, for instance, as you understand legislation, on the findings of the Court of Claims. I was merely proposing such an amendment as would place this on all fours with audited claims that are certified every year from the Treasury and ordinarily put on the deficiency bill. The deficiency bill recently passed carried a whole lot of them. The limitation I do not regard as being valuable. You understand the fact that it was in the minds of the House of Representatives that these claims were so small that they would not exceed $50,000. If an investigation should show that they go to $5,000,000, or any other sum, the gentleman knows quite as well as I do that after you once start that that limitation would be removed, and if the claims were on all fours, ought to be removed.

Mr. SIMS. I am perfectly sure that they will never reach $50,000. It was not the horses of all the surrendered soldiers that were taken; only a few. I regret very much to accept any amendment which will cause any additional delay, and shall appeal to the gentleman, if the bill is not in the best possible way that he would have it, not to insist on the amendment. The bill has been framed by those who have given careful attention to the subject, and it certainly is as meritorious as a bill can be, and now, forty years or more since the thing was done, I appeal to the gentleman not to insist on an amendment, but to let the bill pass.

Mr. CANNON. Does the gentleman think that this makes an appropriation:

Which vouchers shall be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated?

Mr. SIMS. Those who investigated this bill so understand. If not, it can be made on the report of the Secretary of War to appropriate for it.

Mr. CANNON. I am quite sure I do not know whether it does or not. I suppose the intention was to appropriate, or at least to have the vouchers paid by virtue of the provision. This bill will, anyhow, have to go back to the conference.

Mr. SIMS. It has to go to the Senate.

Mr. CANNON. It has to go back to the Senate. I suppose this amendment would be sufficient to enable the conferees, if it goes into conference, to consider the suggestion that I have made if it seems to them wise.

Mr. SIMS. I hope the gentleman from Illinois will not move an amendment. I insist, Mr. Chairman, on the motion that the committee now rise and report the bill favorably to the House.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois move an amendment?

Mr. CANNON. No, Mr. Chairman, I think I will not.

The CHAIRMAN. The motion of the gentleman from Tennessee is that the committee rise and report the bill favorably to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts, the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration Senate bill 88 and had agreed to two amendments, and recommended that the same be reported back to the House with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on either amendment? If not, the Chair will submit the amendments in gross.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time; and being read the third time, was passed.

On motion of Mr. SIMS, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

Mr. HEPBURN. The regular order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the next committee.

The Clerk called the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

BRIDGE OVER THE MISSOURI RIVER NEAR CITY OF ST. JOSEPH, MO.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up House bill 7171, "to authorize the construction of a bridge over the Missouri River at or near the city of St. Joseph, Mo." There is a Senate bill precisely similar to this, identical in language, not yet reported from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. I move to substitute the Senate bill 1165 for House bill 7171.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce be discharged from a similar bill to Senate bill 1165, and that the Senate bill be considered. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read the Senate bill at length.

Mr. HEPBURN. Now, Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS].

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Speaker, the bill before the House was introduced by Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. It has been unanimously reported by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. It was approved by the War Department. All the amendments suggested by the War Department were adopted by the committee, and I therefore ask that the bill do pass.

Mr. HEPBURN. I will now yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] if he wishes.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, the bridge provided for in this bill is in the districts represented by the gentleman from Kansas and mine, and we are therefore jointly interested. As has been stated, the bill has the unanimous approval of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and it is inconceivable that there could be any objection to its passage. It is to grant facilities of a new bridge to the principal railroads in the country, and the construction of it is undoubtedly necessary and almost indispensable.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time; and being read the third time, was passed.

On motion of Mr. CURTIS, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the House bill 7171 will lie on the table.

There was no objection.

LIFE-SAVING STATION AT OR NEAR BOGUE INLET, NORTH CAROLINA.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up House bill 61, to authorize the establishment of a life-saving station at or near Bogue Inlet, North Carolina.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to establish a life-saving station at or near Bogue Inlet, North Carolina, in such locality as the General Superintendent of the Life-Saving Service may recommend.

Mr. HEPBURN. I will yield, Mr. Speaker, to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. THOMAS] five minutes.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, this is a bill to establish a life-saving station at or near a point on the North Carolina coast known as Bogue Inlet. The bill requires very little explanation or discussion. It has the indorsement of the Superintendent of the Life-Saving Service, Mr. Kimball, who, as members know, is conservative in his recommendations of the establishment of these stations. It is a well-known fact that the able and efficient Superintendent of this Service does not recommend the establishment of a life-saving station unless there is a necessity for it.

At this particular point on the North Carolina coast there is, without doubt, need for a life-saving station. There is no station within 35 miles to the north and 65 miles to the south. The nearest station is at Cape Lookout, and there is another at Cape Fear, but between Cape Lookout and Cape Fear this proposed station will be the only one for 100 miles of the North Carolina coast. The commerce at Bogue Inlet, which is in Onslow County, N. C., is extensive and is increasing annually. There have been recently at this point two wrecks, involving in one case, according to the reports to the General Superintendent of the Life-Saving Service, the loss of one vessel and cargo, valued at $26,000; and in the other case damage to the vessel and loss of cargo, a total damage and loss of $7,000.

Bogue Inlet is an inlet of great importance, at least of such importance as to justify the establishment of a station at or near it for the protection of human life and of property in jeopardy.

Large vessels are constantly plying in and out of this inlet carrying millions of feet of lumber annually, besides other freights of large amount. Vessel owners, sea captains, and pilots have petitioned for this station for the protection of commerce and life.

The passage of the bill without amendment has been favorably recommended by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and I hope the bill will pass as recommended by the committee. As a part of my remarks I submit the report of Superintendent Kimball:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE GENERAL SUPERINTENDENT LIFE-SAVING SERVICE,
Washington, January 15, 1902.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt from you, for report, of a letter from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, transmitting House bill 61, Fifty-seventh Congress, first session, to authorize the establishment of a life-saving station at or near Bogue Inlet, North Carolina, and asking for suggestions touching the merits of the bill and the propriety of its passage.

Under date of February 11, 1901, in compliance with a like request, I made a report to you on a bill from the same committee of like import, H. R. 4480, Fifty-sixth Congress, first session, in which I said:

"In reply I would respectfully say that Bogue Inlet lies between Cape Lookout and Cape Fear, which points include Onslow Bay. There is a life-saving station at the point of each cape, but there is none on the coast lying between them, a distance of about 100 miles. Bogue Inlet lies about 35 miles to the westward of Cape Lookout. Considerable commerce passes in and out of the inlet, and quite a number of disasters have occurred in its immediate neighborhood, involving losses which the presence of a life-saving station would have either averted or materially lessened.

"Besides the question of affording protection to the commerce above referred to should also be considered the liability of vessels passing the Lookout or the Frying Pan Shoals, through stress of weather and ocean currents, to get into the bight of the bay and so fall in with the land and its dangers, as occurred in two instances during the last fiscal year, when the schooners Carrie L. Davis and Thomas L. James, the former bound from Savannah to Philadelphia and the latter from Savannah to Rondout, N. Y., went ashore at Bogue Inlet, one being totally wrecked, suffering the loss of both vessel and cargo, amounting to $26,000, and the other the loss of the entire cargo and damage to the vessel, amounting in all to $7,000.

"An officer of the service who was recently in the vicinity of Bogue Inlet informs me that he learned that the commerce passing through the inlet had largely increased of late and is likely to still further increase.

"In view of the foregoing, the establishment of the life-saving station contemplated by the bill would seem to be desirable."

This report was transmitted to the committee, with your concurrence, on the same day, and I beg that the report on that bill, as above set forth, be made my report on the bill under consideration.

Respectfully,

S. I. KIMBALL,
General Superintendent.

THE SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS ARKANSAS RIVER NEAR FORT GIBSON.

Mr. HEPBURN. I call up the bill (S. 73) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Arkansas River near Fort Gibson, Ind. T.

The bill was read.

The SPEAKER. The question is on ordering the Senate bill to a third reading.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I will yield five minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. DINSMORE], if he is in the House and desires to occupy the time. If not, I will say that this bill is in the usual form. It contains all the ordinary provisions for guarding the interests of the United States. It was submitted to the Secretary of War, and we have from him the statement that he knows of no reason why it should not be passed, or rather I should have said the corresponding House bill was submitted to the Secretary and he suggested one amendment, which you find incorporated in this Senate bill.

Mr. NORTON. I offer the amendment which I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 11, page 2, after the word "expense" and before the word "provided," insert:

"Provided, That this act shall in no wise interfere with the construction or location of any bridge which has already been constructed over the Arkansas River or that may be in the course of construction, and."

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, it is not my purpose to oppose the passage of this bill; but it certainly seems eminently proper that the amendment I have offered should be inserted and for reasons that the House ought to understand.

Another company is building a bridge on precisely this ground—directly and absolutely along the line where this bridge is now proposed to be built. The company has proceeded with the work and has expended some fifteen or twenty thousand dollars upon it. They acquired their rights through the courts, under a law authorizing the exercise of such authority in cases of this kind.

Now another railroad company proposes to build a bridge, and to build it directly over the line and upon the right of way of the bridge already being constructed. I know that there can be no objection to this amendment. It will impose no hardship upon these people. They will have the same right to use this bridge as they will to use their own. Both are to be toll bridges. Why a bill of this kind should be passed after an exclusive right has been given to another company I can not understand.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Was the exclusive right of which the gentleman speaks granted by any act of Congress?

Mr. NORTON. It was granted by the court under an act of Congress authorizing the courts to grant such rights. I am satisfied that the author of this bill would accept this amendment in the Senate and would have no objection to it.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. I suggest that the gentleman let the bill go to the Senate, and, if his suggestion is correct, let it be amended there.

Mr. NORTON. This bill has already passed the Senate, and, if passed here without amendment, will not go back to that body, but will become a law.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, the controversy to which the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. NORTON] has referred was entirely unknown to me until, I think, to-day. I believe he is mistaken as to some of the matters of fact of which he has spoken. In the first place, the bill does not locate this bridge at a particular point, but gives authority for the building of the bridge on one of the subdivisions, I think, of the survey. This is a navigable stream; at least it is such in contemplation of law. I think it is not navigated by anything but very small boats. But there is no power on the part of anyone except Congress to authorize the construction of a bridge at this place or near it.

I am sorry that I do not know enough of the local controversy to discuss this matter more intelligently. The House bill was introduced by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. DINSMORE], who has taken much interest in it. I see him now in the House, and will yield him ten minutes that he may speak for himself upon this question.

Mr. DINSMORE. Mr. Speaker, I hope that the amendment offered to the bill will not prevail. I was not aware that the matter could come up at this time, as the House had passed from the call of committees, and I was absent from the floor on other business when the bill was called up.

This bill was introduced at an early day of the session, and at one time could have been passed probably by unanimous consent; but the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. NORTON] has received a communication from parties interested in the matter who wanted the amendment proposed by him to be incorporated in the bill.

I desire to state that this bill was introduced to allow the Ozark and Cherokee Central Railroad to construct a bridge across the Arkansas River, just below the mouth of the Grand River, near Fort Gibson, in the Indian Territory; but that company had procured from the Interior Department all the rights that were required by law, had made their surveys and conformed to the requirements of law in every respect.

Afterwards a railroad company which had been formed, the Muskogee and Western Railway Company, conceived the idea of constructing a bridge across the Arkansas River.

The bill before the House proposes to vest the Ozark and Cherokee Central Railway Company with the right to construct a bridge on a certain section of land over the Arkansas River. Congress can not vest that company with authority to interfere with any of the vested rights of any other company. In fact, there is no company which has any vested rights to be interfered with; but there is a provision of the statute with reference to the construction of parallel lines of road first requiring the approval of the Interior Department or the Secretary of the Interior. This company which I mention, the Muskogee and Western Railway Company, having conceived the idea of constructing this bridge, entered, as I am advised, upon the construction of a bridge without any authority of law whatever, except an order of court.

The amendment proposed—I have not heard it read, but I have no doubt it is the same amendment that was suggested to me by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. NORTON] some time ago—is to insert a proviso in the bill that the construction of the bridge proposed in the bill should not interfere with any other bridge in course of construction, or any of its interests.

As before remarked, we can not interfere with any of the vested rights of any other company by this act. The act proposes only to allow the construction of a bridge upon a certain section of land, and a section of land is a mile long. I do not desire to animadvert upon the motives of the other company, but it has occurred to me and has been suggested that they might have had some ulterior purpose in forcing the Ozark and Cherokee Central ultimately to use their bridge which they proposed to construct as a toll bridge, and to get in ahead if possible.

Now, what is proposed by this bill is to give the right to construct a bridge, which has been obtained by compliance with all the requirements of law with the exception of an act of Congress, which is necessary. The other company applied to the War Department some time ago for authority from that Department to construct a bridge. The War Department refused to give that authority, and informed them by correspondence, which I have seen, which was submitted to me by the chief engineer of the War Department, that they could not do so without an act of Congress. They proposed to establish a fixed span bridge, and there is no authority of law for its construction.

They pretended to do so in compliance with the provisions of the statutes of Arkansas, which by act of Congress have been extended to the Indian Territory, but they have not even complied with that. Therefore I went to the War Department and ascertained from them that this company had no rights whatever; but the company at whose instance this bill has been introduced, and in which I have not the slightest personal interest further than that the road proposed and being constructed begins at the town in which I live and is extending into the Indian Territory and will be built across a large part of it. They, in good faith, have entered upon the construction of a railroad, several miles of which is now in operation. They made their surveys. They obtained all the authority necessary from the Interior Department. They came to Congress to get the authority of Congress for the construction of a bridge.

It is proposed now to amend this act to prevent that company from interfering with any bridge in course of construction. As I have remarked, we can not interfere with any vested rights in any other company; but by this proviso as inserted in this bill they may obtain ground for some litigation and disturbance of these parties in the carrying out of the authority vested in them by the act. Therefore I hope that the amendment will not be adopted by the House.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I certainly have no desire——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Iowa yield to the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. HEPBURN. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. NORTON I have no desire to interfere with this legislation, and certainly the gentleman is mistaken when he says that the company now constructing this bridge, and that have spent months of work upon it and have expended more than $20,000 upon it, are undertaking to interfere with a bridge that they allege is to be constructed, when this was prior to your even thinking of your road.

Mr. DINSMORE. Will the gentleman permit me one moment?

Mr. NORTON. Certainly.

Mr. DINSMORE. The amendment would not give you the benefit of the construction, for this bridge has been stopped by order of the United States Government, and proceedings are now under consideration for the prosecution of the men for constructing this bridge; and it is not in course of construction.

Mr. NORTON. If there is any such process that the gentleman can show, I would be perfectly willing to withdraw my amendment.

Mr. DINSMORE. I have seen the correspondence in the War Department myself, and a letter from the Department of Justice saying that it has been considered best not to begin the prosecution at this time, but that the work has been stopped by order of the Government.

Mr. NORTON. Now, Mr. Speaker, my friend has intimated that this company has no authority for proceeding to construct the bridge. The authority comes from the courts of the Indian Territory, the Federal courts, under a general law, and that general law authorizes the construction of these bridges or turnpikes, or any other method of carrying over wet lands. This bridge is not being constructed over a navigable stream. The gentleman will admit that he can not run a canoe up the stream 4 miles below where this bridge is being constructed.

Mr. DINSMORE. That is not altogether accurate. There is no practical navigation, which covers all the purposes of the gentleman; but I want to say there is no law which authorizes any company to build a fixed-span bridge across a navigable stream without an act of Congress to authorize it, and the Arkansas River at the point proposed for construction of a bridge is below the head of navigation, and there is no law of the State of Arkansas which can authorize the construction of a bridge at this point which these gentlemen propose.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, if it be true that you can not interfere in any way with vested rights, then this amendment certainly can do no harm; and I can see no reason why the gentleman should be technical upon the question when he admits that he can not interfere with any vested rights, if they have any. This amendment simply allows that to be done, which would not interfere.

Mr. DINSMORE. But the gentleman's amendment does not propose a proviso against interfering with a vested right, but to interfere with any bridge now being constructed. If this proviso should be adopted, and if they commence the construction without authority of law, they will interfere with the construction of a road proceeding with the sanction of law; of a road actually in the course of construction, with miles already in operation, and I scarcely think that this House ought to sanction such an interference on the part of this company. If they have vested rights, they can not be interfered with by this act; if they have no vested rights, then they have nothing to complain of.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. DINSMORE. I hope the amendment will be voted down.

Mr. HEPBURN. I hope the amendment will not prevail.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE MISSOURI RIVER.

Mr. HEPBURN. I call up the bill S. 910.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (S. 910) to extend the time for the completion of a bridge across the Missouri River.

Be it enacted, etc., That section 6 of the act approved March 3, 1899, authorizing the Dakota Southern Railroad Company to construct a combined railroad, wagon, and foot-passenger bridge across the Missouri River at the city of Yankton, S. MEMPHIS, HELENA AND LOUISIANA RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. HEPBURN. I call up Senate bill 1839, authorizing the Memphis, Helena and Louisiana Railway Company to construct and maintain a bridge across the White River, in the State of Arkansas.

The bill was read at length.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

BRIDGE ACROSS BAYOU BARTHOLOMEW, ARKANSAS.

Mr. JOY. I call up the bill S. 651.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the time within which the Mississippi River, Hamburg and Western Railway Company, a corporation existing under the laws of the State of Arkansas, was authorized by the act approved on the 12th day of March, 1898, entitled "An act authorizing the Mississippi River, Hamburg and Western Railway Company to construct and maintain a bridge across the Bayou Bartholomew in Arkansas," to construct its said bridge is hereby extended so that the said corporation may continue and complete the said construction within three years from the passage of this act: Provided, That said construction and maintenance thereof shall in all other respects be in compliance with the terms of the said act approved on the 12th day of March, 1898.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

BRIDGE ACROSS MONONGAHELA RIVER, NEAR MORGANTOWN, W. VA.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 4381) to authorize the Central Railway of West Virginia to build a bridge across the Monongahela River at or near Morgantown, in the State of West Virginia.

The Clerk read the bill at length.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was engrossed and read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HEPBURN, a motion to reconsider the several votes by which the bills reported from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce were passed was laid on the table.

ELECTION OF UNITED STATES SENATORS.

The Clerk proceeded with the call of committees. When the Committee on Election of President, Vice-President, and Representatives in Congress was called,

Mr. CORLISS. Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the committee to call up House joint resolution 41, proposing an amendment to the Constitution providing for the election of Senators of the United States.

The Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each House concurring therein), That the following amendments be proposed to the legislatures of the several States, which, when ratified by three-fourths of said legislatures, shall become and be a part of the Constitution, namely: In lieu of the first and second paragraphs of section 3 of Article I of the Constitution of the United States of America, the following shall be proposed as an amendment to the Constitution:

"SEC. 3. The Senate of the United States shall be composed of two Senators from each State, who shall be elected by a direct vote of the people thereof, for a term of six years, and each Senator shall have one vote; a plurality of the votes cast shall elect, and the electors shall have the qualifications requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the State legislature.

"When vacancies happen, by resignation or otherwise, in the representation of any State in the Senate, the same shall be filled for the unexpired term thereof in the same manner as is provided for the election of Senators in paragraph 1: Provided, That the legislature of any State may empower the executive thereof to make temporary appointments until the next general election, in accordance with the statutes or constitution of such State."

This amendment shall not be so construed as to affect the election or term of any Senator chosen before it becomes valid as a part of the Constitution.

The following amendments were recommended by the committee:

In line 1, page 2, after the word "cast," insert the words "for candidates for Senator."

In line 8, page 2, strike out the words "the legislature of any State may empower."

In line 9, page 2, strike out the word "to" and insert the word "shall," and strike off the letter "s" to the word "appointments."

Insert in line 10, after the word "general," the words "or special," and after the word "election" insert the word "held" in the same line.

Mr. CORLISS. Mr. Speaker, it is not my purpose to discuss this joint resolution. This resolution is almost identical with the resolution adopted in the Fifty-fourth, Fifty-fifth, and Fifty-sixth Congresses. I have personally discussed it on the floor of the House. It is well known to all of the members, and I will content myself with the reiteration of the remarks of our distinguished Speaker in the Fifty-fifth Congress, when he said that this was a measure demanded by the American people, and that the members of this House, representing directly the people, should pass this measure, and continue to pass it, and knock upon the doors of the Senate until it listens to the voice of the people. If there are members of the committee who desire to discuss the measure I will yield to them. If not, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. The gentleman from Michigan states that this resolution proposing this amendment to the Constitution is in almost indentically the language of the resolution passed in former Congresses. Will the gentleman be kind enough to tell us where it differs from the former resolution for which the most of us voted?

Mr. CORLISS. There is no substantial difference. It provides for the election of United States Senators by a direct vote of the people. It provides for it in almost the identical language of the former act or bill which passed the House.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I supposed the gentleman had the former resolutions before him and could tell us wherein it differs.

Mr. CORLISS. The amendments that have been suggested by the committee make the bill the same as the bill that was passed in the Fifty-sixth Congress. The amendments were suggested for the purpose of making it identical, and with these amendments we will have the same measure that was passed in the last Congress.

Mr. BREAZEALE. Mr. Speaker, I do not care to make a speech on this bill. I merely want to call the attention of the House to the fact that the committee were unanimous in their report on this bill.

Mr. CORLISS. The committee was unanimous. I would like to make a parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I did not hear the remarks of the gentleman from Michigan, but I desire to ask him a question.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Michigan yield to the gentleman from Alabama?

Mr. CORLISS. I do.

Mr. CLAYTON. Do I understand the gentleman from Michigan to say that the measure the committee has reported, together with the committee amendments suggested, makes it the identical measure that passed the House at the last session of Congress?

Mr. CORLISS. I intended to be so understood.

Now, a parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker: Whether a roll call is necessary, or is it sufficient that a two-thirds vote is cast, in the judgment of the Speaker?

The SPEAKER. If the House orders it, it must be had. In the early times, during the war period, when great amendments were pending the Speaker ordered a roll call; but in the more recent times the practice has been to put it to vote, the presumption being that a quorum was present, and the Chair deciding, in his opinion, whether there was a two-thirds vote in favor of the measure. It is always within the power of the House to test the matter.

Mr. CORLISS. Unless there is some member who desires to discuss the matter, I will ask for a vote.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I would like to make one or two inquiries. First, I would like to know what the measure is as the amendments will make it read. We are proposing to amend the Constitution of the United States; to put a vital change into the Constitution without knowing what it is. There are half a dozen amendments there, and we have not had them read in an intelligent way——

The SPEAKER. The measure has been read and the amendments have been reported. If the gentleman from Ohio requests, the Clerk will again report the bill with the amendments.

Mr. GROSVENOR. That would not do any good unless the bill can be read as it will read when amended.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the bill as it will read if amended.

The Clerk read the bill as it would read if the committee amendments were adopted.

Mr. GROSVENOR. If the gentleman will allow me, there is a provision there which I thought I caught when the amendments were read, and which I think is a bad one. In case of a vacancy, as I gather the substance of the provision, the governor of the State, as now, will fill the vacancy, but at the next "special or general" election held in that State the election of a Senator to serve for the term will take place.

Now, I do not believe that that is a wise provision. Special elections are held in the States quite often for special purposes—the approval of constitutional amendments, and votes upon various questions of that character. It seems to me that the words "or special" ought to be stricken out. I do not think that a State ought to be precipitated into the election of a Senator at a special election, when there is no occasion for it, the governor having already filled the vacancy.

Mr. CORLISS. The gentleman is aware that the State would control the matter?

Mr. GROSVENOR. No; not at all.

Mr. CORLISS. The State authorities would have to order a special election, if one should be held.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed (two-thirds voting in favor thereof).

The SPEAKER. Is there any further business from the committee?

Mr. CORLISS. Nothing further.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. BRICK, by unanimous consent, obtained leave of absence for fifteen days, on account of important business.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

By unanimous consent, the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds was discharged from the further consideration of a bill of the following title, and the same was referred to the Committee on Appropriations:

A bill (H. R. 10513) for the purchase of land in Fort Reno subdivision northwest as a site for a colored schoolhouse.

And then, on motion of Mr. PAYNE (at 4 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

House joint memorial No. 1.—Memorial to Congress.

Whereas the county of Curry, in the State of Oregon, has constructed a post-road along the coast of the Pacific Ocean from the north line of said county to the southern line of said county, a distance of about a hundred miles, at a cost of over $75,000; and

Whereas said Curry County has a population of not to exceed 1,868 inhabitants and a voting population of 477; and

Whereas the taxable property in said Curry County at the present time amounts to but about $503,282; and

Whereas in the construction of said post-road said county has incurred an indebtedness on account thereof of $44,000; and

Whereas said road so built and constructed by said county is the only post-road running north and south through said county along said coast, and it is indispensable in delivering mail to the inhabitants of said county, and is daily used by the United States Government for that purpose, and the same is the only post-road west of the coast range of mountains running through said county, connecting the State of Oregon and the State of California; and

Whereas it is only just that the General Government should aid in the construction and maintenance of said post road to the extent at least of reimbursing said county in the amount of said indebtedness, as a matter of justice to the people of said Curry County: Therefore,

The legislative assembly of the State of Oregon does hereby petition and memorialize Congress of the United States to appropriate to said Curry County the sum of $44,000 to relieve it from the indebtedness incurred in the building and construction of said post road, and our Representatives and Senators in Congress are hereby directed to use their best efforts to secure such an appropriation as a matter of justice to the taxpayers and the people of said Curry County.

The secretary of state be, and he is hereby, authorized to transmit a certified copy of this memorial to our delegation in Congress for their instruction and guidance.

Resolved, That the Committee on the Geological Survey be, and is hereby, authorized to employ a messenger, to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate, at the rate of $1,440 per annum, until otherwise ordered.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. President, I believe we ought to have all the messengers and all the clerks we need to transact the public business, but I notice on December 18 we employed an assistant clerk, at $1,800 per year, and on January 9, 1902, we employed an extra messenger for the Committee on Immigration, at $1,440 per year. On the same day an assistant clerk was employed for the Committee on Standards, Weights, and Measures, at a salary of $1,800 per year.

Again, on January 13, we employed another extra messenger, at $1,440 per year; also, an extra clerk, at a salary of $1,800. Again, on January 20 we employed another extra messenger for the Committee on Coast Defenses, at $1,440 per year. Again, on January 21, 1902, we employed another extra messenger, at $1,440 per year for the Committee on the Organization and Expenditures of the Executive Departments.

Now, that is not all. January 22, 1902, we employed another extra messenger for the Committee on Printing, at a salary of $1,440 per year. Again, on January 23, we employed another extra messenger, at $1,440 per year. On January 23, 1902, we employed another messenger, at $1,440 per year. Then, on January 28, we employed another messenger, at $1,440 per year. On January 29 we employed another for the Coast and Insular Survey Committe, at $1,440 per year. On January 29, 1902, we employed another messenger, at $1,440 per year. January 30, 1902, we employed another messenger for the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, at $1,440 per year. Again, January 31, we employed another messenger, at $1,440 per year, and on February 3, 1902, we employed another messenger, at $1,440 per year.

It appears, Mr. President, that during the last thirty days we have employed more than 20 extra messengers and assistant clerks in the United States Senate at a salary of $1,440 per year each, and I have been informed that messengers have been employed for committees that never meet. If the services of these additional employees are needed to enable Senators to discharge their official duties, then I have no objection, but if we are creating new places for political favorites, regardless of the need of their services, we ought to stop.

Mr. President, I am not penurious, but it does strike me that we have gone far enough. We ought to have enough clerks and messengers to attend to the business of the Senate, and when that is done we ought to be willing to stop. We ought to look at it in a plain business way. If one Senator can introduce and have passed a resolution providing for the employment of an extra messenger to assist him in the discharge of his duties, then the same rule should apply to minority as well as majority Senators.

Mr. President, I simply desire to call attention to the fact and to show how far we have gone on the line we are pursuing this morning.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I should like to be permitted to say one word on this subject.

The Senator from Georgia, I think, overlooks for the moment the gravity and the laboriousness of the duties we all have to perform. A Senator of the United States exercises in his own person one-half of the legislative power of a great State. He has to deal with subjects the like of which no other legislative body on earth has under its control. He is dealing now not only with the administrative affairs, the jurisprudence, and the interstate and international commerce of a great continent, but he is dealing also with the concerns of new foreign territories which have come practically under our control and which require the consideration, study, and action which the establishing of new conditions make necessary.

I do not think that for a Senator to have the assistance of one clerk and one messenger in the discharge of those duties—getting books, compiling statistics, in addition to the ordinary work of attending to the duties of a committee room and taking care of that and helping him about his official correspondence, typewriting, receiving dictation, and so on—is an unreasonable thing. If that power is cut down it is not the convenience or comfort of Senators that is cut down; it is the efficient service to the people.

There are Senators in this body certainly who have to work a great deal harder than I do. I know the nature of the subjects with which they have to deal and the variety assigned to their several committees and their conduct in this body, which require a physical and mental labor which I should be incapable of performing at my age. I have in the service of the Judiciary Committee two clerks and one messenger, and I do not believe that there are three harder worked young men in the whole city of Washington than those three. If I had two more at my control I could employ them profitably to the advantage of my own State and to the advantage of the public service, as well as to my own convenience.

I acquit, of course, the Senator from Georgia of any desire to appeal to a narrow, parsimonious feeling which may exist anywhere. He is the last man in the world to whom that could occur. But I think he underrates the needs of the Senate. I think the people of the United States are intelligent enough to know that they get better and more satisfactory service when a Senator is not all the time burdened, intellectually and physically, with the details of small matters which can be put upon an assistant.

Mr. BERRY. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Massachusetts misunderstood the Senator from Georgia. If I am correctly informed, the additions which have been put on are in addition to the one messenger for each Senator appointed prior to that time. These are assistant clerks and additional messengers. I think that under the rule established here it was arranged that every Senator should appoint a messenger, except the minority Senators, who have no committees, and they were permitted to have a messenger, but at a reduced price.

Mr. HEITFELD. At $720.

Mr. BERRY. At $720 instead of $1,440.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will permit me——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. BERRY. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think the Senator is laboring under a misapprehension on one point, and I know he does not wish to do so.

Admitting that the Senators in the majority in the Chamber have been granted the privilege of naming a messenger, those messengers in every instance are employed by the Sergeant-at-Arms, and have no relation to the Senator or his committee. The only committees that have messengers assigned to them are those the Senator will find included in the appropriation bill.

Mr. BERRY. I do not think I said anything differently from that. My understanding was that each Senator of the majority and each Senator of the minority who is chairman of a minority committee is entitled to name a messenger who receives a salary of $1,440 a year. Each Senator of the minority who is not chairman of a committee is, under some rule or regulation which was made, permitted to name one at $720 a year.

Now, these additional appointments, as the Senator from Georgia says, have been coming in here from day to day. A messenger is appointed by the majority in addition to the messengers that they already have, and a number of appointments of assistant clerks have been made. I have seen this going on from day to day. While the responsibility rests with the majority of the Senate, and there is no doubt about it, as to the employees that they shall have, yet I think every Senator, in a certain way, is responsible unless he raises his voice against it. It seems to me that in the last month these appointments have been out of all reason. I think messengers and assistant clerks have been appointed to committees where they were not needed. I refused on one committee of which I am a member. It is true it has a great deal of work, but I think the committee clerk is not overworked on that committee. The chairman asked me to sign a paper requesting that the committee be given an assistant clerk. I told him I would be glad to accommodate him, but I did not think it was right and I could not do it, and I did not sign it. There is one other committee of which I am a member where I was asked to sign a paper for a messenger, and I will state that that committee has never had a single meeting. I was asked to sign to get a messenger for that committee and I declined to do it.

I thoroughly agree with the Senator from Georgia. I think the Senate has a sufficient number of employees. I realize what the Senator from Massachusetts says as to the work and all that, but I do think that in continuing from day to day to appoint additional messengers and assistant clerks we have gone beyond what is reasonable and what is right. I think that such practices bring upon the Senate the just criticism of the country in regard to its extravagance for its own convenience. I am opposed to the resolution.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. One moment. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution? The Chair hears none, and the resolution is before the Senate.

Mr. LODGE. Some time ago the Senate provided that each Senator should have a clerk or a private secretary without regard to whether he was chairman of a committee or not. These additional messengers amount in many cases to giving each Senator two clerks. I am not speaking of committee clerks of course now, I am speaking simply of individual appointments. It amounts to giving a Senator two clerks instead of one; and I am prepared to say that on that broad ground, applying it to every Senator in this Chamber, I think they are entitled to it.

It is true that the roll of the Senate has swollen to enormous proportions. Undoubtedly it might be reduced without affecting the immediate work of each Senator. It all arises, in my judgment, from the fact of the insufficient salary. In other words, Senators get the salary that they ought to receive indirectly. It would be a great deal better, I think, and a great deal more approved by the country, if each Senator had a proper salary, and then the multiplication of assistants would no longer be justified, because if a Senator needed more in any given case than the one secretary allowed he could pay for it himself. But under existing circumstances it is impossible for many Senators to pay for additional assistants.

Judging from my own experience, I do not think that a Senator, especially if he represents a large and populous State, is able to attend to the work of that State and his duties in this Chamber without two clerks. In my own case, and I am speaking from a very recent experience, owing to the work that my committee is engaged in at this moment, with hearings every morning from 10 to 12, and then the necessary presence of the members of that committee on the floor during the rest of the day, I know that I, and I think almost all of the members of my committee, have been in this Capitol building from 10 until 6. I know that I myself have had no opportunity to attend to the mass of mail which, in common with other Senators, I receive daily, and to attend to the work of that committee, to see that the papers are ready, that the hearings are printed, that the proof is corrected, that it is laid on the desks of the members of the committee, and that the bill is properly looked after here, as it must be by the members of the majority and minority who are specially interested in it. I say that in my own case, as chairman of that committee, with a clerk for myself and a messenger for the committee, I have just as much as I can do to deal with my own work.

I believe the true solution, as I have said, is to pay what every man in this Chamber practically thinks ought to be paid, and allow one secretary. Then if a Senator needs more he has the money, if he chooses to expend it in that way, to employ additional assistants. But, as we are now situated, it seems to me that every Senator of the minority and majority ought to have, if he so desires, two clerks, or a clerk and a messenger—whatever name you choose to give them—instead of one.

I instanced my own case; but I know many Senators in this Chamber to-day who have two clerks, and yet the mass of mail they receive, the mass of correspondence they must have, representing even larger and more populous States than my own, is such that they are paying out of their own pockets in order to do the public work. Now, I do not believe the American people in the least desire that sort of thing. I believe that they want their public servants paid a fair living wage, and one which will enable them to do the work properly and efficiently that they are sent to do. If it is not done directly by a proper salary it is going to be done indirectly by the multiplication of clerks and assistants which every Senator finds that he needs.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I know the Senator from Massachusetts did not mean to say what, it seemed to me, he did say, and which might be so construed by the public. It struck some Senators sitting near me in the same way. The Senator did not mean, by saying that it was an indirect way to increase our salaries, that we were getting any financial benefit?

Mr. LODGE. Oh, of course not, Mr. President.

Mr. TELLER. That is simply what I wanted to have understood.

Mr. LODGE. I did not suggest that for a moment.

Mr. TELLER. No.

Mr. LODGE. I meant that if a proper salary was paid, these little perquisites—a little money for stationery and an additional messenger here and an additional clerk there, and mileage and all these other things that are used indirectly to swell the salary—would disappear. I believe the business way is to pay an ample salary, give each Senator one clerk, pay that clerk an ample salary, and then if the Senator needs more assistants he will be able to obtain them without trenching on his proper living expenses.

Mr. TELLER. I wish to say that it does not help out the salary. Of course, if we had $10,000 or $15,000 a year we could afford to hire our own clerks, but every Senator who employs a clerk must pay the clerk the amount allowed to the clerk, that is, the clerk does not get it from the Senator; he gets it from the Secretary of the Senate.

Mr. CULLOM. Senators do not handle the money or have anything to do with it.

Mr. TELLER. They do not handle the money. I want that to go out distinctly. In some places I believe the money is handled by those who get the benefit by way of a clerk, but that is not the case in the Senate.

Mr. LODGE. Oh, certainly not.

Mr. TELLER. We do not touch the money.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator knows that I never meant to imply anything of the sort. They are all paid by the disbursing officer. No Senator has anything to do with the payment of the money.

Mr. TELLER. I know the Senator did not mean it, but I want it to go out to the country clearly that we do not handle the money or have any financial benefit from it. All we do have is the benefit of the service.

Mr. LODGE. That is all.

Mr. TELLER. And that, as the Senator from Massachusetts says, we certainly need.

Mr. LODGE. I am much obliged to the Senator for calling my attention to it.

Mr. TURNER. Mr. President, I have no doubt that some of these messengers whom we have been voting may not be very necessary, but I have not been disposed to call any of the resolutions providing for the payment of additional messengers into question, because I know that as a general thing they are very necessary.

I agree entirely with what both the Senators from Massachusetts say about the great burden imposed upon the shoulders of Senators here in the performance of the ordinary routine work pertaining to their duties as representatives of the States. I know that in my own case, what with the committees taking up my time in the mornings and the routine duties, I absolutely have not had time to be in this Chamber in the afternoons either to listen to or participate except to a very limited extent in the business of this body.

What the Senators have said in reference to chairmen of committees applies, not to the same extent, but with very great force to every Senator in this Chamber.

I have no disposition to object to giving any Senator who thinks he needs additional clerical assistance that assistance, but I think this matter ought to be equalized. When I first came into this body it was the rule that each Senator, in addition to his private secretary, should have a messenger at $1,440 per annum. After our Republican friends reorganized the body they continued that as to all Senators, either on the majority or the minority side, who were chairmen of committees; but they cut the Senators down who were not chairmen of committees upon the minority side to a laborer at $720, thus enabling them to get some additional clerical assistance, but not such as they need, not giving the employee sufficient compensation so that they could get the character of clerical assistance that they actually need in the performance of their routine duties.

For this reason, Mr. President, and in order to equalize this matter, I have prepared an amendment to the pending resolution, which I hope our friends on the other side will vote for. I offer it in good faith. It is absolutely essential, in my judgment, that all Senators should have the assistance which the amendment I shall offer provides. I hope that Senators will vote for it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Washington offers an amendment to the pending resolution. The amendment will be read to the Senate.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add at the end of the resolution the following:

> Each Senator, not chairman of a committee, shall be entitled to employ a messenger at a salary of $1,440 per annum, to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Washington is mistaken as respects what has been hitherto done as to messengers and clerks of Senators not chairmen of committees. I have had considerable experience in the matter of adjusting the clerical force of the Senate. We have had frequent controversies with the House of Representatives in regard to this matter. Several years ago the Senate inserted in one of the appropriation bills a provision authorizing the appointment of clerks to Senators not chairmen of committees at the rate of $1,200 per annum. That contest lasted for three or four years, the House always yielding on the particular appropriation bill, but always making the contest when it appeared again in an appropriation bill.

Finally that was acceded to by the House, and gradually the House of Representatives adopted a rule whereby each member of the House should be allowed $1,200 for clerk hire, and that rule prevails in the House at this time. Each member of the House has a clerk of his own at $1,200, and I think it also applies to members who are chairmen of committees. I may not be correct about that. I have not in mind exactly the provision.

Some years ago, I think the senior Senator from Connecticut was chairman of a committee which was directed to inquire into and adjust the salaries of clerks to committees and clerks to individual Senators.

Mr. TURNER. I wish the Senator from Iowa would permit me to interrupt him.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well; I yield to the Senator.

Mr. TURNER. The Senator commenced his remarks by saying that he thought I was mistaken as to the rule which had prevailed.

Mr. ALLISON. I will end, I think, by showing wherein the Senator is mistaken as to the rule.

Mr. TURNER. Then I will wait until the Senator has concluded

Mr. ALLISON. That committee arranged a scheme for the Senate whereby each committee of the Senate was allowed a clerk at $1,800 a year, with certain excepted committees, the clerks of which were to receive $2,220 a year. It also provided that each Senator not a chairman of a committee should be entitled to a clerk at a salary of $1,500 per year, and that is the prevailing provision as respects clerks. Every Senator on this floor not a chairman of a committee has an individual clerk at the rate of $1,500 a year, but every Senator who is chairman of a committee does not have such a clerk.

Therefore, when we have a chairman of a committee, whether on this side or on the other, he is entitled to a clerk at $1,800 a year, but he is not entitled to a clerk for his own exclusive use.

There never has been, so far as I know, any provision that each Senator should be entitled to a messenger as well as a clerk. It was arranged, I think, two years ago, not by statute, but by a fair adjustment among Senators, that each Senator not chairman of a committee should be entitled either to a messenger at $1,440 or to a laborer at $720, so that every minority Senator here who is chairman of a committee has a clerk with a salary of $1,800 or $2,200, as the case may be, but he is not entitled to a messenger. However, we provided a sufficient number of messengers in our adjustment two years ago to give practically to each member of the majority the selection of a messenger, but that messenger was not for the use of the individual Senator; he was for the use of the Senate. So all the messengers about these corridors and in these halls and attached to committee rooms in various ways are messengers of the Senate and not messengers of committees. Of course many of these messengers are detailed in the mornings to do work not connected with any committee, but they are all in some form attached to some committee, looking after the committee room, etc.

When that adjustment was made, it was also provided that the minority should have one of two kinds of messengers, either at a salary of $1,440 or $720 per annum, so that, as I understand—I was not a member of the committee, and, therefore, I may not state it with absolute exactness—Senators in the minority now, though it may not apply to all of them, but practically to all of them, are entitled to a clerk at $1,500 per annum and a messenger either at $720 or $1,440. Senators of the minority party, as I understand, have a messenger at one or the other of those salaries absolutely for their own use.

A number of committees for a good many years have had messengers especially assigned to their committee rooms. I do not now remember how many, but fourteen or fifteen. The number has gradually risen, so that the number has been increased from year to year, and now, at this session, I understand from the suggestion of the Senator from Georgia, that there have been added as messengers to committees some twelve or fourteen.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Will the Senator permit me to make a suggestion?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. ALLISON. I yield to the Senator, because he knows more about this subject than I do.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. We have added since the commencement of this session, prior to this morning, 19 employees, some of whom are messengers and some assistant clerks, upon resolutions introduced the same as those which we have passed upon this morning. There are 3 more this morning, which make 22, and 1 ready to report, but not reported, which makes 23.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well. We are, therefore, adding rapidly to the force of the Senate.

I agree with what was said by the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] and the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], that we ought to have here a sufficient force to reasonably discharge our public duties and such incidental duties as belong to a Senator. We all know that the work of Senators is constantly increasing. But I have a belief—it may be founded only upon what I see—that we are adding too rapidly to this force; that we are taxing the contingent fund of the Senate to a degree that will be exceedingly inconvenient sooner or later in our dealings with the House of Representatives upon these subjects, although they have always yielded to us, and I presume always will allow us our own way as respects the expenditures of the Senate; but, so yielding, it seems to me that we ought to have a care that our employees are not multiplied too rapidly and to see that those employees are in every case necessary to the current work of the Senate.

Our Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate is, I think, the committee that should have the responsibility, and does by law, as I undersand, have the responsibility of reporting to the Senate whether or not these clerks are needed, and when they report that additional clerks are necessary I think we ought to fairly consider that they are reporting after a proper examination of the subject.

The amendment suggested by the Senator from Washington is an amendment which I think he ought not to insist upon at this time. I believe that there ought to be a committee, and, as I have said, I think the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate is the proper one that ought now to take a roster—if I may use that term—of the Senate force and see whether or not that force as now constituted from time to time is a sufficient force to transact the public business of the Senate. I think that would be a wise thing to do. If it shall then turn out that the suggestion of the Senator from Washington is a proper suggestion, whereby necessarily the force will be largely increased, then I think the committee ought to report in favor of this proposition, and we ought to agree to it. It is certain that from year to year we have increased the force of the Senate, not only as respects the majority, but also as respects the minority Senators, far beyond what existed in former times or as existed in recent times.

I do not make any motion about this matter, because I do not wish to interfere with it, but I think some committee ought to take the question up and deal with it.

Mr. TURNER. Mr. President, I do not controvert what the Senator from Iowa says concerning the legislative history of this question or concerning the question which the employment of these various officers presents under the law authorizing their employment, but it is a fact which has probably escaped the attention of the Senator from Iowa, by reason of his being the chairman of a large committee having ample clerical assistance, that prior to the last organization of the Senate by the majority on the other side there were enough messengers employed under the law so that the Sergeant-at-Arms was enabled to give to every Senator in this body, whether upon the majority or minority side, a messenger at $1,440 per annum to assist him in the performance of the detail duties which necessarily devolved on him. It is a fact that when the Senate was reorganized, through some rule or order, the history of which I am not entirely familiar with, that this messenger was cut off from Senators upon the minority side not chairmen of committees, and they were compelled to content themselves with a laborer at $720 per annum.

I say that it is indisputable, and every Senator in this body on either side knows it, that a Senator can not have time to give attention to his public duties by reason of the routine duties of his position, unless he has ample clerical assistance. It is a fact that his secretary, generally not being a stenographer, but generally being a person upon whom he can rely for advice and assistance in collating information necessary to be had by him in the transaction of his public duties in this Chamber, is not enabled to give very much time to the performance of those routine duties, and each Senator needs a thoroughly competent and reliable man to assist him in the performance of his departmental duties and in the conduct and dispatch of his correspondence with his constituents.

While it is true that the clerks of committees are not technically the clerks of the chairmen of those committees, yet, outside of a half dozen important committees in this Chamber, it is known that, as a matter of fact, they are as much so as the clerks of Senators who are not chairmen of those committees; and outside of a half dozen important committees in this Chamber, the messengers attached to those committees perform as their sole duties this detail work which I have been referring to as being devolved upon every Senator.

Mr. BERRY. Will the Senator permit me to say a word?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. TURNER. Yes, sir.

Mr. BERRY. Mr. President, I think the Senator is mistaken in regard to his last statement. I do not think the messengers appointed by many Senators who are chairmen of committees render any assistance to the Senators themselves. In a large number of cases I know they do not. I refer to the messengers who are on duty at the doors and in various other places who have been appointed by those who were chairmen of committees. In many cases they render no service to the Senator individually at all.

Mr. TURNER. I am speaking about messengers to committees, and not the general messengers of whom the Senator speaks.

Mr. BERRY. I beg the Senator's pardon. I did not so understand him.

Mr. TURNER. But even as to those messengers who are stationed in the halls and corridors and at the doors, I know, as a matter of fact, that they are enabled in many cases to be of great service to the Senator who has been accorded their appointment in the performance of his routine duties.

It is true that we have added, as the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] has said, some 20 or 21 messengers to the roll of this body, all by special resolutions like that now upon the table for consideration. Those have all gone to swell the assistance given to our friends on the other side in the performance of their duties. There are not over 10 members on the minority side who are not now given a messenger, and the amendment which I offered here—whether or not its wording accomplishes the purpose it was intended to accomplish, in view of the labor now accorded to minority Senators who have not these messengers, I am willing to make the wording specific, if it be not so already—will not, as I say, result in adding to the pay roll of the Senate over 10 additional employees, with additional compensation amounting to $720 per annum each.

It does seem to me that our friends on the other side, who are amply supplied with clerical assistance, ought not to grudge that to the minority Senators on this side, who they know are overwhelmed with the performance of their routine duties that interfere with public duties, to which they ought to be permitted to give their entire attention.

Mr. ALLISON. I am sure that the Senator from Washington does not mean to impute to me indifference because, as he said, I happened to be chairman of a committee that was amply provided with clerical force. I hope the Senator from Washington will take occasion to withdraw that remark.

Mr. TURNER. If the Senator will permit me a moment, I meant to impute nothing of the kind to him. I only said his attention had not been called to this change, which was forcibly borne upon me, and that he being the chairman of a large committee it had not affected him in anyway.

Mr. ALLISON. So far as the Committee on Appropriations is concerned, I wish to say to the Senator that the present clerk of the Committee on Appropriations has been the clerk of that committee for, I think, nearly thirty years. During the period of my chairmanship, which extends back to 1881, I think he has written for me in vacation two letters. With that exception, every moment of his time is occupied with his duties to the committee, and he spends as many hours in this Capitol as any Senator on this floor, and many more hours than most Senators. Therefore, the fact that I have a clerk to the Committee on Appropriations is of no value to me as respects all the various matters that are outside of that committee room.

I have also a messenger assigned to the committee room. The members of the Committee on Appropriations will know how much service he can be to me personally during any of the hours of the day. So the assistant clerk I have, or, rather, which the committee has, is constantly occupied during the day, at least, with matters connected with the committee.

If Senators of the minority were, as individual Senators, by any rule entitled to messengers prior to the beginning of this Congress, I am not aware of it. If the Senator from Washington, as a Senator, had a messenger prior to the beginning of this Congress, he must have had that messenger by assignment of the Sergeant-at-Arms, and not by any law or provision in any statute book which gives to an individual Senator a messenger. I know of no such statute and no such arrangement, unless the arrangement may have been made through the Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate.

Whilst saying this, I am willing, for one, that each Senator, whether of the minority or majority, shall have such force as is needed for the transaction of the public business and the incidental duties connected with the position of a Senator. But if this matter is to be pressed upon the Senate this morning, I shall move to recommit the resolution which is before the Senate, with the amendment proposed by the Senator from Washington, for further examination and consideration, so that we may be informed as to just what the situation is.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Mr. President, it will be remembered that several days ago, perhaps two or three weeks ago, there was a resolution introduced providing for the appointment of a messenger or an assistant clerk for the Committee on Coast and Insular Survey or the Committee on Coast Defenses, I do not remember which, but I think the Committee on Coast Defenses, and I felt it my duty to suggest then that we were going too fast in this matter. It was not a gracious or a pleasant thing to do, but I felt that I ought to bring the matter to the attention of the Senate. The Senate, however, seemed to take no interest in it; the resolution passed, and since then I think six or eight other resolutions of a similar character have passed, and we have this morning three or four more.

I realize, Mr. President, the fact that we are all overworked. I do not believe the country understands or begins to understand the amount of work which burdens a Senator of the United States if he attempts to discharge his full duty as a Senator. I am not opposed to having such assistance voted to Senators as will enable them properly to perform their work, but I do not think there ought to be discrimination in these matters. We can not, as it seems to me, properly vote to one Senator a messenger or assistant messenger, or a clerk or assistant clerk, and withhold such clerical force from other Senators who are just as much burdened with work. But the practice of the Senate has led to this result, that we have a clerical force, or a force of messengers and employees, which is supposed to be necessary to transact the business of the Senate and its committees. We have authorized the appointment in addition, by the resolutions which have been passed, of assistant clerks and messengers, who are to be really the private clerks of the chairmen of committees, to whom the appointments are on the face of them made. That is not fair, Mr. President, unless it is to be extended throughout the Senate.

We have had here this morning, I think, a committee appointment of a messenger or a clerk or assistant clerk to the Committee on Pacific Railroads, which we have already passed, and one to the Committee on the Geological Survey, which we have passed. Those committees are not overburdened with work. They meet seldom—very seldom—they have few bills before them. The clerks of those committees have time to devote to the personal, or public personal, business—if I may use the expression—of the chairman of the committee, a great deal more so than the clerk of the Committee on Appropriations, or the clerk of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, or the clerk of the Committee on Pensions, or the clerks of other like committees that have numerous bills before them, which engage the attention and the labor of the clerk and perhaps of the assistant clerk of the committee all the time.

Mr. President, Senators have spoken about what help they have as chairmen of committees. I trust I may be pardoned for speaking of what assistance I have. There is a clerk of the committee of which I am chairman, I have a laborer detailed at the door of my committee room as a messenger, and that is all. I think, Mr. President, that I am as much burdened with public business as perhaps any Senator. If these resolutions are to pass, there ought to be one passed for my benefit. If we are to go on and by these separate resolutions appoint for the benefit of Senators here and there clerks or messengers, who are really to be their assistants, we should go through the list, as it seems to me.

I think it is a matter that should be considered by some committee as to whether the clerical force of the Senate and the employees of the Senate are now sufficient or not, as to whether we ought to have additional appointments; that some rule should be adopted about it; that there should be no discrimination; that one Senator should not have, under the guise of appointing a messenger or a clerk to his committee, some one to help him do his public and private work here in the Senate, and another Senator, equally deserving, not have such assistance. I think the whole matter ought to be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, who should look into it and make a report as to what force we have and whether it is sufficient, and, if it is not sufficient, what we ought to have.

I think there is another thing that might well be considered by such a committee. The Sergeant-at-Arms and the Secretary of the Senate have certain duties to perform with reference to the business of the Senate. I think that their force should be entirely independent of and disconnected with appointments for the benefit and for the assistance of Senators. I do not think that, under cover of appointing people who are really supposed to belong to the force of the Sergeant-at-Arms or to the force of the Secretary of the Senate, these appointments to help Senators and enable them to perform their duties should be made.

I have prepared here hastily a resolution, which I know is not now in order, but which I wish may be read for the information of the Senate, and which I hope will pass, so that this whole matter may be considered by some committee of the Senate, and I think the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate is the proper committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection the resolution of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate be directed to consider the necessity of the present or an additional clerical force of the Senate, and to report by bill or otherwise.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I would not say a word on this subject were it not for the fact that I am a member of the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate and have had my share of trouble in connection with the matter that is under consideration.

The exact number of messengers and assistant clerks appointed by resolution during the present session of Congress is 13 messengers and 4 assistant clerks. Whether they have been needed in every case or not I am not prepared to say; but the presumption is that there was a necessity for their employment.

I have myself felt that this matter ought to be taken up by some committee and be carefully considered and arranged in a way that would be just to every Senator and that would not do injustice to the Government or to the Senate itself.

I am modest about speaking of my own committee, Mr. President. We have burdens there that we keep to ourselves, and it is well that we do. We have correspondence from every State in the Union that we have to answer, and we have a procession from morning until night, including Sunday, of people who have to be listened to. My individual work is so far behind in many respects that I sometimes despair of ever being able to catch up with it.

For three years an additional person has been employed by that committee whose name is not on the roll, but payment has been made. Yesterday the Senate in its wisdom gave that committee an additional assistant clerk. I think it was a wise thing to do, not because of any benefit it will bring to me, but because of the fact that it will enable the committee to better discharge the duties which are being pressed upon it by Senators, by Representatives in Congress, and by the general public.

Mr. President, I took occasion the other day to say that in my opinion—and I am very glad to know that the press of my State has applauded rather than condemned me for it—the pay of Senators was utterly inadequate and parsimonious. I am not myself able to pay much out of my private purse to compensate help that ought to be provided by the General Government. I have done something in that line, and I know other Senators who have done much more than I have.

When these resolutions come to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, while I have held my breath somewhat in regard to them and have mildly suggested that it was perhaps a questionable practice, yet I have not felt like denying my vote in favor of their favorable report, and they have come here and have been passed.

I have no particular remedy to suggest. Perhaps the plan which the Senator from Connecticut has embodied in his resolution will best meet the requirements of the case. If the matter goes to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate it certainly will have very careful consideration, and it is possible that we may be able to evolve some plan which will give better satisfaction to the individual members of this body, and which will give relief to many Senators who, I know, are carrying burdens that they ought not to be asked to carry.

Mr. TURNER. In view of the proposed resolution of the Senator from Connecticut, I withdraw the amendment to the pending resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Washington withdraws the amendment.

Mr. SPOONER. I understand the Senator from Connecticut will withdraw his resolution.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I did not offer it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution was not pending at all.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. The Senator may embody it in a motion, so as to make an instruction to the committee.

Mr. SPOONER. I move to recommit the resolution to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, with instructions to consider the necessity for the present or any additional clerical and messenger force of the Senate, and to report by bill or otherwise.

I desire to say a word on this subject. When, in the early part of the session, a similar resolution came before the Senate, and the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] rather objected, I felt constrained also to express the opinion that such resolutions ought to be referred to some committee which would consider the necessity for the proposed increases in the clerical force and the messenger force of the Senate, it being admitted that the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate simply considered the question whether there was sufficient money in the contingent fund to pay the additional employees.

As we are going along we are discriminating in an unfair way. As the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] has said, every Senator upon the minority side of the Senate who is not chairman of a committee has not only a secretary, but he has a laborer, who is named by him and is entirely subject to his direction. There is a measure of justice in that, and almost necessity, growing out of the fact that a good many of our Senators are stationed in the Maltby House, a good ways from the Senate, men who work very hard, who study public questions, who have occasion to send very frequently to the Library for books, and need such service. There is no doubt about that.

But what the Senator from Iowa says as to the ordinary committee messengers is true. They are a part of the force of the Sergeant-at-Arms. They are nominated ordinarily by the chairman of the committee. He appoints them. But they are in the service of the Senate.

Now, as chairman of the Committee on Rules I nominated a man as a messenger. I have no use whatever of him. He is hardly ever in my committee room, and I have never utilized him at all for any purposes of the committee, much less for any purposes of my own. That is true of other chairmen on this side of the Chamber. These men are engaged in discharging duties imposed upon them by the Sergeant-at-Arms, and they are really in the service of the Senate in fact, although technically in the service of the committee.

These resolutions which we have been passing from time to time provide for the appointment of messengers who are not to be in the service of the Senate, but who are really to be in the service of the committee, which means the members of the committee and the chairman of the committee. There is a discrimination.

I ventured to express a doubt whether it was wise to grant these messengers. I was told—and I yielded to it because it is difficult and ungracious to antagonize such a proposition—that the chairman of a committee and the committee know whether they need the messenger or not, and when a chairman of a committee, under instructions from his committee, reports that the committee needs a messenger that that ought to be taken as the end of it.

So we have gone along, as I expected we would, and have passed day after day these resolutions, and before we are through with it of course every committee will have a messenger (some of the messengers entirely subject to the control of the chairman and not in the service of the Senate, and others in the service of the Senate and having nothing to do with the committee), and the minority, not chairmen of committees, each Senator having a messenger subject to his entire direction.

I think the whole subject should be carefully investigated and revised. There is great force in what the Senator from Washington [Mr. TURNER] and other Senators have said as to the inadequacy of the clerical and other help for Senators. I try to work in the Senate and to do the duty of a Senator. I do it with one secretary. I dictate replies to my correspondence, which is voluminous, and I hardly ever get to the investigation of a public question in which there is a general public interest until after people generally have retired for the night. It is not the right way to do business. It is not conducive to the best investigation or to the best public service; and I have no hesitation whatever in saying that in the present environment and under the present circumstances, considering the incidental duties of a Senator, we are not so situated as to be able to do the service which the people expect of us and which we come here to perform, in its relation to large public matters of far-reaching consequences, which are complicated and which require the utmost care and study.

I move to recommit the resolution with instructions to the committee as I have stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator from Wisconsin send the instructions to the desk?

Mr. SPOONER. I will state them. I move to recommit the resolution with instructions to consider the necessity for the present of any additional clerical and messenger force of the Senate, and to report by bill or otherwise.

Mr. DUBOIS. Mr. President, I think we ought to be perfectly frank in discussing this question, and we ought to deal justly with ourselves.

Mr. QUARLES. Will the Senator from Idaho permit me to make a suggestion? I dislike very much to interrupt the Senator, and I venture to do so only because of the exigency in which I am placed.

Mr. DUBOIS. I can get through sooner than the Senator from Wisconsin can make his statement, if he will pardon me.

Mr. QUARLES. I appeal to Senators that under the circumstances, if there is to be further debate, it be postponed so as not to interfere with the wish of the Senate as to taking up another measure.

Mr. DUBOIS. I am a new Senator; that is to say, I am beginning a new term, and take the position of other new Senators, and necessarily in consequence have not so many burdens placed upon me as have older Senators or those in more responsible positions on committees. But I think I can safely say that there have not been seven mornings during the entire session when I have not been engaged in committee work, and I think at least one-third of the time since the session commenced I have been engaged in committee work night as well as morning.

Now, I have a laborer at $720 a year, and he is quite valuable to me; but he happens to be a young man from my own State who desired to study law, and he came here. He is a stenographer and he aids me, but he has to eke out his salary with money derived from his parents. I have no money to give him. I have nothing but my salary and could not increase his. In consequence of that I feel a delicacy in asking him to do any extra work. I want him to have as much time as possible for his law studies.

With all this work which I have, which represents the work of every Senator here who is trying to do his duty by his country and his constituents, we simply can not get along and give the proper attention to questions which come up in the Senate and about which we ought to inform ourselves. I believe, as the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] does, that we ought to increase our own salaries; but the Senate does not seem disposed to do so. I certainly think we ought to deal justly with ourselves in relation to the help we should have.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Wisconsin to recommit the resolution with the instructions which have been stated.

The motion to recommit was agreed to.

PERMANENT CENSUS OFFICE.

Mr. QUARLES. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 10308) to provide for a permanent Census Office, and for the suspension of the limitation of debate imposed by Rule VIII.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill indicated by him, and that the limitation on debate under Rule VIII be suspended. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on the Census with amendments.

Mr. QUARLES. I ask that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with and that the bill be read now for amendment, and that the committee amendments be first considered.

Mr. ALLISON. It is understood that the bill is not to be considered under the five-minute rule?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Unanimous consent was given for the suspension of the rule. The Senator from Wisconsin now asks unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, that it be read for amendment, and that the committee amendments first receive consideration. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on the Census was in section 3, line 4, page 2, before the word "dollars" to strike out "five thousand" and insert "seven thousand five hundred," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 3. That the permanent Census Office shall be in charge of a Director of the Census, appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, who shall receive an annual salary of $7,500. It shall be his duty to superintend and direct the taking of the Thirteenth and subsequent censuses of the United States and to perform such other duties as may be imposed upon him by law.

Mr. ALLISON. Are the amendments to be considered as they are reached?

Mr. QUARLES. That is the proposition which I made.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope the amendment will be passed for the present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa asks that the amendment may be passed for the present.

Mr. QUARLES. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be passed over.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment was, in section 4, page 2, line 9, to strike out "three" and insert "four;" so as to read:

That there shall be in the Census Office, to be appointed by the Director thereof, four chief statisticians, who shall be persons of known and tried experience in statistical work, at an annual salary of $2,500 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section 4, page 2, line 12, after the "thousand," to insert "eight hundred;" so as to read:

A chief clerk, at an annual salary of $2,800.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 4, page 2, line 17, to strike out "three" and insert "four;" so as to read:

Four expert chiefs of divisions, at an annual salary of $1,800.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 5, page 3, line 14, after the word "placed," to insert "without further examination;" and in line 18, after the word "appointments," to insert "to the clerical force;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 5. That all employees of the Twelfth Census Office, at the date of the passage of this act, above the grade of skilled laborer shall be, and they are hereby, placed, without further examination, under the provisions of the civil-service act approved January 16, 1883, and the amendments thereto and the rules established thereunder; and all new appointments to the clerical force in the Census Office hereby created shall be made in accordance with the requirements of the civil-service act above referred to.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the Senator from Wisconsin to agree to pass this provision by. I think there are some other amendments to be offered to the section. I do not wish to offer an amendment, but the Senator from Massachusetts indicated to me his desire to offer an amendment to this provision, and he has been called away for the time being.

Mr. QUARLES. Very well, let it be passed over for the time being.

Mr. BAILEY. Does that include the passing by of the whole section?

Mr. ALLISON. The whole section. I do not know what is the nature of the amendment to be offered by the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. BAILEY. I shall move to strike out the civil-service part of it myself.

Mr. ALLISON. The amendment to be offered by the Senator from Massachusetts may affect some of the provisions proposed to be inserted by the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HANSBROUGH in the chair). Does the Senator from Iowa desire that the entire section shall be passed over for the present?

Mr. ALLISON. The entire section.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be so ordered.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the committee was, in section 8, page 5, line 11, before the word "registration," to strike out "the" and insert "such;" in line 12, after the word "as," to insert "in the discretion of the Director," and, in line 14, after the word "detail," to strike out the words "in the discretion of the Director;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 8. That there shall be a collection of the statistics of the births and deaths in registration areas for the year 1902, and annually thereafter, the data for which shall be obtained from such registration records of such States and municipalities as in the discretion of the Director possess records affording satisfactory data in necessary detail, the compensation for the transcription of which shall not exceed 2 cents for each birth or death reported.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 10, page 6, line 11, before the word "authority," to strike out "equal" and insert "like;" so as to read:

That the special agents appointed under the provisions of this act have like authority with the enumerators in respect to the subjects committed to them under this act and shall receive compensation at rates to be fixed by the Director of the Census.

Mr. ALLISON. I should be glad to have the Senator from Wisconsin explain why the word "equal" is stricken out and "like" inserted. This is an amendment to section 17 of the act of 1899, and the word "equal" is there used.

Mr. QUARLES. The reason why that change was made was because it was suggested by some of the lawyers on the committee that the word "like" was the more appropriate legal term. It was a mere question as to which term was the more appropriate. It is not of any great importance. It was thought that the word "like" was a better and more accurate term than the word "equal."

Mr. SPOONER. Would not the word "same" be better than either?

Mr. QUARLES. Possibly so. If the Senator makes that suggestion, I am very ready to accept it.

Mr. ALLISON. The only reason why I inquired is that we seem to have gotten on very well with the word "equal" for two or three years, and I thought it might be better to retain the phraseology unless there is some special reason for abandoning it.

Mr. QUARLES. There is no special reason, Mr. President. If there is objection to it I am not tenacious about it. It was supposed that "like" was a better word.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be agreed to without objection.

Mr. COCKRELL. What is the point here?

The SECRETARY. In line 11, strike out the word "equal" and insert the word "like."

Mr. COCKRELL. "Equal" is in the old law, is it not?

Mr. ALLISON. "Equal" is in the old law. I supposed it was intended that these special agents should have the same authority as was conferred in the old law upon enumerators who had charge of the mechanical and manufacturing schedules. Of course it is not expected that these special agents will enumerate population.

Mr. QUARLES. Oh, no.

Mr. McCOMAS. As I understand, the enumerators have certain powers of visitation and inquiry, and these special agents are to have like authority. The statute gives them certain inquisitorial powers, and this gives the special agent the like power. It is not exactly the same power, but it is like power.

Mr. COCKRELL. Equal power, then?

Mr. ALLISON. Under the existing law, when it is necessary for a special agent to make an investigation, that special agent has equal power with the enumerator for the same purpose. If he has like power, it may be the same power; I am not sure. I suppose it is intended to be a similar power.

Mr. QUARLES. Yes, sir.

Mr. McCOMAS. That is it.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the law remain as it is, then.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will ask the Senator from Wisconsin if he accepts the suggestion of the Senator from Iowa and the Senator from Missouri that the word "equal" shall remain?

Mr. McCOMAS. I understand that there is no motion pending.

Mr. QUARLES. I have heard no motion made.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill and read to the end of section 11.

Mr. QUARLES. To correct the phraseology of section 11 I desire to offer an amendment. In line 11, page 7, of the printed bill, after the word "abolished," I move to insert the words "to take effect July 1, A. D. 1902."

Mr. ALLISON. I think that is a very proper amendment.

Mr. QUARLES. It is offered to carry out the real purpose of the law, and it was not clearly expressed.

Mr. ALLISON. Of course the printing could not very well be immediately transferred. I should like to have the Senator explain why it is that this important change is proposed now?

Mr. QUARLES. In regard to the printing?

Mr. ALLISON. In regard to the printing.

Mr. QUARLES. There has always been more or less friction and difficulty with the general Printing Office by reason of the fact that the Census Office had an establishment of its own, and it was thought better by the Director himself that to avoid any possible friction the whole matter of printing and binding should be handed over to the Public Printer. It was to avoid any such friction that the suggestion was made, and I think it is a very wise one. Instead of having a separate establishment and a separate roll let the Public Printer do the whole business.

Mr. ALLISON. I think perhaps that is very well. As it is now, I understand the whole of this printing is done in the Census Office.

Mr. QUARLES. Yes, sir.

Mr. ALLISON. And a very large printing establishment is now in existence there. I do not know precisely how this great transfer can be made, though I think it is wise to make it, by the date fixed, July 1, 1902. Is it expected by the Director of the Census that all the printing will be done as the law practically requires before the 1st of July, 1902?

Mr. QUARLES. Oh, that would be impossible. The law charges the Bureau with the taking of statistics that will last months longer.

Mr. ALLISON. I understand that, but the law as it stands now provides that the four volumes, which are to be the only volumes of the census, are to be printed and distributed before the 1st of July, 1902, and the investigations that are to be made hereafter are to be printed, if at all, in the form of special reports. The information I desire is whether when the printing office is turned over to the Public Printer it will be turned over with all the printing done that is required to be done by the 1st day of July next.

Mr. QUARLES. I understand that that will be the case. The Director advised me that the principal volumes will be ready for publication and circulation on or before the 1st day of July, 1902.

Mr. ALLISON. Some of them have been already issued.

Mr. QUARLES. Oh, yes; some of them have been issued.

Mr. TILLMAN. Before the Senator in charge of the bill takes his seat, I should like to make an inquiry of him.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Carolina will suspend while the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 5833) temporarily to provide revenue for the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask that the unfinished business may be informally laid aside, so that we can go on with the census bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That will be the order, in the absence of objection.

Mr. TILLMAN. I was going to say that the present Director of the Census in organizing this bureau, as far as my observation has gone, has displayed such a phenomenal grasp of the work of the office and has been so successful in carrying it on up to this time that I doubt the wisdom of getting the results of his work in a tangle with this other printing establishment. We have had a great deal of difficulty in getting some documents from there, and while I do not criticise the Public Printer, because he has been inundated, possibly, with more than he could exactly handle expeditiously, I seriously doubt the wisdom of the transfer.

The Director may have conferred with the Senator, and his judgment in the matter would govern me very much, but knowing how expeditiously and satisfactorily has been the furnishing to the public of the results of the work where he has had full control and has had no third man in the way between him and the actual workmen, I seriously doubt whether it will reduce expenses or will facilitate the transmittal of the statistical work which we are going to get.

Mr. QUARLES. If the Senator from South Carolina will permit me, I may be able to give him another reason. The taking of the census, and especially the next one, is going to be a herculean task. It is going to tax the ingenuity of the Director and the energy of the force that we have. I feel that it is very desirable, in view of that fact, to take off the shoulders of the Director every bit of labor and responsibility that we may. The organization of a large force in a printing office involves a good deal of responsibility and a great deal of time, and the Director has, of course, to organize that force and superintend the whole matter of printing.

I think it is far better, in view of the work that we are committing to the Director, to take that off his shoulders and let the Public Printer do it all, so that he will simply call upon that officer of the Government for such printing as he desires, and have that much more time and energy to devote to the legitimate work of the census.

Mr. McCOMAS. I simply want to supplement the statement of the Senator from Wisconsin in charge of the bill, and to reassure the Senator from South Carolina. The report with this bill states what the Director himself stated in my own presence. He says:

This is done—

That is, the transfer of the printing—

in accordance with the recommendation of the Director, whose experience—

In his office—

justifies him in believing that the printing of the Census Office can be done with equal economy and greater advantage at the Government Printing Office.

In relation to the suggestion of the Senator from Iowa, this section states pretty plainly what is to be done in respect of this transfer.

And the Director of the Census is hereby authorized and directed to have printed, published, and distributed, from time to time, bulletins and reports of the preliminary and other results of the various investigations authorized by law; and all of said printing and binding shall be done by the Public Printer at the Government Printing Office.

Until the 1st of July, all such works and reports, I understand, it is contemplated shall be done in the existing office, and thereafter in the Government Printing Office, where the Director says experience has shown it can be done with equal economy and to greater advantage.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not object to this transfer.

Mr. McCOMAS. I did not understand you to say so. You approve it?

Mr. ALLISON. I think it is a wise thing to do; but I did not think it wise to fix a date so that a half-completed volume or an unbound volume should be transferred from one printing office to another, even though the printing office itself was transferred. In other words, it seemed to me that if this was the proper date it should mean that these four volumes which are required to be printed by the 1st of July, 1902, should then be completed and distributed; and therefore my inquiry only went to the question of time.

Mr. McCOMAS. If the Senator will permit me before he takes his seat, it seems to me if in view of that very excellent practical suggestion, it might be well if the chairman of the committee, the Senator in charge of the bill, would consent to say "on the 1st day of July, 1902, or as soon thereafter as practicable."

Mr. TILLMAN. I am certain that a little elasticity right along there would facilitate the transfer without the friction which the Senator from Iowa suggests may occur, or rather the loss and delay.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator must see, in the line of the suggestion now made, when this work is done at the Government Printing Office it must be done under an appropriation made for the office of the Public Printer. This printing is done, as I understand it, under the general appropriation made for the Census Office. The entire expenses of the Census Office are now paid out of a lump appropriation. So, the 1st of July, if it can be done by that date, is the most convenient time to make this change, because it is the beginning of the fiscal year.

Mr. QUARLES. That is what I had in mind in suggesting that date. I do not think there is any trouble in having all those volumes printed and distributed before that time.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, I have in my hand a petition here.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. QUARLES. Certainly.

Mr. HAWLEY. It is a petition from very many of the highly respectable and learned citizens of Connecticut, saying:

The undersigned citizens of the United States respectfully pray that provision be made for such collection of statistics of and relating to marriage and divorce as shall bring the report on this subject which was made by the Department of Labor under an act of March 3, 1887, down to the latest practicable date.

Your memorialists respectfully refer to the reasons given in the petition for the original investigation and in the report thereon by the Committees of the Judiciary on pages 10 to 12 of that report as valid also in respect to a supplementary inquiry.

We would also show that the many changes in the marriage and divorce laws since 1886, the last year included in the original investigation; the work of the commissions on uniform legislation that have been created in thirty or more States and Territories; other efforts at uniformity, and especially the extensive interest now taken in the study and treatment of these subjects in our institutions of learning and elsewhere, are further reasons why this supplementary investigation should now be made.

And we would show further that many inquiries are made for this information, and that, with the exception of a very few States, the material remains uncollected and is beyond the reach of private enterprise, while it can probably be secured at comparatively small expense by the same agency that made the report of 1889.

To comply with this petition I suppose would require some amendment of the pending bill. I do not see that the statistics on divorce and marriage are included in the subjects to be considered.

Mr. QUARLES. I would call the attention of the Senator to the schedule on population.

Mr. HAWLEY. Where is that?

Mr. QUARLES. I can call the attention of the Senator to it in a moment. The enumerator is required to report as to each person enumerated, whether, single, married, widowed, or divorced.

Mr. HAWLEY. Where is that?

Mr. QUARLES. It is in the population schedule. It has been employed in taking the Twelfth Census.

Mr. ALLISON. That information is already at hand, and it has been published, or will be published by the 1st of July.

Mr. QUARLES. Certainly.

Mr. HAWLEY. I then ask that this petition be referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. ALLISON. The investigation that is mentioned here is an investigation by the Department of Labor. It was made some years ago. We have had in the Committee on Appropriations frequent petitions to make appropriation for it, which we have not done thus far; but if such an investigation should be made it should be made where the former investigation took place.

Mr. HAWLEY. The committee could attend to that.

Mr. McCOMAS. I ask the attention of the Senator from Iowa to a statement in respect of the four volumes. I am now informed that the four volumes printed this year are now, on account of greater facility, being printed in the office of the Public Printer, and of course will be there completed. This removes that difficulty in the amendment.

Mr. BATE. I should like to ask the Senator who has the bill in charge upon the question of bookmaking and printing, whether he has consulted with the Director, the head of this institution. He has had charge of it now for a year or two, and we must all concede that he organized it with much success and conducted it with a great deal of propriety. I myself would like to know whether he thought it was proper that it should go to the public printing office or whether it should be retained as an establishment under him. I would be governed greatly by him after his experience and his success in the management and conduct of that institution. I should like to know the Director's opinion upon the subject.

Mr. QUARLES. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from Tennessee that the committee have consulted the Director of the Census very fully, and if the Senator will consult the report of the committee he will see a paragraph upon that subject, wherein the committee said that this provision is in accordance with the best judgment of the Director of the Census.

Mr. BATE. I am not on the committee and have not been associated with the matter in any way so that I might know what ought to be done. I did not know that the matter had been considered in that view, and I am very glad to hear that it has been done.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. QUARLES].

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will ask the Senator from Wisconsin if the committee intend to add to the amendment which has just been adopted the words "or as soon thereafter as may be?"

Mr. QUARLES. No, Mr. President. It has been developed that that is unnecessary, and therefore I do not choose to accept it as an amendment to the amendment.

The Secretary resumed and concluded the reading of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There was an amendment passed over.

Mr. QUARLES. There were two amendments passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The first amendment passed over will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, section 3, line 3, after the words "salary of," the committee propose to strike out "five thousand" and insert "seven thousand five hundred;" so as to make the section read:

That the permanent Census Office shall be in charge of a Director of the Census, appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, who shall receive an annual salary of $7,500. It shall be his duty to superintend and direct the taking of the Thirteenth and subsequent censuses of the United States and to perform such other duties as may be imposed upon him by law.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I know it is an ungracious thing to make a suggestion in reference to salaries, and I should not make a suggestion in this instance did I not believe that this salary is larger than is necessary, if the Census Office is to be made a permanent bureau. There is no salary paid in the city of Washington so large as the salary which is proposed here outside of the salaries paid to Cabinet ministers and the judiciary.

I make this suggestion because the Committee on Appropriations many times have been pressed to increase the salaries of very high and responsible officers, and we have not felt that we ought to do it for the reason that we did not wish to take out one particular salary and make it an exception. I do not know whether this is to be a permanent bureau or not—we shall come to that in a few minutes—but it is a bureau in the Interior Department, as I understand the purpose and intent of this bill. I intend a little later on to move an amendment which will perhaps make that clear.

The highest salary paid in Washington, outside of Cabinet positions, is that paid to the officer next in rank to the Attorney-General, which is $7,000 per annum.

Mr. BAILEY. The Interstate Commerce Commissioners get $7,000.

Mr. ALLISON. Yes; the Interstate Commerce Commissioners get $7,000.

When this office was first created the salary was $6,000. Then it was increased because of the extraordinary work pressed upon the Director of the Census, and on account of the very large responsibility devolved upon him. But now this is to be a permanent establishment, to take its place with the other Government establishments in this city, and I submit that $6,000, which is the highest salary that is now paid to any officer in this city occupying a bureau position or a position under any head of a department, is sufficient. I trust the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. QUARLES], having charge of this bill, will consent to a modification of his amendment whereby this salary shall be placed at that sum. That is a thousand dollars more than any of us receive here in this Chamber, and it is, as I have said, the salary paid to only one or two people in the city of Washington outside of the Cabinet.

Mr. QUARLES. Mr. President, there were two reasons why your committee suggested this amendment. The first reason was that we considered $5,000, as the bill came to us from the other body, entirely inadequate for the service that an efficient Director of the Census was expected to perform. The second reason was that by a special act, passed after the act of 1899 had gone into force, the salary of the Director of the Census was put at $7,500. We therefore thought for these two reasons that it was incumbent upon us, or at least proper, that we should present this amendment, so that the Senate might again vote upon the proposition.

Regarding the first proposition which underlies the amendment of the committee, I beg to say I think it is agreed on every hand that we have been successful in obtaining the services of a most able and efficient Director. What is it that accounts for the great success that he has achieved in performing this work? It is his great organizing ability. It is his ability to handle a large number of employees, to systematize their work so as to get the very best effort out of every clerk in that force. That is a rare faculty; very few men possess it, and in the industrial world today the great combinations of capital are bidding for just that kind of talent far larger sums than the sum that is proposed here.

To illustrate that, a large manufacturer in my own State last summer said to me: "I have 500 men in my factory. I am now looking for a man who has peculiar organizing ability, the power to establish a system in my shops. I am willing to pay him $10,000 a year, and I can not find the man."

Mr. HAWLEY. How much are you willing to take yourself for your own wages?

Mr. QUARLES. Well, Mr. President, in reply to that suggestion, I have only this to say. This Senate should not compel even the Director of the Census to submit to the humiliation that the Representatives and Senators in this Congress have forced upon them, namely, the taking of a salary entirely inadequate to pay their ordinary current expenses, and I do not propose to impose that upon any man who has such duties to perform as the Director of the Census.

Mr. HAWLEY. I suppose he could wait a few minutes.

Mr. QUARLES. Yes; he might wait a few minutes, and we have been waiting a few minutes. If we wait until we get an increase of our salaries, we shall be very old, I am afraid.

Mr. HAWLEY. You propose to put him ahead of Senators to the extent of $2,500 a year?

Mr. QUARLES. Yes. The miserable pittance which we are getting I do not propose to compel any man of the standing of the Director of the Census to accept.

But, to return a moment to what this great manufacturer said to me. When I asked him whether $10,000 was not a large salary he said to me, "That man will save his salary two or three times a year by his organization and system." He said: "If he saves 10 cents a day in the efficiency of every man in my factory, that will be $50 a day, $300 a week, $1,200 a month, or $14,400 a year."

Mr. President, here is a man who is put in charge at times of 3,500 clerks. I contend that if he has this organizing ability which Governor Merriam has developed, he will get 10 cents a day more work out of every one of those clerks by his organization and systematic arrangement of that work. That is $350 a day and $2,100 a week, and he will more than save his annual salary in a month just by that little change in the efficiency of the employees.

Not only that, Mr. President, but you are selecting a man who, during the taking of the decennial census, is in charge of an army of 53,000 people outside of the clerical force; and think what that organizing ability will count for when you have that great force. Why, Mr. President, this salary is only a trifle, and ought not to be considered, in my judgment, for a moment, because the Director will more than save it every month. I do not believe we can get this Director to serve for $5,000 a year, because his ability is worth twice that to some industrial institution.

Mr. ALLISON. I have proposed to fix the salary at the amount received by the Director when he was first appointed.

Mr. QUARLES. That, of course, is better than the amount proposed by the House; but I still insist that $7,500, in view of the great ability and efficiency that he has demonstrated here to the satisfaction of every Member and Senator in this Congress, is none too great. But of course I shall not delay the Senate by any elaborate discussion. The Senate will fix the salary to suit itself. I hope, however, the Senate may sustain the committee, and agree to give the salary which the committee has reported.

Mr. ALLISON. I move to amend the amendment on page 2, line 3, section 3, by striking out "seven thousand five hundred" and inserting "six thousand."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa to the amendment of the committee will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, line 3, section 3, it is proposed to amend the amendment by striking out "seven thousand five hundred" and inserting "six thousand;" so as to read "who shall receive an annual salary of $6,000."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment to the amendment. [Putting the question.] By the sound the "noes" have it.

Mr. ALLISON. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MALLORY (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR]. As I do not see him present, I withhold my vote. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. PLATT of New York (when his name was called). I inquire if the Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEITFELD] has voted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that he has not voted.

Mr. PLATT of New York. I am paired with that Senator, and therefore withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. TILLMAN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM], who, I think, is absent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont has not voted.

Mr. TILLMAN. Then I withhold my vote, unless I can get an exchange of pairs.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BERRY. I desire to state that my colleague [Mr. JONES of Arkansas] is necessarily absent. He is paired with the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE].

Mr. BAILEY (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS]; and as he has not voted, I will withdraw my vote.

Mr. DUBOIS (after having voted in the negative). I inquire if the junior Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] has voted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that he has not.

Mr. DUBOIS. I have a general pair with that Senator, but under our agreement I can vote on questions which are not political if I see fit, and so I shall allow my vote to stand.

Mr. HANNA (after having voted in the negative). I am paired on political questions with the Senator from Utah [Mr. RAWLINS]. While I do not consider this a question as to which my pair should apply, I shall withdraw my vote unless I can arrange for an exchange of pairs with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] or some other Senator. Will it be agreeable to the Senator from South Carolina to make such an exchange?

Mr. TILLMAN. That is entirely agreeable to me.

Mr. HANNA. Then I will let my vote stand.

Mr. TILLMAN. Under that arrangement I am at liberty to vote, and I vote "yea."

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I inquire if the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] has voted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that he has not.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Then I take the liberty of transferring my pair with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL] to the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH], and vote. I vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 15, nays 32; as follows:

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 41) proposing an amendment to the Constitution providing for the election of Senators of the United States was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on privileges and Elections.

COMPENSATION FOR PROPERTY TAKEN BY MILITARY FORCES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 88) for the relief of parties for property taken from them by military forces of the United States, which were, on page 1, line 8, after the word "troops," to insert "at and after the surrender at Appomattox;" and on the same page, line 14, after the word "appropriated," to insert "Provided, That the expenditures under this act shall not exceed $50,000."

Mr. BATE. Mr. President, I think those amendments of the House of Representatives are proper, and I move that the Senate concur in them.

The motion was agreed to.

SPANISH TREATY CLAIMS COMMISSION.

The bill (H. R. 8586) amending the act of March 2, 1901, entitled "An act to carry into effect the stipulations of article 7 of the treaty between the United States and Spain concluded on the 10th day of December, 1898," was read twice by its title.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, yesterday the Senate passed a bill on this same subject, but it is different from the bill which has come from the House of Representatives. I ask that the House bill be now taken up, so that I may move the substitution of the bill as passed by the Senate in place of it, in order to get action by the two Houses as quickly as possible. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. SPOONER. What becomes of the Senate bill?

Mr. CULLOM. I propose to substitute that for the House bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Illinois moves to strike out all after the enacting clause of the House bill and insert the bill on the same subject as passed by the Senate.

Mr. CULLOM. The bill which we passed yesterday in the Senate in reference to the Spanish Treaty Claims Commission, giving them power to take testimony, etc., was sent to the House of Representatives. That bill was then read in full, so that Senators are familiar with it. I ask that the House bill may be read, as I believe that is necessary, and that the Senate bill be then substituted in its place.

Mr. QUARLES. I hope the Senator will not inject anything here that will cause delay in the progress of the census bill.

Mr. CULLOM. The bill will take but a moment. If it causes any discussion I will withdraw it. It is quite important that it should be passed promptly.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Illinois moves to strike out all after the enacting clause of the House bill and to insert the bill which passed the Senate yesterday on the same subject.

Mr. HOAR. I do not want to be in the least captious, but it does seem to me that it is rather bad to have a precedent by which a House bill is rejected without being read once, and an amendment substituted without being read, although, of course, the Senate bill which is proposed as an amendment has been adopted.

Mr. CULLOM. I did not ask to have the House bill acted upon without reading.

Mr. HOAR. That is what I understood.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair was alone responsible for that.

Mr. HOAR. I do not wish to be captious, but I think the Chair will see that if we do not have everything which is acted upon read once in full we shall get into trouble.

Mr. CULLOM. The bill is very short and will take but a moment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the bill as it passed the House of Representatives.

The Secretary read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 4, chapter 800, page 878, second session Fifty-sixth Congress, is hereby amended by adding thereto the following provision:

"Such rules and mode of procedure shall conform, so far as practicable, to the mode of procedure and practice of the circuit courts of the United States; and the said Commission is hereby vested with the same powers now possessed by the circuit and district courts of the United States to compel the attendance and testimony of parties, claimants, and witnesses, to preserve order, and to punish for contempt; and said Commission shall have power to compel the production of any books or papers deemed material to the consideration of any claim or matter pending therein.

"That the marshal of the United States for the District of Columbia, or his deputies, shall serve all process issued by said Commission, preserve order in the place of sitting, and execute the orders of said Commission.

"That said Commission, or any commissioner appointed by it to take testimony, is hereby authorized to appoint an officer to serve any subpœna or process issued by said Commission or commissioner."

Mr. CULLOM. Now I ask that the Senate bill which was passed yesterday, I think without objection, be substituted for the House bill which has just been read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Illinois moves to strike out all after the enacting clause of the House bill, which has just been read, and to amend by inserting the bill which was passed by the Senate yesterday, which will be read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That the Spanish Treaty Claims Commission, being a Commission created by an act entitled "An act to carry into effect the stipulations of Article VII of the treaty between the United States and Spain concluded on the 10th day of December, 1898," approved March 2, 1901, in addition to the powers vested in said Commission under and by virtue of said act, be, and is hereby, vested with the same powers now possessed by the circuit and district courts of the United States to compel the attendance and testimony of parties, claimants, and witnesses, to preserve order and to punish for contempt, and to compel the production of any books or papers deemed material to the consideration of any claim or matter pending before said Commission.

That said Spanish Treaty Claims Commission is also vested with all the powers now possessed by the circuit and district courts of the United States to take or procure testimony in foreign countries. The testimony of witnesses so taken or procured shall be given only before officials where the laws of the place of taking enforce the attendance of witnesses and provide for the punishment of persons who may be guilty of perjury before such officials. Testimony so taken may be certified by the official taking the same and returned by him directly to the Commission in Washington.

That said Commission is hereby authorized to designate any suitable person connected therewith to serve all process issued by said Commission in the District of Columbia, preserve order in the place of sitting, and execute the orders of the said Commission; and outside of the District of Columbia the writs of said Commission shall be executed by United States marshals or their deputies in their respective districts.

SEC. 2. When testimony is to be taken before any commissioner appointed by said Commission within any district or Territory, the clerk of any court of the United States for such district or Territory shall, on application of either party, or of his agent, issue a subpœna for such witness, commanding him to appear and testify before the commissioner at a time and place stated in the subpœna; and if any witness after being duly served with such subpœna, refuses or neglects to appear, or after appearing refuses to testify, not being privileged from giving testimony, and such refusal or neglect is proven to the satisfaction of any judge of the court whose clerk issues the subpœna, such judge may proceed to enforce obedience to the process, or punish the disobedience, as any court of the United States may proceed in case of disobedience to process of subpœna to testify issued by such court; and the production before such commissioner of any paper or writing, written instrument, book, or other document, may also be required in the manner prescribed in section 869 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

Mr. BURTON. I desire to inquire whether the Senate bill was considered in committee?

Mr. CULLOM. It was considered in committee and in the Senate, laid over one day, and passed yesterday.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the amendment submitted by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM].

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to vest in the Spanish Treaty Claims Commission certain powers possessed by circuit and district courts of the United States."

Mr. CULLOM. I now move that the Senate ask for a conference with the House of Representatives on the bill and amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. CULLOM, Mr. LODGE, and Mr. MORGAN were appointed.

Mr. CULLOM. I now move that a message be sent to the House of Representatives requesting the return of the bill on the same subject which passed the Senate yesterday.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Illinois that the House of Representatives be requested to return the bill on the same subject which was yesterday passed by the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

CARROLL COUNTY, GA.

Mr. CLAY. The Chair has just laid before the Senate a bill which passed the House yesterday and came to the Senate to-day. On Thursday an identically similar bill passed the Senate. The House measure is the bill (H. R. 10780) to transfer the county of Carroll from the northwestern division of the northern district of Georgia back to the northern district of Georgia of the United States district and circuit courts, and for other purposes. I ask that the House bill be now considered and passed. It is the same as the Senate bill. There is no difference at all in them. The House bill passed the House yesterday and came to the Senate this morning.

Mr. QUARLES. I hope the Senator from Georgia will not press that request at this time.

Mr. CLAY. It will not take half a minute, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. QUARLES. It interferes with the pending measure, and the time is limited.

Mr. CLAY. I will not interfere with the bill of which the Senator from Wisconsin is in charge. I withdraw the request, and merely ask that the bill be withdrawn from the committee and lie on the table. I will ask to have it taken up when the census bill is concluded. It was referred to a committee a few minutes ago.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the bill will be recalled from the committee and will remain on the table for the present.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I wish to know what has become of the census bill, under parliamentary rules. Has not the motion of the Senator from Illinois and the proceeding of the Senate displaced the census bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Illinois moved that the House be requested to return a Senate bill to the Senate.

Mr. TELLER. No; I am referring now to the census bill. It seems to me that that proceeding has suspended operations on the census bill. Of course the Senator from Wisconsin can move to take it up again. I want to keep the record somewhere nearly right, if I can. You can not have two bills before the Senate and at the same time the subject of Senatorial consideration. When the Senator from Illinois made his motion, and the Senate agreed to it, we displaced the census bill. It can only be got before the Senate by taking it up, which the Senator can have done in a half minute, and the record will be right then; but otherwise the record will be out of shape.

Mr. QUARLES. I should like to inquire of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] whether he feels tenacious about his special order at 3 o'clock. It lacks now ten minutes of 3. Would it be agreeable to the Senator to take up his special order to-morrow and allow us to proceed to-day with the census bill? If it is agreeable, I will make the proper motion.

Mr. GALLINGER. If I can have assurances that we are to have a session to-morrow, and pension bills can be given an hour immediately after the consideration of the morning business, I shall be glad to accommodate the Senator; but I must have the assurance that we are to meet to-morrow.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to have a response to my parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point of the Senator from Colorado is entirely well taken.

Mr. QUARLES. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that the census bill——

Mr. TELLER. If he does that, it will be all right.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. He asks unanimous consent that the census bill be proceeded with.

Mr. QUARLES. I simply delayed the request in order to ascertain what were the wishes of the Senator from New Hampshire.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there is no objection, the Senate will resume the consideration of the census bill. The Chair hears none.

CONSIDERATION OF PENSION BILLS.

Mr. GALLINGER. Upon the assumption that a session of the Senate will be held to-morrow, I ask unanimous consent that the order giving an hour this afternoon for the consideration of pension bills be changed, so that the hour will begin immediately after the close of the morning business to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire asks unanimous consent that the order made yesterday that the Senate at 3 o'clock to-day should consider unobjected pension bills be reconsidered, and that it be made the order for to-morrow immediately after the routine morning business. Is there objection?

Mr. SPOONER. That means, necessarily, that we shall adjourn until to-morrow when we do adjourn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It comes very near to it.

Mr. TELLER. That is what I rose to inquire about. I want to object to that.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, let the order stand.

PERMANENT CENSUS OFFICE.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10308) to provide for a permanent census office.

Mr. BAILEY. I suggest to the Senator in charge of the census bill that we can dispose of it within thirty minutes now, I think, if we would simply postpone the special order from 3 to 4 or from 3 to half past 3 o'clock.

Mr. QUARLES and others. No.

Mr. BAILEY. I see that the chairman of the Census Committee indicates that he does not concur in the opinion that the bill can be disposed of in thirty minutes.

Mr. QUARLES. I think not. Section 5 is the one most liable to provoke debate.

Mr. BAILEY. I think it ought to provoke a roll call, but I do not suppose anybody is——

Mr. GALLINGER. I will venture to suggest to the Senator from Texas, if he will permit me, that there is another special order for 4 o'clock.

Mr. BAILEY. I have just been advised of that fact. It is practically certain that we shall not get through with the bill this afternoon, and there is a matter to which I desire to call the attention of the chairman, and I think I shall make a motion touching it. I have some hesitation, because a member of the committee ought not to be seeking to amend the bill without having fairly notified the committee. I was not present when this bill was considered in committee.

Mr. LODGE. May I ask what the amendment is?

Mr. BAILEY. I am now going to indicate it.

Mr. LODGE. I want to ask the Senator if we have finished the committee amendments? I was out of the Senate Chamber.

Mr. BAILEY. We have finished all the committee amendments except those in section 5.

Mr. LODGE. I want to move an amendment to that section. I have been out. I did not know.

Mr. ALLISON. I will say to the Senator from Texas that section 5 was passed over.

Mr. BAILEY. I propose to offer an amendment to section 3, the section which was under consideration.

The present bill provides for the appointment of a Director without any term of office. My own judgment is that no appointment ought to be made except for a fixed term and at a fixed salary. This appointment is indefinite—so indefinite as to render it objectionable. When the census was a temporary matter, the work to be disposed of and the office then to be discontinued, the appointment of the Director of the Census for an indefinite time was not objectionable, because the nature of the work limited his term of office.

In accordance with that view, Mr. President, if it be in order I wish to offer an amendment. I put it in that shape because I am not sure whether the entire section was passed at that time or merely an amendment of the committee. If the entire section was passed, reserving only the committee amendment for consideration, then perhaps such a motion would not be in order.

Mr. ALLISON. Allow me to say to the Senator from Texas that every section in the bill is open to amendment by any Senator who wishes to offer an amendment. I have an amendment which I propose to offer to the first section.

Mr. BAILEY. I have served in a body where a different rule prevailed, and I thank the Senator from Iowa for informing me of the practice in this body. Then I move——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator from Texas withhold his motion for one moment?

Mr. BAILEY. Certainly.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair calls the attention of the Senator to the fact that unanimous consent was given that committee amendments should first receive consideration. Section 5 was passed by, and the committee amendment in section 5 has not been acted upon. After it shall have been acted upon, then the entire bill will be open to amendment.

Mr. BAILEY. It suits me quite as well to reserve my amendment until that stage.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read section 5, which was passed over.

The Secretary read section 5.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed to section 5 by the committee will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 5, page 3, line 14, after the word "placed" it is proposed to insert "without further examination;" and in line 18, after the word "appointments," to insert "to the clerical force:" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 5. That all employees of the Twefth Census Office, at the date of the passage of this act, above the grade of skilled laborer shall be and they are hereby placed, without further examination, under the provisions of the civil-service act approved January 16, 1883, and the amendments thereto and the rules established thereunder; and all new appointments to the clerical force in the Census Office hereby created shall be made in accordance with the requirements of the civil-service act above referred to.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment to section 5, to insert after the word "act," in line 13, the words "who are retained in the employ of the permanent census."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 3, line 13, section 5, after the word 'act,' it is proposed to insert "who are retained in the employ 'of the permanent census;" so as to read:

That all employees of the Twelfth Census Office at the date of the passage of this act who are retained in the employ of the permanent census above the grade of skilled laborer shall be, and they are hereby, placed without further examination under the provisions of the civil-service act.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, my purpose in offering the amendment is this: I entirely approve of this provision which transfers to the permanent census and there places under the classified service a body of clerks who have been trained in the census work. But there are in the Census Office at the present time 2,298 employees. The Director of the Census informs me that there will probably be about 800 retained in the permanent census, with a likelihood of a reduction to 500. That will leave 1,000 to 1,200 clerks embraced within section 5 who will be covered into the classified service, but not employed in the permanent census.

I make this statement about the number to be employed in the permanent census from what the Director told me, because the bill makes no limitation whatever. The Director of the permanent census, so far as this bill is concerned, can appoint, if he wants to, 10,000 clerks. There is absolutely no limitation whatever placed on it. It simply says such number as may be necessary for the prompt performance of the duties. Therefore I have quoted what he said to me about 500 or 800 clerks. I think myself that this very unusual proposition should be changed. I do not think it safe to create any department without some limitation on the number of clerks to be employed. But that is another point.

If 800 are to be taken into the permanent census it leaves, as I have said, about 1,200—a thousand at least—who are covered into the classified service by section 5. That seems to me to produce a great injustice to others. The annual draft from the eligible lists in this city is about six or seven hundred. Those eligibles are persons of both sexes who have passed the examinations required by the Government, and who stand at the head of the list. The 1,000 or 1,200 clerks covered in by this section, and not taken into the permanent census, will be in the classified service with a right to transfer ahead of all these eligibles. The result will be to throw over for another year a large number of men and women who have taken the examinations in good faith, and who have passed high up, and who, in the nature of things, would receive appointments.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator from Massachusetts suspend? The hour has arrived for the execution of an order of the Senate.

Mr. LODGE. I will take the floor to-morrow when the bill comes up again.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the first pension bill on the Calendar.

SEC. 13. That the right to locate, construct, own, equip, operate, use, and maintain a railway and telegraph and telephone line or lines into, in, or through the Indian Territory, together with the right to take and condemn lands for right of way, depot grounds, terminals, and other railway purposes, in or through any lands held by any Indian tribe or nation, person, individual, or municipality in said Territory, or in or through any lands in said Territory which have been or may hereafter be allotted in severalty to any individual Indian or other person under any law or treaty, whether the same have or have not been conveyed to the allottee, with full power of alienation, is hereby granted to any railway company organized under the laws of the United States, or of any State or Territory, which shall comply with this act.

SEC. 14. That the right of way of any railway company shall not exceed 100 feet in width except where there are heavy cuts and fills, when 100 feet additional may be taken on each side of said right of way; but lands additional and adjacent to said right of way may be taken and condemned by any railway company for station grounds, buildings, depots, side tracks, turnouts, or other railroad purposes not exceeding 200 feet in width by a length of 2,000 feet. That additional lands not exceeding 40 acres at any one place may be taken by any railway company when necessary for yards, roundhouses, turntables, machine shops, water stations, and other railroad purposes. And when necessary for a good and sufficient water supply in the operation of any railroad, any such railway company shall have the right to take and condemn additional lands for reservoirs for water stations, and for such purpose shall have the right to impound surface water or build dams across any creek, draw, canyon, or stream, and shall have the right to connect the same by pipe line with the railroad and take the necessary grounds for such purposes; and any railway company shall have the right to change or straighten its line, reduce its grades or curves, and locate new stations and to take the lands and right of way necessary therefor under the provisions of this act.

SEC. 15. That before any railroad shall be constructed or any lands taken or condemned for any of the purposes set forth in the preceding section, full compensation for such right of way and all land taken and all damage done or to be done by the construction of the railroad, or the taking of any lands for railroad purposes, shall be made to the individual owner, occupant, or allottee of such lands, and to the tribe or nation through or in which the same is situated: Provided, That correct maps of the said line of railroad in sections of 25 miles each, and of any lands taken under this act, shall be filed in the Department of the Interior, and shall also be filed with the United States Indian agent for Indian Territory, and with the principal chief or governor of any tribe or nation through which the lines of railroad may be located or in which said lines are situated.

In case of the failure of any railway company to make amicable settlement with any individual owner, occupant, allottee, tribe, or nation for any right of way or lands or improvements sought to be appropriated or condemned under this act, all compensation and damages to be paid to the dissenting individual owner, occupant, allottee, tribe, or nation by reason of the appropriation and condemnation of said right of way, lands, or improvements shall be determined by the appraisement of three disinterested referees, to be appointed by the judge of the United States court, or other court of jurisdiction in the district where such lands are situated, on application of the corporation or other person or party in interest. Such referees, before entering upon the duties of their appointment, shall each take and subscribe, before competent authority, an oath that he will faithfully and impartially discharge the duties of his appointment, which oaths, duly certified, shall be returned with the award of the referees to the clerk of the court by which they were appointed.

The referees shall also find in their report the names of the person and persons, tribe, or nation to whom the damages are payable and the interest of each person, tribe, or nation in the award of damages. Before such referees shall proceed with the assessment of damages for any right of way or other lands condemned under this act, twenty days' notice of the time when the same shall be condemned shall be given to all persons interested, by publication in some newspaper in general circulation nearest said property in the district where said right of way or said lands are situated, or by ten days' personal notice to each person owning or having any interest in said lands or right of way: Provided, That such notice to any tribe or nation may be served on the principal chief or governor of the tribe. If the referees can not agree, then any two of them are authorized to and shall make the award. Any party to the proceedings who is dissatisfied with the award of the referees shall have the right, within ten days after the making of the award, to appeal, by original petition, to the United States court, or other court of competent jurisdiction, sitting at the place nearest and most convenient to the property sought to be taken, where the question of the damages occasioned by the taking of the lands in controversy shall be tried de novo, and the judgment rendered by the court shall be final and conclusive, subject, however, to appeal as in other cases.

When the award of damages is filed with the clerk of the court by the referees, the railway company shall deposit the amount of such award with the clerk of the court, to abide the judgment thereof, and shall then have the right to enter upon and take possession of the property sought to be condemned: Provided, That when the said railway company is not satisfied with the award, it shall have the right, before commencing construction, to abandon any portion of said right of way and adopt a new location, subject, however, as to such new location, to all the provisions of this act. Each of the referees shall receive for his compensation the sum of $4 per day while actually engaged in the appraisement of the property and the hearing of any matter submitted to them under this act. Witnesses shall receive the fees and mileage allowed by law to witness in courts of record within the districts where such lands are located. Costs, including compensation of the referees, shall be made part of the award or judgment and be paid by the railway company: Provided, That if any party or person other than the railway company shall appeal from any award, and the judgment of the court does not award such appealing party or person more than the referees awarded, all costs occasioned by such appeal shall be paid by such appealing party or person.

SEC. 16. That where a railroad is constructed under the provisions of this act there shall be paid by the railway company to the Secretary of the Interior, for the benefit of the particular tribe or nation through whose lands any such railroad may be constructed, an annual charge of $15 per mile for each mile of road constructed, the same to be paid so long as said lands shall be owned and occupied by such nation or tribe, which payment shall be in addition to the compensation otherwise provided herein; and the grants herein are made upon the condition that Congress hereby reserves the right to regulate the charges for freight and passengers on said railways and messages on all telegraph and telephone lines until a State government or governments shall exist in said Territory within the limits of which any railway shall be located; and then such State government or governments shall be authorized to fix and regulate the cost of transportation of persons and freights within their respective limits by such railways; but Congress expressly reserves the right to fix and regulate at all times the cost of such transportation by said railways whenever such transportation shall extend from one State into another, or shall extend into more than one State; and that the railway companies shall carry the mail at such prices as Congress may by law provide; and until such rate is fixed by law the Postmaster-General may fix the rate of compensation.

SEC. 17. That any railway company authorized to construct, own, or operate a railroad in said Territory desiring to cross or unite its tracks with any other railroad upon the grounds of such other railway company shall, after fifteen days' notice in writing to such other railroad company, make application in writing to the judge of the United States court for the district in which it is proposed to make such crossing or connection for the appointment of three disinterested referees to determine the necessity, place, manner, and time of such crossing or connection. The provisions of section 3 of this act with respect to the condemnation of right of way through tribal or individual lands shall, except as in this section otherwise provided, apply to proceedings to acquire the right to cross or connect with another railroad. Upon the hearing of any such application to cross or connect with any other railroad, either party or the referees may call and examine witnesses in regard to the matter, and said referees shall have the same power to administer oaths to witnesses that is now possessed by United States commissioners in said Territory, and said referees shall, after such hearing and a personal examination of the locality where a crossing or connection is desired, determine whether there is a necessity for such crossing or not, and if so, the place thereof, whether it shall be over or under the existing railroad, or at grade, and in other respects the manner of such crossing and the terms upon which the same shall be made and maintained: Provided, That no crossing shall be made through the yards or over the switches or side tracks of any existing railroad if a crossing can be effected at any other place that is practicable.

If either party shall be dissatisfied with the terms of the order made by said referees it may appeal to the United States court of the Indian Territory for the district wherein such crossing or connection is sought to be made in the same manner as appeals are allowed from a judgment of a United States commissioner to said court, and said appeal and all subsequent proceedings shall only affect the amount of compensation, if any, and other terms of crossing fixed by said referees, but shall not delay the making of said crossing or connection: Provided, That the corporation desiring such crossing or connection shall deposit with the clerk of the court the amount of compensation, if any is fixed by said referees, and shall execute and file with said clerk a bond of sufficient security, to be approved by the court or a judge thereof in vacation, to pay all damages and comply with all terms that may be adjudged by the court. Any railway company which shall violate or evade any of the provisions of this section shall forfeit for every such offense, to the person, company, or corporation injured thereby, three times the actual damages sustained by the party aggrieved.

SEC. 18. That when in any case two or more railroads crossing each other at a common grade shall, by a system of interlocking or automatic signals, or by any works or fixtures to be erected by them, render it safe for engines and trains to pass over such crossing without stopping, and such interlocking or automatic signals or works or fixtures shall be approved by the Interstate Commerce Commissioners, then, in that case, it is hereby made lawful for the engines and trains of such railroad or railroads to pass over such crossing without stopping, any law or the provisions of any law to the contrary notwithstanding; and when two or more railroads cross each other at a common grade, either of such roads may apply to the Interstate Commerce Commissioners for permission to introduce upon both of said railroads some system of interlocking or automatic signals or works or fixtures rendering it safe for engines and trains to pass over such crossings without stopping, and it shall be the duty of said Interstate Commerce Commissioners, if the system of works and fixtures which it is proposed to erect by said company are, in the opinion of the Commission, sufficient and proper, to grant such permission.

SEC. 19. That any railroad company which has obtained permission to introduce a system of interlocking or automatic signals at its crossing at a common grade with any other railroad, as provided in the last section, may, after thirty days' notice, in writing, to such other railroad company, introduce and erect such interlocking or automatic signals or fixtures; and if such railroad company, after such notification, refuses to join with the railroad company giving such notice in the construction of such works or fixtures, it shall be lawful for said company to enter upon the right of way and tracks of such second company, in such manner as to not unnecessarily impede the operation of such road, and erect such works and fixtures, and may recover in any action at law from such second company one-half of the total cost of erecting and maintaining such interlocking or automatic signals or works or fixtures on both of said roads.

SEC. 20. That all mortgages executed by said railway company conveying any portion of its railway, with its franchises, that may be constructed in said Indian Territory, shall be recorded in the Department of the Interior, and the record thereof shall be evidence and notice of their execution, and shall convey all rights, franchises, and property of said company as therein expressed.

SEC. 21. That Congress hereby reserves the right at any time to alter, amend, or repeal this act, or any portion thereof.

SEC. 22. That any railway company which has heretofore acquired, or may hereafter acquire, under any other act of Congress, a railroad right of way in Indian Territory may, in the manner herein prescribed, obtain any or all of the benefits and advantages of this act, and in such event shall become subject to all the requirements and responsibilities imposed by this act upon railroad companies acquiring a right of way hereunder. And where the time for the completion of a railroad in Indian Territory under any act granting a right of way therefor has expired, or shall hereafter expire, in advance of the construction of such railroad, or of any part thereof, the Secretary of the Interior may, upon good cause shown, extend the time for the completion of such railroad, or of any part thereof, for a time not exceeding two years from the date of such extension.

SEC. 23. That an act entitled "An act to provide for the acquiring of rights of way by railroad companies through Indian reservations, Indian lands, and Indian allotments, and for other purposes," approved March 2, 1892, so far as it applies to the Indian Territory, and all other acts or parts of acts inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed: Provided, That such repeal shall not affect any railroad company whose railroad is now actually being constructed, or any rights which have already accrued; but such railroads may be completed and such rights enforced in the manner provided by the laws under which such construction was commenced or under which such rights accrued.

His grandfather, Mahlon, was born in Chester County, and was a potter by occupation and a prominent member of the Society of Friends. His father, Clarkson, was also a native of Chester County, and was engaged in agricultural pursuits.

Clarkson Brosius was a splendid type of the antislavery social-reform agitators, and did much to mold the sentiment of the North in the exciting political events that marked the period prior to the outbreak of the civil war, and young BROSIUS absorbed all of the patriotic spirit of his father. His early days were spent on a farm, but he grasped every opportunity to procure such education as was afforded by the neighboring schools. In November, 1861, being a student at Chestnut Hill Academy and 18 years of age, he enlisted as a member of Company K, Ninety-seventh Pennsylvania Infantry, under Capt. William Wayne, a grandson of Gen. Anthony Wayne. The regiment saw hard service, and returned in March, 1864, with only one-third of the original muster left. Subsequently the regiment was assigned to Gloucester Point, and it was in the engagements at Green Plains and Bermuda Hundred. In this battle Mr. BROSIUS was a sergeant and received the wound that ever afterwards prevented him from raising his right arm. Years after, one of the field officers of his regiment paid him this tribute:

His record is linked and written with the Ninety-seventh Regiment, on whose roll his name was subscribed in 1861. Its history is his history, and its fame is his fame, and its glorious deeds are the sum of the faithful and brave deeds of the men who, with him, went forth at the call of this country to battle for the preservation of the nation. Among the most earnest and yet quiet and unobtrusive in all his actions was MARRIOTT BROSIUS. From the day of his enlistment in the service until stricken down by the bullet of the enemy, he was ever at his post of duty, active and vigilant as a sentinel, brave and courageous in the line of battle. He was regarded as a model soldier, as well from the force of culture that indicated the perfect gentleman, as from the exact fulfillment of duty that indicated the trained veteran and soldier.

Upon returning home after the war, Mr. BROSIUS resumed his studies at the Millersville Normal School, where he remained until 1867. He then taught school in Chester County for a short time, and finally returned to Lancaster to read law with Hon. Thomas E. Franklin, ex-attorney-general of the State. Later he entered the law department of the University of Michigan at Ann Arbor, and graduated with honors in 1868. In the same year he was admitted to the Lancaster bar, and soon gained a fine reputation as a lawyer. He early became known as an orator of high attainments. As a public speaker he attracted and impressed his audiences by his commanding presence, his distinct elocution, and his polished rhetoric. In the early days of the temperance movement he received from the Order of Good Templars an offer of the position of State lecturer of the organization, being recommended for this position by the poet George W. Bungay, who had been much impressed by his speeches. He performed this arduous work with fidelity, and his services were in constant demand. He gradually acquired a national reputation as a speaker. He delivered memorial addresses at the national cemeteries at Antietam, at Gettysburg, and at Arlington. He addressed many prominent political clubs in New York and Chicago, and made numerous Grand Army of the Republic, Decoration Day, literary, and political speeches. In 1893 Ursinus College conferred upon him the honorary degree of LL. D.

In 1882 Mr. BROSIUS was a delegate to the Republican State convention. The Republican party of Pennsylvania was at that time torn asunder by factional strife. Mr. BROSIUS received the nomination from the convention as Congressman at large, but was defeated, with the rest of the Republican State ticket, at the election. In 1888 he was nominated and elected a Representative in Congress from the Tenth district, and he was reelected for every term since that date, his last term, his seventh, establishing a record without an equal in the district. As a member of Congress, Mr. BROSIUS, by reason of his eloquence, his ability, and his industry, soon acquired a prominent position. In the Fifty-first Congress he was a member of the Committee on Agriculture, and immediately took an interest in measures of special importance to his agricultural constituents. He was also a member of the Committees on the Militia and on Private Land Claims, and with great industry he took up and discussed before the House questions of pensions, the tariff, silver, and immigration. In the Fifty-sixth Congress, during which the present currency act became a law and the gold standard was adopted, he was the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency.

As a representative of Lancaster County Mr. BROSIUS was earnest and conscientious. He was endowed with high personal character and possessed the love and respect of his constituents to a marked degree. At the time of his death he was perhaps the best known citizen in his district, at home and abroad. He was patriotic, eloquent, and conscientious to a preeminent degree.

Hon. J. Hay Brown, one of the justices of the supreme court of Pennsylvania, thus spoke of him at a meeting of the members of the Lancaster bar held to pay tribute to the memory of Mr. BROSIUS:

The virtues of our dead friend and brother have been justly extolled by those who have spoken, and it is not needful that I should longer dwell upon them. But if I do not speak of them it is not because any other man's appreciation of them was higher. In every relation of life he was exemplary, and from the beginning to the end he was pure and his hands were clean. His good qualities ought to be remembered here and recalled from time to time in order that they may be emulated. As a citizen, soldier, lawyer, statesman, husband, and father he was pure, brave, successful, able, affectionate, and God-fearing. More than this can not be said of mortal being, and though he fell at his work when the rays of the day's sun were still shining upon him, and before the shades of eventide had gathered about him, his life was not lived in vain.

The Tenth district, which Mr. BROSIUS so long represented in Congress, embraces the county of Lancaster, which is one of the richest and most fertile sections of Pennsylvania, if not of the whole United States. There is no finer agricultural land in the world than Pequea Valley. The limestone land in Donegal, Hempfield, and Manor is equally fertile. There is not another county in the State possessing such an amount and variety of the sources of natural wealth, and none where these resources have been more industriously developed. Beginning in the year 1710 the county was rapidly settled by a large immigration of Scotch-Irish Presbyterians and Germans from the Palatinate. These Scotch-Irish and Germans are recognized as being the two most important elements in the settlement of our country.

In Lancaster County particularly the Germans, by their thrift, intelligence, enterprise, and industry, developed the agricultural and mineral resources of the county with extraordinary success, and great and flourishing communities have been built up. James Buchanan and Thaddeus Stevens are counted among the many distinguished sons of Lancaster County. It is doubtful whether there is another county which can boast of as many wealthy and well-to-do farmers, or of as many thriving and progressive communities.

The State of Pennsylvania has lost an eloquent and distinguished Representative. We, his colleagues, lament the death of an esteemed associate, and we extend to his family our sincere sympathy in their great bereavement.

Mr. MCCOMAS. Mr. President, the Lancaster district of Pennsylvania has been aptly characterized by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] who has just taken his seat as a country of marvelous richness, inhabited by a sturdy people—the Scotch-Irish and the German elements. And down that broad valley—through the Cumberland Valley—to the western end of my own State flowed this immigration of Germans and Scotch-Irishmen, reaching the gates of the mountains on their way toward the winning of the West.

This Lancaster population is very like my own country, and with this came certain intercommunication which in a measure obliterated State lines and made general intelligence and knowledge of the men in one section well known in the other. Thus during my lifetime I have seen somewhat and heard much of that sturdy people who made up the typical district which was represented so long, so ably, so conscientiously by my personal friend, MARRIOTT BROSIUS.

It has been a fortunate district, the Senator has just said. I first remember its Representative when in my youth I saw carried into this Chamber in a great chair that leader of leaders, Thaddeus Stevens, when, though broken in health, with unbroken will, as one of the managers of the House of Representatives, he appeared here in the impeachment trial of President Andrew Johnson.

In those, his declining days, with grim humor he would ask the stalwart young men who were carrying him upstairs: "I wonder, boys, who will carry me when you are dead and gone?"

He lived and died with unabated powers of leadership, and the people of Lancaster until his death followed his fame, were proud of his career, and never faltered in the support and confidence they extended to their great Representative.

He was followed by a man of quite a different type, but of splendid characteristics, the Hon. A. Herr Smith, who served for ten years in the House of Representatives, with ability, zeal, and confidence, the same sturdy and sterling people in the beautiful land of splendid farms, cozy villages, and great towns of Lancaster County. It was a compact, unique district, characterized as regards the people to a degree equaled by few Congressional districts in the country by fidelity to the Representative of their choice. I served for years with Mr. Smith, who was years ago gathered to his fathers.

There came after him in the Fifty-first Congress, one of the most exciting and tempestuous in our recent history, an interesting character. I remember when he came. His name attracted my attention. Only a year or two before I had heard some of those present at the Antietam Cemetery, when Mr. BROSIUS delivered the oration of which the Senator from Pennsylvania has just made mention, speak with marked praise and strong commendation of his eloquent and pleasing address.

From that unconscious telegraphy between that section of Pennsylvania and the western end of my own State I had known his name quite long, and this incident was fresh in my memory; and when this tall, vigorous, lithe, sinewy, and graceful person appeared on the floor of the House of Representatives he easily drew my attention. In the chance of location we sat near by each other, and one of those intimacies which are formed under this roof and under that roof yonder from propinquity in the Chamber or on committees arose, and MARRIOTT BROSIUS and I were good friends from that time forth.

I knew him well. I sought his society. I saw very much of him after I left the House, in which he remained so long in such useful service, and he always grew in my regard, while on my part there was increasing admiration for his conscientious devotion to public duty and his clean, manly personality. He was modest, studious, a man who toiled terribly. He was a rhetorician, but quite logical and clear. He was an orator by nature. He was a lawyer of large acquirements. He had learned to "scorn delights and live laborious days." Much of the frivolity of life was far removed from him by reason of early poverty, by his temperament, and a devotion to his family throughout his busy life.

We were such good friends that I, who then represented one of the very close districts in the House of Representatives, could freely call upon my friend MARRIOTT BROSIUS to help me in my contests, which were earnest. He was everywhere, by reason of his reputation throughout the country as an orator, sure to gather a crowded hall, large audiences, to charm them by his manliness, his sincerity, his noble gift of speech, and to sway them by his oratory. Though in great demand everywhere throughout the country, my old friend always remembered to give me such help, ready, loyal, cordial, and willing, as I asked, and to help me with his influence on the hustings.

Not only did he serve the principles he advocated in his own and neighboring States, but far and wide throughout the country, in many campaigns, MARRIOTT BROSIUS was an orator sought after, listened to, and urged again to come. He advocated principles which he conscientiously believed. Thus, from long service of years in the House, he had come to realize ever more clearly and to see ever more widely the impress which his intellect and his character made upon the House and thereafter upon the country.

For such a man to die at 58 years of age was a loss, almost a calamity, to his district and a great loss to his country—after he had won his place in the front rank among his peers, after he had so recently, as chairman of Banking and Currency, linked his name in our history with a great struggle for a sound currency and had so honorably and manfully fought for the triumph of a standard of value in which he honestly believed the prosperity of his country was greatly concerned—a standard which the world now widely accepts. It was indeed a great misfortune to lose such a man in the very prime of his powers and his public usefulness.

The Quaker lad at the country store; the soldier boy in the fresh, new uniform, smiling, and yet almost tearful, adventurous, looking back, and yet eager to march to the front; turning from home, from father, from mother, brothers and sisters, to follow the flag he had been taught to love, putting aside the pacific teachings of the Quaker sect; going at the call of Lincoln early in 1861; the wounds suffered amid the terrible carnage of a bloody charge; a brave young soldier falling when the flag of his country had just been planted on the field of victory; the camp hospital, the fevers, the constant and yet the heroic suffering; the march home again, stricken and wounded, when war was over; the years of care and self-nursing; the memory and the pain of those wounds in battle; the busy years of a lawyer's life; caring for a young family; the life of love at home—and oh, how he delighted to think of it and to talk of it; the triumphs of the orator; the campaigns; the national struggles over great issues; the crowded halls, the long journeys, the victory, then the great Hall of Representatives; the ceaseless cares and labors of the Congressman and the heavy responsibilities undermined the strong constitution broken down by those wounds and lessened his vitality as his fame grew wider and wider. Then the collapse, the mourning at home and throughout the country for MARRIOTT BROSIUS, and those deeper and never-ending griefs of his dearest ones for which there is no solace.

This was a typical American leader and statesman, and suggests a faint outline of a noble life. Happy the country which can produce many such men! Happy the country that, preeminent among many such men, it enjoyed the lifetime services, as a youth in war, in manhood in civil life, of such an American statesman as MARRIOTT BROSIUS!

But for myself I mourn more for the man, brave and modest, magnetic, always of even temper, with great personal charm, a man of a logical and strong mind, and yet full of imagination and poesy, a political leader who was still more a scholar and thinker.

I recall with mournful satisfaction the good friend, the strong lawyer, the lover of learning, and, even better, one who, loving learning, still better loved his country, his home, and his family, and I sincerely mourn the departure of such a man from his place in the House of Representatives.

MARRIOTT BROSIUS was as pure as he was brave and manly. There was no malice in him. He was strong in conviction, firm in purpose, placid, yet ever pertinacious. He was not guileful. There was, as I have said, a personal charm that won confidence and friendship.

Within twenty years I have seen both ends of the Capitol, this Senate and that House yonder, reconstructed. Many hundreds whose words and deeds held the public attention, and deserved to hold it, have gone the way of death. Others succeeded; others will still follow them. The world belongs to those who come last. Few will live longer in the affectionate remembrance of their fellows than will MARRIOTT BROSIUS in the memory of his friends. This strong and good man, this true American and public servant, without stain, a hero, a patriot, has passed to his reward.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, it is a comforting thought that—

> It is not all of life to live,
> Nor all of death to die.

That in this life we may reasonably look beyond for something better, and that when death comes we may confidently accept the words of Kant, and say, "The other world is not another place, but another view;" or, as another has said, "Death is not the end of life, but an event in life."

Mr. President, MARRIOTT BROSIUS was my friend, and the few words that I shall speak to-day will be uttered simply as a tribute of friendship, leaving to others the recital of his public career as an honored representative of the great State of Pennsylvania, which Commonwealth he so long served with distinguished fidelity and acknowledged ability.

For six years it was my privilege to live under the same roof with Mr. BROSIUS, and thus to observe him in his daily walk and conversation. During all that time I never knew him to speak a harsh word or to utter a sentence that might not have been spoken in any presence. He was a genial, kind-hearted, broad-minded, generous man—a Christian gentleman in the truest sense of the term. A tender husband, a loving father, a patriotic and high-minded citizen, a loyal friend—what better tribute can be paid to his memory? How well I remember his cordial greeting, his helpful words, his bright and witty sayings. In his presence there was constant sunshine; in his soul, perpetual tenderness and love.

Mr. BROSIUS was simple and democratic in his tastes, yet he was a true aristocrat, the manifestations of which are integrity, courtesy, and honor. So far as I know, he had the respect and confidence of all with whom he came in social or official contact. His cheerfulness was contagious, his courtesy unvarying, and his sense of honor beyond criticism. If he ever was misunderstood or misrepresented, he gave answer in kind words and in a life fashioned upon generous lines and high ideals. He was a sincere man. There were no shams or hypocrisies in his nature. What he professed to believe he believed with all his heart. He lived above the little meannesses and frivolities of life, with aspirations for better things than the husks and follies of this world.

At his home and throughout his Congressional district he was trusted and loved by all classes, and in the performance of his public duties was beyond criticism, being patient, consistent, and honest in all things. He attended promptly to all the little matters that come to a man in public life, and at the same time did not neglect the larger affairs of legislation and statecraft, paying special attention to the great questions of currency and finance. He was a friend of the deserving poor, an ardent sympathizer with the soldiers of the country, of which he was one, carrying through life the proof of his service in a badly crippled arm. He was loyal in his friendships, popular among his associates, eloquent in debate, and enthusiastic in the advocacy of any cause in which he became thoroughly enlisted. In short, Mr. BROSIUS was a well-rounded and thoroughly self-poised man, whose service to the country, both in peace and war, will not be forgotten, and whose memory will be held in tender remembrance by all who were privileged to enjoy his friendship. He was withal a true American, deeply interested in the educational and moral progress of State and nation. Such men shed luster on the institutions of our country, and greatly contribute to the welfare and advancement of all classes of our people.

Mr. President, on a bleak and dreary day I stood by the open grave of my friend. A great concourse of people had come from far and near to testify, by their presence and their tears, the loss that they had sustained. The beautiful home was crowded with men and women who felt that they had sustained a personal loss; and when all that was mortal of MARRIOTT BROSIUS had been consigned to the tomb, in a spot from which a great sweep of hill and valley delights the eye, a solemn hush fell upon all, and the voice of grief came up from many hearts in audible expression. And then to some of us came the beautiful words of dear Phillips Brooks:

> If we could only know * * * the presence of God into which our friend enters on the other side, the higher standards, the larger fellowship with all his race, and the new assurance of the personal immortality with God; if we could know all this, how all else would give way to something almost like a burst of triumph as the soul that we loved went forth to such vast enlargement, to such glorious consummation of its life.

Mr. President, in that wonderful lecture of Ruskin's on "The Mystery of Life" are to be found the loftiest and grandest sentiments that should govern and control the human will—the subordination of evil, and the cultivation of the pure, the noble, and the true. Our friend lived up to that standard. The Golden Rule was his watchword, and the principles of the Christian religion his guiding star. Thus living and thus dying, may it not truthfully be said of him:

> Life's race well run,
> Life's work all done,
> Life's victory won,
> Now cometh rest.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, upon a sudden request, with which my heart bids me to comply, I rise to speak a few unstudied words in tribute to the memory of MARRIOTT BROSIUS.

I esteemed and shall always esteem it an honor that I knew him and was admitted to his friendship. He possessed in more than an ordinary degree the qualities which compel not only respect but admiration and which invited confidence.

He realized, as a member of Congress, that this is a great people, a great Government, with vast, far-reaching, and complicated interests which can only be conserved by the wise solution of troublesome problems demanding the utmost fidelity, investigation, and thought.

I speak no perfunctory word when I say of Mr. BROSIUS that I believe no man ever came into the legislative service of this country with higher aspirations and a nobler purpose to bear every burden which public life could possibly put upon one than did he. He was essentially a strong man, a rugged man, educated—finely educated, Mr. President—mainly, I have thought sometimes, in the rough school of life and experience in contact with the world, in the last analysis the finest school after all.

He was a man brave in every way. He was brave as a soldier, and he bore through life, without secret repining or open complaint, pain from wounds received in battle under the flag which he loved.

He was as brave in private life and in public life as he was as a soldier under the flag. No duty appalled him. He never shrank from any responsibility, and it is a great thing to be able to say of one that when his day is done, when he has gone to rest, he shrank from the performance of no duty, that his career was a lofty one, and an honorable one, and that in it and through it he left an impress upon the institutions and the legislation of his country which never will be forgotten.

I agree with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. MCCOMAS], although his opportunity of accurate knowledge and judgment was far better than mine, in his statement that Mr. BROSIUS was a natural orator. I have listened to him sometimes with rapt and intense eagerness and interest. He was a man of pleasing, aye, fascinating personality. He was a lover of literature. He was a student of books, a man of exquisite taste, who had ready always for his use the riches of the best literature.

He was a fine lawyer, as I had opportunity more than once to know. He was very jealous of the commercial honor, as he deemed it, of the United States, and a more indefatigable and assiduous laborer in public life and in the public interest I have not met.

Mr. President, it was with a shock of pain that I learned of his death. It came to him, as it might have come to him upon the field of battle, without premonition or warning. It is not a bad way to die for one who is prepared to die, and MARRIOTT BROSIUS was prepared to die. It is true, as has been spoken of him by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE], that in his death Pennsylvania lost one of the noblest of her citizens and the country lost one of the bravest, truest, most faithful and patriotic of public servants.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the resolutions.

The resolutions were unanimously agreed to; and under the third resolution, the Senate (at 4 o'clock and 58 minutes p. m.) adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, February 15, 1902, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, February 14, 1902.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read.

CORRECTION OF THE JOURNAL.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. Speaker, I desire that the Journal of Wednesday last may be corrected. When the vote was taken on the motion to recommit the oleomargarine bill I was in my seat and voted "no." I am reported as not voting. I desire to have the Journal corrected.

The SPEAKER. Without objection the correction of the Journal will be made as requested.

There was no objection.

The Journal as amended was then approved.

ADJOURNMENT UNTIL MONDAY NEXT.

Mr. PAYNE. I move that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Monday next; and pending that, I wish to give notice that on Monday I shall call up the bill for the repeal of the war-revenue taxes.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. PAYNE, it was agreed to.

ADDITIONAL COPIES OF UNITED STATES STATUTES, ETC.

Mr. MCCLEARY. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MCCLEARY], the chairman of the Committee on the Library, asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 134.

Resolved, That the Superintendent of Documents be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to issue to the library of the House, for use in said library, 25 copies of volume No. 30 of the United States Statutes at Large, and 25 copies each of Supplement to the Revised Statutes of the United States, volume No. 2, parts 1 to 5, inclusive, and Supplement to the Revised Statutes of the United States, volume No. 2, part 6.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to consider the resolution, which was adopted.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SULLOWAY. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of business on the Private Calendar under the rules.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union (Mr. LACEY in the chair), and proceeded to the consideration of business on the Private Calendar under the rules.

JOHN W. TAYLOR.

The first business was the bill (H. R. 9161) granting an increase of pension to John W. Taylor.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John W. Taylor, late of Company F, Second Regiment Tennessee Mounted Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Chairman, I notice that on this Calendar we have 267 or 268 bills, and that two-thirds of them are for increase of pensions. I ask unanimous consent that we first consider bills granting original pensions, before taking up those proposing to grant increase of pensions. It seems to me it would be just and right to give pensions to those who have not had any pensions at all in preference to those who are already drawing a certain allowance, for they can wait to have their pensions increased better than those who have no pension at all. I hope there will be no objection to this request.

Mr. SHATTUC. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made to the request. The question is on laying aside the bill with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Chairman, I would ask that the report be read, so that we may see what we are doing in the premises.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks that the report be read in his time.

Mr. GIBSON. I will ask the gentleman if a statement will not do?

Mr. TALBERT. I will be perfectly satisfied with a short statement.

Mr. GIBSON. The bill was introduced by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] on the other side of the House, and the proof before the committee shows that this soldier served from September, 1862, to June, 1863, and he afterwards served from January, 1864, until March, 1865, when he was mustered out as captain. He is totally disabled, and the bill only gives him $12 a month.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to take up any time of the House, but I have two affidavits here in support of the bill that I desire to have inserted as a part of my remarks.

There was no objection.

The affidavits are as follows:

STATE OF TENNESSEE, County of Perry, ss:

In the matter of John W. Taylor's military service while with Company E, Sixth Tennessee Cavalry.

Personally came before me, a county court clerk in and for the aforesaid county and State, W. O. Averett, aged 61 years, citizen of the town of Linden, county of Perry, State of Tennessee, well known to me to be reputable and entitled to credit, and who, being duly sworn, declares in relation to aforesaid case as follows:

That he was first sergeant of Company E, Sixth Tennessee Cavalry; that said Taylor was enrolled in said company September 18, 1862; that said Taylor remained with the company for about nine months, and did faithful service without receiving any pay, not having been mustered into service. From some cause the regiment was unable to procure muster until some months after said Taylor left the command, that, not being mustered into service, none could draw pay, which created much dissatisfaction. Affiant does not say why said Taylor left, but does not believe he intended to desert the service, as he recruited a company soon after leaving under authority of Andrew Johnson, who was then military governor of Tennessee.

Affiant further declares that he has no interest in said claim, and is not concerned in its prosecution.

W. O. AVERETT.

Sworn to and subscribed before me this day by the above-named affiant, and I certify that I read said affidavit to said affiant, and acquainted him with its contents before he executed the same. I further certify that I am in no wise interested in said case, nor am I concerned in its prosecution, and that said affiant is personally known to me; that he is a credible person and so reputed in the community in which he resides.

Witness my hand and official seal this 4th day of February, 1902.

[SEAL.] M. A. TUBBS, County Court Clerk.

STATE OF TENNESSEE, Perry County:

In the matter pertaining to the military service of John W. Taylor, while with Company E, Sixth Tennessee Cavalry.

Personally appeared before me, county court clerk in and for the aforesaid county and State, W. C. Webb, aged 61 years, a citizen of Linden, Perry County, Tenn., well known to me to me to be reputable and entitled to credit, and who, being duly sworn, declares as follows:

That he was first lieutenant of Company E, Sixth Tennessee Cavalry, afterwards captain of Company G, Sixth Tennessee Cavalry; that he enrolled the said John W. Taylor to serve in said Company E, September 18, 1862; that said Taylor remained with the company for about nine months and did faithful service without receiving any pay, having never been mustered into the service.

From some unknown cause the company and regiment was unable to procure their muster until months after the said John W. Taylor had left the command, but our muster finally came and was dated back prior to the time said Taylor left, and doubtless the records show (but affiant does not now remember) that said Taylor was mustered into Company E, Sixth Tennessee Cavalry, when in deed and in truth he was not.

Being unable to draw any pay in consequence of not having been mustered was creating some dissatisfaction in our regiment at the time said Taylor left the command. I do not pretend to say why he left, but it is evident that he did not leave with the intention of desertion from the service of the United States, as he obtained authority from Andrew Johnson, the military governor of the State of Tennessee, to recruit a company and capture all marauding bands of rebels he might find, and my information at the time was that he was doing valuable service, as above authorized, as early as in the fall of the year 1863.

Affiant further declares that he has no interest in said claim.

W. C. WEBB.

Sworn to and subscribed before me by the above-named affiant, and I certify that I am in no wise interested in this matter, and that said affiant is personally known to me that he is a credible person.

Witness my hand and seal this 4th day of February, 1902.

[SEAL.] M. A. TUBBS,
County Court Clerk.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

CATHARINE MOORE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 890) granting a pension to Catharine Moore.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Catharine Moore, late nurse, Medical Department, United States Volunteers, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

JOHN L. SMITH.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7144) granting an increase of pension to John L. Smith.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John L. Smith, late of Company A, Eleventh Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $17 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

Strike out all of lines 6, 7, 8, and 9 and insert in lieu thereof the following: "of John L. Smith, late of the Twentieth Battery Indiana Volunteer Light Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $14 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

WILLIAM M. GUY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2547) granting an increase of pension to William M. Guy.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of William M. Guy, late of Company C, Sixty-sixth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out the word "thirty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty-four."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

JACOB D. CALDWELL.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7823) granting an increase of pension to Jacob D. Caldwell.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Jacob D. Caldwell, late of Company E, One hundred and thirty-fourth Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension of $50 in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 7, before the word "Indiana," insert the word "Regiment."

In line 8 strike out the words "of fifty dollars" and insert in lieu thereof the words "at the rate of $40 per month."

Mr. LONG. Mr. Chairman, I hope the second amendment, reducing the rate from "fifty" to "forty" dollars a month will not be adopted. The report of the committee clearly shows that the pensioner is entitled to an increase to $50 a month, and I am informed that there is no objection from the committee to the amendment being rejected.

Mr. CALDERHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I am familiar with the case, as I made the report. The committee was entirely satisfied that this man's paralysis was the result of injury to his spine. The Bureau of Pensions admitted that the injury to the spine was incurred in the service, but for some reason or other it does not admit that the paralysis is the result of the injury to the spine. The committee believes it was. The committee will not insist upon the amendment.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. I understand the committee to be content if the committee amendment be voted down.

Mr. CALDERHEAD. It will.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the first amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 7, after the word "thirty-fourth," insert the word "regiment."

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is now upon the second amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 8 strike out the words "of fifty dollars" and insert "at the rate of $40 per month."

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. CALDERHEAD. Division!

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 16, noes 49.

So the amendment was rejected.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

AARON C. BADGER.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 9670) granting an increase of pension to Aaron C. Badger.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Aaron C. Badger, late of Company A, Fifteenth Regiment New Hampshire Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to know if I can be recognized for the purpose of debate on this measure.

The CHAIRMAN. Certainly; that is in order.

Mr. WHEELER. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WHEELER. I do not desire to debate this bill, but I should like to have a few moments to discuss another subject. I do not care to be interrupted in what I desire to say, and unless I can proceed without interruption for, say, ten or fifteen minutes, I do not care to proceed.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent that he may proceed at this time to speak, without being confined to the bill, for fifteen minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. CALDERHEAD. Do I understand the gentleman to say that he does not desire to discuss this bill?

Mr. WHEELER. I do not desire to debate the bill. I simply desire to take advantage of this opportunity to submit some remarks on another subject.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. For what time?

Mr. WHEELER. Not exceeding fifteen minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky is recognized for fifteen minutes.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I have read with lively interest the recent exposure and criticism in the press upon the attitude of Great Britain and the other foreign powers toward the Republic during the war of 1898, and I think it not inopportune to call the attention of the country to the attitude of the present Administration not only at that time, but now. Divisions of public sentiment among the people of the United States are to be desired.

I suppose no man would desire every citizen of the Republic to concur upon any great measure. It is the salvation of our system of government that there is a division of opinion among the people of this country; but until the inauguration of the President in 1896 there was never any division of sentiment upon one great question, and that was the splendid isolation of the Republic and its fixed determination to hold aloof from all entangling alliances with foreign powers.

Less than five years ago the most sacred traditions of the Republic were disregarded. The belief and fixed judgment of well-nigh every patriotic citizen was overturned, and for the first time we witnessed a President of the United States, aided and egged on by a pitiable flunky in the State Department, stretching his arms across the water to embrace the historic enemies of the American people.

From that good hour until now we have made ourselves a laughing stock at every court in Europe because of our flunkyism, our truculency, and the disgraceful sycophancy of the representatives of the Republic at the feet of Great Britain; and now, when it serves the purpose of some other great nation, the pitiable spectacle is presented, not only to the liberty-loving people of the Republic, but to the world, that we have been hugging to our bosom during the last five years a nation that has systematically and persistently attempted to destroy the liberties of the American people since the battle of Yorktown.

We find now that, despite the fact that the present Administration is afraid, even in the face of its great majority, to ask an appropriation of $60,000 or $100,000 to pay some shoulder-strapped, gold-laced flunky to cross the water and bow the knee and kiss the hand of some English king; that while this very pitiable spectacle is being presented to us, in every newspaper of the Republic it is being heralded abroad that in 1898, when we were seeking to strike the shackles of serfdom from off the heels of Cuba, that nation was then secretly in our own capital attempting to form a coalition of the great powers of the world to prevent that interposition.

And it has not caused a ripple in diplomatic circles. It has been the boast of America, diplomacy to the contrary notwithstanding, that when our State Department said no we meant no, and when we said yes we meant yes. It remained for the present and the just closed Republican Administration to inaugurate a system of European diplomacy, with a kid-gloved, velvet-tongued gentleman, who has to travel out of his way to find a response to a plain categorical question.

We are destroying the integrity and the pride and the intelligence and the honesty of that great department of the Government. I have a respect for the present occupant of the White House. I frankly avow I think he is too honest to be palatable to the average Republican partisan. A little quixotic, it is true, hasty tempered, full-blooded, and not exactly desirable to many of his party. But I indulged the hope that the lingering element of Americanism would induce him at the first opportunity to boot out that man in the State Department who, in my humble judgment, has brought us to this humiliating condition.

England a friend of the United States! I would to God she were; but what a spectacle have we presented in order to be able to boast that we have the friendship of Great Britain and have become a world power! Never before in the history of the Republic has there been a struggle for freedom on the part of any people that Representatives in this Chamber did not hasten to declare that we regarded with solicitude the endeavors and efforts of that people to obtain their liberty.

For more than four years we have witnessed Great Britain maintaining military stations inside the borders of the Republic. We have seen her agents going up and down this country enlisting men and buying materials of war. And I believe I will not travel outside the record when I assert that any member upon this floor who has served here as much as four years has received letters from his constituents protesting against the enforced enlistment of American boys by the English Government to do battle in South Africa.

I know I have received a number of them. Less than thirty days ago I transmitted a pitiable appeal to the American consul in South Africa, asking him to do something to secure the release of an American boy who had been forced to enlist in the English army to fight the Boers in South Africa. Whether it be true or false I know not; but the letter that came from the parents of this boy, asking me to transmit it, said that they had in vain appealed to the State Department to take an interest in the matter.

Afraid of shocking the delicate sensibilities of Great Britain, wanting to be a world power, wanting to inaugurate this new system of diplomacy in our country! I want the people of the United States to understand distinctly who is responsible for the deep humiliation and disgrace that has been brought to the American people. The Republican party has sanctioned and does sanction the attitude not only of this but of the previous Administration in its conduct of our foreign affairs. We have swung further away from democratic traditions, from republican ideas, and from republican principles in the last five years than in the previous hundred years.

Things are now accepted as a matter of course that would have tested the patriotism and shocked the intelligence of our forefathers beyond endurance, all growing out of this striving to lock arms with the great European powers and become a world power. To foster this new idea of diplomacy, we sit quietly by and allow a representative of a great power to assemble in his residence in the capital of the Republic the representatives of every other great nation, and make the cold-blooded and deliberate demand or request that they join with him in a determination arbitrarily and with force to prevent the American people from carrying out their declared intention to rid Cuba of her serfdom.

It may be well enough to treat the representatives of foreign powers with courtesy and consideration. Far be it from me to ask any other mode of treatment; but I do declare that if the publication in the press is true, this man Pauncefote ought to be ordered to take the first ship across the waters. We want no such man in the Republic. If he comes here to represent his Government, well and good; but if he comes here to hatch conspiracies, to attempt to force his wishes and his ideas upon the American people, the sooner we are rid of him the better it will be.

And another thing, Mr. Chairman, which I regard as an unfortunate incident and which I only refrain from discussing on account of the ordinary amenities that should obtain between one gentleman and another. I allude to the fact of the opportunity seized by the chief citizen of the Republic to send a member of his family across the water for the purpose of participating in the coronation of a King.

I shall not discuss that, because it of necessity involves matters I do not care to go into here. I will, in passing, say that it is a most unfortunate circumstance. It is unprecedented in our history, and is to-day deeply regretted by country-loving men in the Union. I am sorry that he did it. It is establishing a precedent that he ought not to recognize, and it is but one more link in the chain showing toward what end we are drifting.

One other matter I wish to advert upon. In the next few days we are to have a brother of a ruler come over to this country and take charge of a little tug, ship, vessel, or yacht—whatever you please to term it—built by some people up in New York. We are appropriating thousands of dollars, and people are falling over each other to get to see a little Dutchman come over and take charge of a little ship. [Applause on the Democratic side.] What difference does it make whether he is Prince Henry or not? There are thousands of citizens of this Republic following the plow as noble, as honest, as intelligent as Prince Henry or Prince Anybody Else. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Why do the American people give heed to this foolish and disgraceful flunkeyism enacted by the present Administration? What difference does it make to us whether he is a brother of the Emperor, a sister of the Emperor, or a mother of the Emperor? It is evidence of our good will, they say. What do we care about the good will of the German people? Let us treat them politely, as one honest man treats another, but why should we bow down to these people any more than to any other people?

Mr. WANGER. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. WHEELER. Yes.

Mr. WANGER. The gentleman said why should we care if he happens to be a mother of the Emperor. It would be an interesting fact if he were, would it not? [Laughter.]

Mr. WHEELER. It might be interesting to the gentleman; it is of no interest to me one way or the other, neither psychologically, physiologically, or politically. But, Mr. Chairman, it will not do to pass this matter over lightly. It is significant of the trend of modern republican thought.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. WHEELER. Yes.

Mr. GROSVENOR. If the gentleman had been living at the time Lafayette came to this country, bearing the commission of the King of France, would he have overruled the action of George Washington in sending a commission to meet him and accompanying him over the country?

Mr. WHEELER. No; I would have been proud to join in the commission to welcome the Marquis Lafayette. He was a great soldier, a great fighter, and fought for the rights of the American people. [Applause.] But this man represents that kingism or flunkeyism that seeks to enslave the labor of every people under the sun.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Does the gentleman criticise the Democratic Administration of James Buchanan in receiving the Prince of Wales?

Mr. WHEELER. That is a very different thing. [Laughter and derisive cries on the Republican side.] Not at all; not at all; that is a very different thing. We received him not as we are receiving this man, if I recollect right, but he came as the official head of his Government.

Mr. GROSVENOR. On the contrary, he came under another name, and the attendant that was with him came incognito also, coming as a mere private citizen, and was taken charge of by the Government during his entire stay in the United States, and dined at the White House by a Democratic President at a time when Democracy meant something.

Mr. WHEELER. If the gentleman is correct, then I condemn in unmeasured terms the attitude of that Democratic Administration.

Mr. GROSVENOR. All right.

Mr. WHEELER. But I do not admit the gentleman's statement, because I know the gentleman's facility for manufacturing history when it suits his purpose on the floor.

Mr. GROSVENOR. The gentleman has put up his veracity against mine in support of his statement that Buchanan did not receive the Prince of Wales and did not entertain him. I join issue with the gentleman——

Mr. WHEELER. I did not say that.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I put my statement against his.

Mr. WHEELER. I insist that I did not put my word against that of the gentleman on this question. I said frankly that I did not know; and I said that if it was true I condemned in unmeasured terms the action of that Democratic administration.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BOUTELL. Mr. Chairman, I want to reply very briefly to some of the observations of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WHEELER]. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that the criticism which has been made upon the head of one of our great Government Departments by the gentleman from Kentucky should not go unanswered in this House. I believe that no one of our Secretaries of State has reflected more credit upon American diplomacy than has the gentleman who now presides with force and dignity over our Department of State. [Applause.] I want to recall for just a moment the bright page in American diplomatic history that was written by Secretary Hay during the closing months of the last year.

We all remember how all Europe, and America as well, were stirred and startled by the events that were taking place in China. Our forces were sent out with all dispatch to protect our official representatives and our own citizens in China. We were brought suddenly into intricate and complicated diplomatic relations with the representatives of the leading monarchies of Europe. In these negotiations we were true to our best national traditions, and we gave a distinct shock to the diplomatists and statesmen of Europe.

Sir Henry Wotton three centuries ago wrote in the album of Christopher Fleckamon what he called a "merry definition of an ambassador:"

An ambassador is an honest man sent to lie abroad for the Commonwealth.

It is to the great and lasting credit of American diplomacy that the representatives of our Republic have always been sent abroad to tell the truth for the good of the Commonwealth. [Applause.] When that trouble was progressing in China, Russia made the first proposition to the powers which looked directly and plainly to the dismemberment of the Chinese Empire. That was promptly rejected by the American State Department. Then a few days later, on the 18th of September, came the proposition of the German representative, which we promptly rejected. Now I want to read just a few words from an able, unprejudiced, and disinterested scholar and commentator on these proceedings.

On September 18 the German Government proposed to the powers that they should consider as a preliminary condition for entering into diplomatic negotiations with the Chinese Government a surrender of such persons as might be determined upon by their representatives at Pekin as being the first and real perpetrators of the crimes committed in Pekin against international law. On September 21 our Government peremptorily rejected this proposal. Mr. Dunnell, writing in the February number of the Forum, says of this incident:

This was a bold stroke. It was not merely a blunt rejection of the German proposal; it was also a notice to Europe that we should withdraw from the concert unless a basis of negotiation more in harmony with our general policy should be quickly agreed upon. It was received with jeers and flaunts by the diplomats and journalists of Europe. The "amateurish diplomacy" of America was ridiculed, and our threat to withdraw from the concert was characterized as presumptuous and dishonorable. All the leading English papers strongly indorsed the German plan. The London Times said editorially that the country "would be both astonished and shocked if our [British] Government did not warmly support the German proposal." France, Austria, Italy, and Japan were all prepared to follow the German programme; but Lord Salisbury, following the lead of the United States, condemned it by withholding any formal reply and by seeking a compromise.

The German proposal was virtually an invitation to all the powers to join Germany in declaring war upon China, for the latter country would inevitably have refused to comply with the demand; and a war on China, under the circumstances, meant a partition of the empire, and the probability of a European conflict. It was also highly objectionable and unwise because it involved the danger of protracted disagreement among the powers as to the persons who should be brought to trial, as to the organization of the court, and as to the nature of the evidence to be received and the punishments to be inflicted. It violated the salutary rule of international law that one nation shall not be compelled to surrender its citizens to another for punishment. Subsequent events have shown that the "amateurish diplomacy" of the United States, by killing the German proposal, saved Europe from committing an egregious blunder.

Mr. WHEELER. Will the gentleman yield a moment?

Mr. BOUTELL. Certainly.

Mr. WHEELER. The incident narrated in what the gentleman has just read was not conducted by Mr. Hay; nor did he have any more to do with it than the gentleman from Illinois. At the time of the transaction of the matters enumerated in the article that the gentleman holds in his hand Mr. Hay was sick and absent from the State Department, and the negotiations were conducted by Mr. Root, the Secretary of War, aided by the Assistant Secretary of State, Mr. Adee.

Mr. BOUTELL. That is not quite correct, for all the diplomatic intercourse and all the negotiations carried on between our representatives in China and the representatives of the foreign powers were outlined and approved by Secretary Hay himself and were in accordance with a policy agreed upon by President McKinley and the Secretary of State.

Mr. WHEELER. What authority has the gentleman for making that statement? He does not dispute the fact that Mr. Hay was sick at the time of this immediate transaction, does he?

Mr. BOUTELL. Never too sick to attend to the duties of his Department and give directions to his assistants and to our representatives in China, which were faithfully followed.

Mr. WHEELER. Was he not absent from the capital?

Mr. BOUTELL. Absence from the capital does not preclude a public official from attending to the duties of his office.

Mr. WHEELER. That is true, but I desire to make this statement: I have not the record by me, but I venture to assert that cursory investigation will disclose the fact that Mr. Hay was sick—confined to his bed somewhere on the North Atlantic coast, and every dispatch in connection with the transaction referred to came from Mr. Root, the Secretary of War, or Mr. Adee, the Assistant Secretary of State, and Mr. Hay had no more to do with the matter than the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. BOUTELL. There is glory enough for all. But now let me read what this unprejudiced observer and commentator says in his praise of President McKinley and Secretary Hay. I wish to adopt his words and make them my own.

Mr. WHEELER. I want the record, if the gentleman is going to dispute my statement.

Mr. BOUTELL. I have no dispute with the gentleman from Kentucky. Secretary Hay could never be far enough from the capital to lose control of his office. Now, this is the summing up of that bright chapter in the history of our American diplomacy conducted by the present able and scholarly head of that Department.

A review of the diplomatic negotiations leading up to the present settlement is a lesson in patriotism for the American citizen. In its handling of the Chinese difficulty President McKinley's Administration was splendidly loyal to the best traditions of American diplomacy. By virtue of its moderation, its moral impulse and direction, its fullness of knowledge, its straightforward and open methods, its boldness and self-sufficiency, American diplomacy, in the hands of President McKinley and Secretary Hay, proved itself a mighty instrument of civilization.

Our naval victories at Manila and Santiago have been ridiculously overrated as means of advancing our position among the nations. If that position has recently become somewhat more important, it is chiefly due to the capturing of foreign markets by our merchants and manufacturers and to the leading part we played in the Chinese drama. To the public men of Europe, especially the diplomats, our bold, firm, and independent position, taken at the very outset of the Chinese crisis and before Europe had spoken, came as a veritable shock. They had been comparatively indifferent to our easy victories over a dying nation, but they were quick to perceive the portentous significance of our bold entrance into the field of international politics. Here, indeed, was a new force to be reckoned with, and they knew instinctively that it would work counter to their secretly cherished purposes. Our action has notably strengthened the dislike and apprehension with which we are regarded in the chancelleries of continental Europe.

[Loud applause.]

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Chairman, does the gentleman intend to pull in another Schley and Sampson on us, and say that Mr. Hay was in, although absent? Is that the object of the gentleman in reading the article?

Mr. BOUTELL. No. I am reading these extracts to show that an unprejudiced observer, a man without the mental and political strabismus of my friend from Kentucky, who could look straight at a problem, thought that the head of our State Department was loyal to the best traditions of American diplomacy. [Loud applause on the Republican side.] And I for one, Mr. Chairman, can not sit here and listen calmly and in silence to the suggestion or demand of the gentleman from Kentucky, made in language more forceful than parliamentary, that the present Secretary of State should be put out of his office by the President of the United States. It ought to be matter of national pride with us, regardless of party prejudices, to sustain the position which Secretary Hay has given to American diplomacy. To our diplomatic history he has added the last and one of the most brilliant pages. [Loud applause on the Republican side].

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana rose.

[Cries of "Regular order!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on laying the bill aside with a favorable recommendation.

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to Henry Burns."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend the committee amendment by striking out "forty" and inserting the word "fifty." Just one word in reference to that.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 10 of the committee amendment strike out "forty" and insert "fifty."

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Chairman, this pensioner, Henry Burns, is absolutely blind and absolutely helpless. The pension board that examined him last recommended him at the rate of $72 a month. They found that his blindness was due to his Army service, but that board of pension examiners was overruled by the medical division of the Pension Bureau here. Testimony has been filed with the Committee on Invalid Pensions of two specialists of the city of Pittsburg who are familiar with this man's case to the effect that his blindness is due to his Army service. In point of fact, he ought to be on the pension roll at the rate of $72 a month, instead of at the rate of $50 now claimed for him.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Mr. Chairman, the amendment is accepted by the committee. It is a very meritorious case indeed.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I very much dislike to take issue with the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL]. I am perfectly in accord with the idea of giving to every old soldier with an honorable service the very highest rate of pension possible, and fully agree with the gentleman that if this soldier's disability was of service origin he would be entitled to $72 a month. The Pension Department has ascertained that he was entitled to only $14 pension of service origin. I agree with the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania that if you take the report of the medical board who examined him at his home, it looks as though his disability was of service origin. For one, I think it should be taken, or at least it should have great weight. I also concede in this case and thousands of others that the reviewing board in the Pension Department overruled the home board and three legal adjudications in the Pension Bureau; but we are up against this state of facts, and it occurs in many cases, and if this law-making body does not approve of it, it should say so in a substantial way, for it has occurred not only in this case, but in hundreds, yes thousands, of others, many of which have been referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and that is the greatest cause for so many bills here.

This committee is confronted with this fact, that the people of this great American Republic demand liberal pensions, and I believe would sustain the action of the committee if we had said this old soldier should have $72 a month, yet there is no law for it. On the other hand, here is a Department presided over by a gentleman selected for that purpose, who is under obligation to the head of that Department, the Secretary of the Interior, and he in turn to the Administration. The Secretary of the Interior has agreed with the Commissioner of Pensions that it is within the province of the medical board to strike down all other adjudications and reduce the amount to $14 a month. The committee have adopted rules of procedure covering these cases, and we feel that there must be some uniform action by the committee. We do not hope to grant all the relief demanded by special legislation. It requires some affirmative legislation. If we do not approve the action of the Commissioner we ought to say so. As legislators, as representatives of all the people, we should strike down the action of the Commissioner of Pensions only where justice demands it, and increase the pensions in a spirit of fairness and uniformity, and not be carried away by eloquence or influence. There are five hundred other cases pending before the committee that are just as meritorious.

So far as I am individually concerned, if there could be a general law or a general plan by which these men could all be put on the same basis, I would join the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] and agree to $72, but the Invalid Pensions Committee thought $40 the limit, and I propose to stand by it. The committee has thought it wise to draw a moderate line somewhere between disabilities which were of service origin and those which were thought probably so under the proof in the Pension Department; and we have said in this case that we believe, in view of the fact that it was probably of service origin, that we were willing to give the old soldier the benefit of the doubt and increase his pension from $14 to $40. In view of the fact that there are hundreds of thousands that are lodged at $12, I think we do well to make it $40.

In doing so we have established a precedent, and if we may ignore that precedent and say in this individual case, "Give him $50 because his case is a lamentable one," although the case is not of service origin, then we are met with the same argument in every other instance where there is a pitiable case, and there are such cases by the thousand. The committee has given this case careful consideration; there is no other place it can be considered. I do not think it safe to break away from the judgment of the committee. If this Committee of the Whole House, with the full knowledge that the committee has done its best to establish rules and precedents that ought to govern in all cases of this kind and is ready to override the committee and give $50 in this case, then I am willing to give $50 in ten or fifteen other cases that are on this Calendar, and we will largely increase our allowances from this on. Our committee has already been accused of being too liberal.

I believe this committee has gone to the limit in this case and given all that ought to be given under the law. If you want these men to have more pension than this committee has recommended in this and many other cases, then do not do it in this way, but present a general bill that will put these old soldiers on an equality one with the other. While there are so many receiving so much less pension than recommended here I can not give my consent to increase it beyond $40; but if the action of the committee is not to govern the House, then I should like to know where we are to be controlled and what is to be the rule of action. We had better be conservative and give a little relief to a great many and not give so much to a few, so as not to make the charge of favoritism already made stand out any more prominent than it does.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Chairman, I do not disagree with the gentleman from Indiana as to the propriety of having a supervising examiner in the Pension Bureau. I do not advocate the proposition that the report of the examiners at the homes of the claimants should be conclusive. I quite agree that such returns ought to be subject to revision. But I recall what the gentleman said on this floor two or three weeks ago—that it was the policy of the Committee on Pensions to require only such proof as would be required to make out a case in a court of justice.

In this case we present to the Committee on Pensions the testimony of three physicians, and they say that this man's disabilities are the result of his service. I present, in addition to that, the testimony of two other physicians who have examined him, and they testify to the same thing. What court is there in Christendom that on the production of such testimony uncontradicted would refuse to award the man's claim? Why, this man is blind; he does not know night from day; he is destitute; he is in poverty; he is helpless, and he must be fed. He walked 147 miles, according to the testimony, over frozen ground to a rebel prison when he was a mere boy, and barefooted at that, and I would be ashamed of this committee if, under these circumstances, they refused to give him what his services to his country deserve.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. DALZELL. Yes.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. How long has he been blind?

Mr. DALZELL. Two years.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Does the gentleman claim that the fact that he went blind in 1900 show that his blindness was of service origin?

Mr. DALZELL. Five physicians so testify, and two of them specialists who have examined him.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. I will repeat what I said a moment ago. It is possible, and perhaps probable, that it was of service origin. Therefore the committee thought it wise to increase it to $40, and now the gentleman from Pennsylvania, when the man has only been blind two years, is ready to say that it was of service origin and go to the real limit. I do not think the amendment ought to be adopted.

Mr. DALZELL. I am appealing to the gentleman's rule laid down on the floor of this House, that when a claimant has made out such a case as would justify him in getting the verdict of a jury in court he should be allowed it.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Will the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania join us in a general law that will preclude the Commissioner of Pensions requiring proof beyond a mere preponderance?

Mr. DALZELL. I will, yes.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. I am glad to hear it.

Mr. SIMS. Now, Mr. Chairman, in view of the high regard I have for the gentleman from Pennsylvania, I would like to ask him a question.

Mr. DALZELL. Very well.

Mr. SIMS. The gentleman has too much influence in this House to speak lightly of such things. What does he suppose the pension roll would amount to if all the claims could be allowed under the impassioned utterance of members?

Mr. DALZELL. Oh, I do not see any relevancy in that question.

Mr. SIMS. Your man was raised to $40 by the committee, and then if it was raised to $50 now on account of the gentleman's impassioned utterance, why, other cases should be treated in the same way.

Mr. DALZELL. But this is all in accordance with the decision of the pension board who examined the man.

Mr. SIMS. What pension board?

Mr. DALZELL. The local pension board.

Mr. SIMS. Oh, the local pension board!

Mr. DALZELL. The Pension Bureau did not apply the rule of evidence advocated by the gentleman from Indiana, which would prevail in any court of justice, but applied the other technical rule, which solves all doubts against the claimant.

Mr. SIMS. If the entire pension roll was to be governed in that way, we would have a pension roll amounting to $400,000,000.

Mr. DALZELL. I am not discussing that; I am discussing the present case.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Chairman, I have no doubt that all the gentleman from Pennsylvania has said about this soldier is true. I have no doubt he was a good soldier; but that is one evidence of the fact that there is no satisfying what you may call the pension sharks of this House. Now, here is a soldier drawing $14 a month under the general law. He has been repeatedly to the Pension Bureau seeking to increase his pension, and yet has failed for the want of a proper status before that Bureau, showing that he really does not deserve a single dollar's worth of increase.

Now, then, as I have said on former occasions, he comes here and argues as he would to a court of appeal, makes his statement to the committee—the committee that I believe have spent days and nights investigating and looking into this case—and I had congratulated myself that at last this House would not override the bounds set by the committee. I had concluded to sit here quietly and vote for the bill, or at least that I would make no objection to the bill which the committee is now bringing in, considering that they had concluded to bring in only meritorious bills.

Now, we have a case here where the committee has been liberal beyond conception. They find the disability of blindness can not be traced to service origin, but in their sympathy and love for the old soldier they have agreed to increase it from $14 to $40 a month, and on the top of that the gentleman from Pennsylvania asks that it be increased $10 more. I am willing to vote for the bill as brought in here by the committee, but I do not think that this House ought now to set a precedent overriding the committee. If you do, you open the doors for a flood of amendments to every bill that is brought in here. If you amend that bill you will have to amend every other bill for every other member of the House, because on each side they are waiting to get to the bill which they have on the Calendar. That is why the House is so full here to-day; and if you raise this man you will have to raise everyone else. I am opposed to this, and I protest against the amendment and hope it will be laid on the table.

The question being taken, there were on a division (called for by Mr. DALZELL)—ayes 40, noes 47.

So the amendment of Mr. DALZELL was rejected.

The question being taken upon the amendment reported by the committee, it was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania proposes an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 11 strike out "twenty-four" and insert in lieu thereof "thirty-six."

Mr. BATES. Mr. Chairman, my colleague, Mr. DEEMER, of the subcommittee, made the report on this bill, and was to have made this motion, but he is unavoidably absent from the city. The motion is to make the amount $36 instead of $24.

Mr. SULLOWAY. I suggest to the gentleman that he make a motion to recommit the bill.

Mr. BATES. Mr. Chairman, if you will recognize me for that purpose I will move that this bill be recommitted.

Mr. SULLOWAY. There is no objection, if it is desired to recommit the bill to the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves that the bill be reported back with the recommendation that it be recommitted to the committee.

Mr. SULLOWAY. If that can be done in committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of the opinion that the amendment should be disposed of before the bill can be recommended to be recommitted.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. I suggest to the gentleman that he withdraw his amendment.

Mr. SULLOWAY. I understood the amendment was withdrawn.

The CHAIRMAN. There is a committee amendment pending, which will have to be disposed of before the question of recommittal can arise.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Do I understand that a bill with committee amendments can not be recommitted?

The CHAIRMAN. Not at all; but the amendments should be disposed of before the Committee of the Whole recommends recommitment.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Then it could be considered with reference to its merits. The committee would not be bound by the action of this Committee of the Whole?

The CHAIRMAN. Not if it is recommitted. The committee of course would consider the bill upon its merits as they appeared to the committee then.

Mr. BATES. On the amendment to the amendment I want to yield to my colleague [Mr. SIBLEY] for a moment.

Mr. SIBLEY. Mr. Chairman, I am very familiar with this case and know Colonel McCoy very well, and I should think if the amendment offered by my colleague from Pennsylvania were withdrawn and the bill sent back to the committee again, there would be no trouble in securing the favorable action of the committee, in view of the facts which I can state.

The report of the committee failed to state that Colonel McCoy some two years since suffered from a stroke of paralysis and lay for many weeks at the point of death. I know this fact from my own personal knowledge. He was a gallant soldier; he is a worthy citizen and a courteous gentleman.

Mr. GIBSON. Does the gentleman make the statement that he makes with reference to this man's disability from his own personal knowledge?

Mr. SIBLEY. I do make that statement from my own personal knowledge, and regret that it has not been brought out in the report.

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. Chairman, in behalf of the members of the committee around me, who constitute a majority, in view of the additional facts disclosed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SIBLEY], we accept the amendment. We have no objection to it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Chairman, I want to suggest an amendment. I move to strike out, in line 13, the word "twenty" and insert the word "forty." I wish to say that this is a bill, in my judgment, of extraordinary merit. The claimant is a very poor and helpless old man; indeed, he is "wrinkled with age and hoary with the dust of years." He is absolutely helpless and dependent besides a great sufferer from disease. He is now living upon the kindness and benevolence of fraternal and charitable organizations. To give you some idea of his age, he enlisted in the Mexican war the same year in which I was born, and it will be discovered from an inspection of myself that I have reached the point where "the almond tree is flourishing," and am no longer young. I believe the amount recommended by the committee is insufficient to meet the demands in this case.

The bill as originally introduced by myself was for $50 per month. The committee struck out the "fifty" and recommended $20 a month. I believe this man ought to have more than that. He can not enjoy this bounty of the Government but for a little while. He will soon go to his long home, and I believe it will be right for this House to give him that amount of pension per month which would reasonably meet the absolute necessities of his case for his few remaining years. I earnestly request that the amendment I have offered may be adopted by the Committee of the Whole.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Texas.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 13 strike out the word "twenty" and insert the word "forty."

Mr. BROMWELL. Mr. Chairman, there is nothing unusual in this case. It is a case of a Mexican war soldier who had about a year's service. It is a service pension strictly and solely, and he is now getting from the Pension Bureau the maximum rate allowed of $12 a month. He is 80 years old and in needy circumstances. But there is nothing exceptional in that. In every case which this Committee on Pensions reports to the House these facts are frequently found. We will report it in the bill recommending an increase over the pension allowed by law.

Mr. LANHAM. Is my friend from Ohio aware that the beneficiary is feeble, requiring the attendance and care of others; that he has nothing in the world upon which to support himself, and is dependent upon the charity of benevolent organizations? It is an extraordinary case, it seems to me.

Mr. BROMWELL. Mr. Chairman, I have here the report of the committee, made by Mr. DE GRAFFENREID, of that committee, which shows, as I say, that there is nothing exceptional in this case. The old gentleman is 74 years of age. I said 80 years on the statement made by the gentleman from Texas. The report says:

The claimant, who resides at 507 North Third street, Forth Worth, Tex., was a private in Company E, First Missouri Mounted Volunteers, and served from June 11, 1846, to June 24, 1847, in the war with Mexico, and he is now in receipt of a pension of $12 per month, allowed by law to the totally disabled and needy survivors of that war. Claimant is now 74 years old, a man of intelligence and high standing, but now so reduced in financial circumstances that he is obliged to depend upon a fraternal and charitable organization for support. It is shown that, in addition to the feebleness consequent upon his advanced age, claimant has a serious disease of the rectum and also suffers from a strangulated hernia and from a severe disease of the heart.

There is not a case comes into the House from the Committee on Pensions but that makes an equally strong appeal for an increased rate. Now, the Committee on Pensions has liberally increased this man's pension. The law says $12 is the maximum, but the Pension Committee has allowed him $20 in this bill, and the gentleman in asking that this amount shall be increased to forty or thirty or twenty-five dollars goes beyond anything allowed by this Committee on Pensions, which has endeavored to be sustained in all these cases, and acts not only fairly but liberally with every one of these claimants, as established in every case it has reported. I therefore hope that the committee will reject the amendment for the sake of consistency in all of these cases and to prevent favoritism that will grow out of taking any one individual case in which one individual member is interested and prevent discrimination in these matters.

Mr. LANHAM. If my friend could see all the letters and papers I have submitted to the Committee on Pensions, embracing other facts than are stated in the report, I believe he would regard this as an exceptional case, standing out conspicuously from many others.

Mr. BROMWELL. As I said before, all of these facts and all of the papers were before the subcommittee, Mr. DE GRAFFENREID, who reported this bill, and upon his judgment and the submission of the whole case to the entire committee the committee thought $20 not only a fair, but a liberal, allowance.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The question was taken, and on a division (demanded by Mr. LANHAM) there were 42 ayes and 41 noes.

Mr. LANHAM. What it the result, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. Forty ayes; 41 noes.

Mr. LANHAM. I am satisfied with that result.

Mr. BROMWELL. I am not; and I ask for tellers, Mr. Chairman.

Tellers were ordered; and the Chair appointed as tellers Mr. BROMWELL and Mr. LANHAM.

The question was again taken; and the tellers reported 49 ayes and 55 noes.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment to this amendment of the committee changing the amount from $24, as proposed by the committee, to $36. I introduced this bill for this soldier, a gentleman who lives in my own town, and whom I have known for thirty-five years. He was a captain in an Ohio regiment and served between three and four years in the war between the States. He is now nearly 70 years of age. He has grown very stout, and he is almost unable from physical disability to earn a living. As I have stated, he was a good soldier for nearly four years. He was captain of Company I of the Fifty-ninth Regiment of Ohio Volunteers. He located in the State of Tennessee at the close of the war, and has lived there ever since. As I have stated, he is unable to earn a living; he has no income, has no property, has no relatives in Tennessee, and so far as I know no near relatives anywhere. He lived in Ohio, as I have stated, came to Tennessee at close of war, and has made a splendid citizen, as I happen to know, and I have known him intimately for thirty-five years.

Now, sir, he is almost dependent at times on his friends. He has been afflicted with sciatica, and has the rheumatism so badly at times that he has to go to bed for weeks. He has been a practicing lawyer, and I have practiced at same bar with him for many years, as he resides in my home town. I have no interest in the case except that he is a most deserving soldier of the late war. He is a man of ability. By reason of his bad health and of the affliction upon him he is unable to support himself, and $24 a month, the amount given him in the amendment to the bill, will not support him.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Has he no property?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. He has no property and no income. He is a clever gentleman, and I know the community in which he lives, because I have lived there myself a great many years. I know they are good to him and will help take care of him; but I do insist that he ought to have more that $24 a month. He was a captain in the war. I will read what the committee say, in conclusion, in the report. This report was made by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KLEBERG], from the Invalid Pensions Committee:

There is on file in the Pension Bureau a letter from the vice-president of the Stones River Battlefield National Association, of Murfreesboro, Tenn., addressed to the Commissioner of Pensions, in which the Pension Bureau is asked to place the claim of this officer in the hands of a pension examiner if practicable; that Captain Sheafe, like the writer, had all these years hesitated about making an application for pension, not because he felt he was not entitled to it, but from a commendable pride; that there was no more faithful, courageous, and intelligent soldier in the third division of the Twenty-first Army Corps; that for two years the officer had been an inmate of the writer's home, suffering greatly with neuralgic headaches and sciatic rheumatism, etc.

I have seen him with my own eyes suffering until it seemed that death would be a relief. I never in my service on the floor have asked for an increase of pension that I remember, but I do insist that in this case this man ought to have more than $24 a month. I believe $36 a month would support him in that community. We are not extravagant down there. Our ways of living are simple and cheap, and I believe if you give him $36 a month he can be sustained and supported, and I most earnestly ask that the committee agree to the change. Instead of fixing his pension at $24 let us insert $36 a month for him. He can not in the course of nature live a great many years longer, and therefore can not for a great while be a tax on the Government. I hope very much that my amendment placing his pension at $36 a month will be agreed to without opposition.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Mr. Chairman, I will say that the gentleman from Tennessee states a very different case from what appeared in evidence before the committee. He states a much stronger case than we had before the committee, and as he states it from his own personal knowledge I take it that no one will question it. Judge KLEBERG reported the case, and if he is satisfied with the amendment I am sure I am.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MIERS] and the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. TALBERT] will allow the committee's report in this case to be overruled and give the gentleman from Tennessee what he wants.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I am much obliged to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, and I am sure that he says this from disinterested motives. [Laughter.]

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Chairman, I want to say that I am ready to stand by the committee in its recommendations; I am absolutely opposed to increasing the amount fixed by the committee for any soldier by a vote in this House. I believe the committee is as liberal as it ought to be, and sometimes too liberal, and I think I ought to stand by the committee.

Mr. CALDERHEAD rose.

Mr. SHATTUC. Regular order, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. GIBSON. This is the regular order.

Mr. SHATTUC. I think the time being consumed in making speeches for the RECORD is entirely unnecessary. [Laughter.]

Mr. GIBSON. If the gentleman would keep that in mind he never would make any speeches at all. [Laughter.] Mr. Chairman, I wish to say in reference to this particular case that the facts brought before the committee were not as strong as stated by the gentleman from Tennessee. If we had had the statement of the gentleman from Tennessee, I think we would have given this soldier a larger rate, and, so far as I am concerned, I am entirely willing that the amendment should be agreed to. I regard it as a proper amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered to the amendment by the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, I take the floor to oppose the passage of this bill. The gentleman from Kentucky at the beginning of the session to-day took occasion to raise the question of veracity between the statement which I made and the facts of history as he understood them, and I avail myself of this question now pending before the House to occupy only a few moments to set him right in regard to history. I have no controversy with the gentleman from Kentucky. I thought he was speaking in forgetfulness, at least, of the history of his country, and I based my opinion at the time upon the fact that I was living and a man of nearly 27 years of age at the time of the visit of the Prince of Wales to the United States.

I saw the Prince of Wales myself. I listened to the speech of welcome that was made when he first put his foot upon American soil at Niagara, in the State of New York, and I followed with a good deal of interest, as a young man would, the career of that gentleman in the United States, and now, when a bitter attack is made upon the President of the United States, and incidentally upon the House of Representatives, I will assume, in advance, and the Senate, and all the people of the United States who are to be within reach of the coming visit of Prince Henry to the United States, it may be well to refer to historical facts. I speak first of the visit of our commission to London at the time of the coronation of King Edward.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I rise to make a suggestion to the gentleman from Ohio involving the question of the time to be occupied in the discussion of matters dehors the question before the House. I desire that there may be some arrangement as to how long this political discussion is to continue, so that we may know whether the disposition of these pension claims will be interfered with.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I am very glad the gentleman feels this anxiety. I did not notice his anxiety this morning when the gentleman from Kentucky occupied some twenty minutes on this matter.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. It was probably because the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] was not in the Hall at the time. If he had been, he would have seen the same anxiety manifested by me then that I manifest now, that this day be occupied with pension business instead of political discussions.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I was in the Hall of the House at the time this morning the gentleman from Kentucky began and by silence gave my consent to the gentleman from Kentucky proceeding. And now I hope the gentleman from Indiana, under the circumstances, will not interrupt me for ten or fifteen minutes while I occupy the floor on this question.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I do not object to any reasonable limitation.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I shall conform myself to a very reasonable limitation of time.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Will not the gentleman agree to confine himself to ten or fifteen minutes?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I think I can say all I desire to say in fifteen minutes. A considerable portion of what I shall bring to the attention of the House is a part of public documents and public history.

Several MEMBERS. Go on.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I can not consent that the gentleman shall "go on" indefinitely on this question while pension matters are pending.

Mr. SHATTUC. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Ohio be allowed eighteen minutes.

Mr. WHEELER. I hope I shall be allowed time to reply.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman from Ohio proceeding for eighteen minutes? The Chair hears none.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I hope now gentlemen will consent to give me this time without any interruption, except such interruptions, if any, as may become pertinent.

I asked the gentleman from Kentucky what his opinion was of George Washington's reception of Lafayette, and he made a very pertinent answer, satisfactory to himself and to me. Lafayette came here, it is true, bearing a royal commission; but it was equally true that he had been the friend of the United States, although I do not commit myself to the whole of the general doctrine that France was especially the friend of the United States. They were fighting their enemy upon our soil and tried to get into a fight with us before George Washington had time to die; and he had to be recalled from his retirement to get ready to fight the French, even within a few years after their demonstrations of love and affection for us.

Now let us come to this question of the Prince of Wales. I ought to say that I believe the gentleman from Kentucky will not stand by all of the remarks he made to-day. Some of them, it seems to me, were in a temper that he will not adhere to upon cooler and calmer reflection. I think it very unfortunate that a member of the House of Representatives, at a time when the American people are put to the test whether or not they are gentlemen, should protest in such language as the gentleman from Kentucky has used, in advance, against the reception of Prince Henry of Germany. I suppose that his speech will be read to-night on the ship before it leaves Bremen, and will be exploited as the message of the American people to a coming guest, to a gentleman who has volunteered to visit our shores.

Mr. WHEELER. Will the gentleman permit me to interrupt him a moment?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I hope the gentleman will not use up my time.

Mr. WHEELER. Just a moment. I do not intend to let the gentleman from Ohio put me in a false position, as he apparently seeks to do. I shall welcome gladly any gentleman to the shores of America. It is the official position of the gentleman coming to our shores and the official color given to his reception against which I protest.

Mr. GROSVENOR. The gentleman, I have no doubt, will stand by his own language. Referring to the action of the President in the matter of the coronation of the King, he said:

I shall not discuss that, because it of necessity involves matters I do not care to go into. I will in passing say that it is a most unfortunate circumstance. It is unprecedented in our history, and is to-day deeply lamented on the part of every country-loving man in the Union. I am sorry that he did it. It is establishing a precedent that he ought not to recognize, and it is but one more link in the chain showing toward what end we are drifting.

Now, I understand that to have been made in reference to the sending of a commission to the coronation of King Edward.

Mr. WHEELER. You misunderstand it entirely, if you did. It is a matter that I do not desire to go into; but in order to clarify the situation I will state that it refers to the President of the United States, as is currently reported, sending a member of his family with the commission.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Oh! Oh, well, that is a little matter of a young lady 18 years old accompanying a gentleman and a lady on a visit to Europe. That is a matter rather undersized, and I shall say nothing about that.

Mr. SHATTUC. May I ask the gentleman from Ohio a question?

Mr. GROSVENOR. You must not use up my time.

Mr. SHATTUC. May I ask just a question?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Very well, let us have the question.

Mr. SHATTUC. Do you think it is courteous and nice for the distinguished gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WHEELER] to characterize this gentleman coming over here as a "little Dutchman?"

Mr. GROSVENOR. I was coming to that. The gentleman ought not to make my speech in advance. [Laughter.] Now, I am going to refer to the matter of the coronation of King Edward, simply to say this: It is within my personal knowledge that whatever is done officially by the United States in the matter of sending a commission to witness the coronation of King Edward will be carrying out plans that were made by the deceased President, William McKinley, and not only that, but the head of the commission himself had been selected by the dead President. So that the criticism, whatever it may be, just or unjust, should fall upon him and not upon his successor, who was bound by every principle of justice and fair play to carry out the suggestions of his predecessor that had been made known to the country on the other side of the water; and I have no apology to make for that commission going over there. It was the right thing to do.

It is the act of a nation of gentlemen in dealing with another nation of gentlemen, and I do not believe that if you will poll the constituency of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WHEELER] there would be 5 per cent of them who would condemn the act of the United States in sending that commission across, and, as I have already said, the question of permitting a lady—a member of the President's family—to go where she pleased and make a visit whenever she please is a question that I leave to the distinguished gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WHEELER] to fight out with the young lady herself; and I will tell him one thing, based upon a mere temporary judgment of her, she will give him a great deal of trouble if he gets into a debate with her on the question of whether she ought to go or not. [Laughter.]

But let us come to a matter of much more serious importance. The gentleman says:

We are appropriating thousands of dollars, and people are falling over each other to get to see a little Dutchman come over and take charge of a little ship. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Applause at what? Because he is a Dutchman? It appears later what it was for and why it was.

What difference does it make whether he is Prince Henry or not? There are thousands of citizens of this Republic following the plow as noble, as honest, as intelligent as Prince Henry or Prince Anybody Else. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Well, they are not visiting us, my friend; that is the trouble. They are here. They are the hosts and not the guests.

He says further:

Why do the American people give heed to this foolish and disgraceful flunkyism enacted by the present Administration? What difference does it make to us whether he is a brother of the Emperor, a sister of the Emperor, or a mother of the Emperor? It is evidence of our good will they say. What do we care about the good will of the German people?

Perhaps not at this season of the year. Later in the fall, when the frost begins to fall and persimmons are ripe, some of us are somewhat anxious about "these German people." [Laughter.] And we do not always call them "little Dutchmen," and we do not always applaud on the Democratic side at that season of the year, when they are attacked.

Let us treat them politely, as one honest man treats another; but why should we bow down to these people any more than to any other citizens?

Now, this is the language of the gentleman, which, I think, on reflection, he will hardly stand by. Then came a question between the gentleman and myself as to a matter of history, I saying that the Prince of Wales in 1860 was received officially by the Government of the United States and given a state dinner in the White House. The gentleman had never heard of it, apparently. Of course I am bound to presume that he had not. He was not born at that time, and he had not read that history of the great Administration of the last Democratic President back of Grover Cleveland. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.] And so he disputed my word, and it was a question of veracity, although the gentleman finally said that he put it only upon the ground that he did not believe it.

Mr. WHEELER. Now, Mr. Chairman, I said nothing of the sort.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Well, I beg the gentleman's pardon. I have his exact words. That was the language that I understood he had used, but he did not use exactly that language. I will give him the benefit of that, of course.

Mr. WHEELER. I remember with perfect distinctness what I did say.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I quote further:

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Does the gentleman criticise the Democratic Administration of James Buchanan in receiving the Prince of Wales?

Mr. WHEELER. That is a very different thing. Not at all, not at all, that is a very different thing. We received him not as we are receiving this man, if I recollect right, but he came as the official head of his Government.

Mr. GROSVENOR. On the contrary, he came under another name, and the attendant that was with him came incognito also, coming as a mere private citizen, and was taken charge of by the Government during his entire stay in the United States, and dined at the White House by a Democratic President at a time when Democracy meant something.

Mr. WHEELER. If the gentleman is correct, then I condemn in unmeasured terms the attitude of that Democratic Administration.

Mr. WHEELER. That is a very different thing.

Mr. GROSVENOR. All right.

Mr. WHEELER. But I do not condemn it, because I know the gentleman's facility for manufacturing history when it suits his purpose on the floor. I deny his premises, and I insist, Mr. Chairman, that we are all doing wrong.

Mr. WHEELER. Now, if the gentleman will permit me, at the time that colloquy took place, there was great confusion in the House, as many will remember, and the Chairman was rapping for order. I did not say that I denied his premises. What I did say was "if the gentleman is correct, then I condemn it in unmeasured terms, but I am unwilling to accept the gentleman's statement in view of the facility with which he manufactures history to suit his purposes on this floor."

Mr. GROSVENOR. Well, I am trying to get at the facts, so the House can judge who it is that manufactures history on the floor of the House. The Prince of Wales, under the title of Lord Renfrew, landed in this country in September, 1860. He came here at the invitation of James Buchanan, President of the United States.

He had already planned a tour of Canada, but was not coming to the United States; and Mr. Buchanan wrote a letter to Queen Victoria, which I will put in the RECORD, if there is no objection, inviting him to become the guest of the United States. He was a boy of 19, traveling in a private capacity, representing nothing but a boy's interest in coming to the United States, and in a letter from the Queen, dated June 22, 1860, among other things she said:

The Prince of Wales will drop all royal state on leaving my dominions and travel under the name of Lord Renfrew, as he has done when traveling on the Continent of Europe.

The Queen accepted the invitation of the President, and the Prince first appeared in the city of Niagara. I was present, for I looked upon him with great interest. His first public reception in the United States after leaving Niagara was made at Detroit. Then he came to Chicago, presided over at that time, as I believe, by a good Democratic mayor, and he was received with high honors and distinction. In the short time I have I can not go into the details of it, though I must describe one of the receptions he had. He came to St. Louis, a Democratic city, and was there received by the mayor, and given the freedom of the city, and everything that could be done was done for his entertainment. Then at Cincinnati he was received by the mayor of the city and the Hon. R. B. Bowler, father of the gentleman who was since that time a Democratic Comptroller of the Treasury of the United States.

Then at Pittsburg, by the mayor; again at Harrisburg, by the mayor and the governor of the State of Pennsylvania. Then he came to Washington, where there was a Democratic Administration, pure and simple. It was an old school Democratic Administration, and Lewis Cass was its prophet. He was Secretary of State, and he was sent by President Buchanan to the station to meet this boy, the representative of a kindred people, and he was escorted by General Cass into the city. He was received by the President of the United States with an affection bordering upon a father's. I will not, for the present purpose, my time being so limited, undertake to read any considerable portion of it, but "he was received at the threshold of the White House by the President."

He did not wait for him to be brought in and introduced in a formal way, as is to be done with Prince Henry. But he met him with open arms extended, like as the old fellow did when the son came back from an exploration of another country. The fatted calf was all ready, waiting for his entertainment.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. The prodigal son. [Laughter.]

Mr. WHEELER. What book is that?

Mr. GROSVENOR. The first quotation?

Mr. WHEELER. The last one.

Mr. GROSVENOR. This is a book the gentleman evidently does not know. I am making it a part of my speech, so that the gentleman can get posted on the subject.

He was received at the threshold of the White House by President Buchanan, who looked composed as usual. He shook him by the hand in the most fatherly manner imaginable and like one who knew his guest well. It was just such a hearty welcome as a rich old bachelor uncle would give to the nephew he intended to make his heir.

He then introduced him to Miss Harriet Lane, the lady of the White House, and that night he was given a State dinner, at which the Cabinet ministers and their wives and Lord Lyons and his first secretary of legation and two or three others attended. The next day, the account continues, Mr. Buchanan took his entire Cabinet and took the Prince and his retinue and put them on the Harriet Lane, a Government cutter, and took them to Mount Vernon to the grave of Washington, bringing them back here. Then the Prince was shown all over the city of Washington, shown the two Houses of Congress, although not in session, and was shown everything in the Chambers. Then he made a detour to Richmond, where he was received by the governor and shown every possible attention that could have been shown to General Lee had he been alive. Then they brought him back, and he had receptions at Baltimore and Philadelphia; then went to New York, where a great ball was given to him, and where the Democratic mayor, Wood, took charge of him.

The governor of New York received him, and during that time the Harriet Lane was making her way around the country and arrived in New York, and took the Prince and his retinue, and carried them up to West Point in the Government ship. He went to Boston, and so on around the country. It is not worth while to go into it any further than I have gone. The Administration invited him to come to this country, and nobody ever made a protest against it that I have heard up to this time. The President invited him to become the guest of the United States. He was a boy of 19, and he simply represented, as his mother said, nothing, save that the time might come when he might sit upon the throne of England, and every honor was given to him, and all the country said "Amen" to that, and nothing short of that would have been admitted by any man in this country as a proper discharge of plain duty.

Now, what have we? The brother of the Emperor of Germany, not a Dutchman; a German, a Teuton of the Teutonic race. You have been perhaps misguided on the subject in these South African Boer days. [Laughter.] That is where the Dutch live. But he is a German. He is admiral of the German navy. This is the gentleman that went over to the bay of Manila after the capture of the Spanish fleet. He was with the German fleet when Dewey gained his great praise for the signal manner he did his duty after the capture, and there had been a little misunderstanding, and Dewey said to Admiral Diederichs that if he did not take his ship out of the range of his guns he might have trouble, and the German admiral took them out like a gentleman and offered a full apology for the misunderstanding he had on the subject, all of which was approved by the prince admiral upon his arrival. He is the highest officer of the German navy, coming here of his own suggestion upon a friendly mission without any invitation from the President of the United States, and I want to know if up in the headwaters of the streams that my friend so ably represents on this floor there lives anybody that would have his President, the President of his country, refuse to be a gentleman under circumstances like that. [Great applause on the Republican side.]

He is coming to be received in the city of New York; he is coming to be received in the city of Washington. He will be received as a public character representing the high position he occupies would be received, though he came from a country that was not a "little Dutch" country.

Mr. WHEELER. Will the gentleman allow me to answer some of his interrogatories?

Mr. GROSVENOR. No; I am trying to make my speech. I am putting some part of it into interrogatories, but the gentleman can answer them at a future time. He is to receive the honors due a gentleman of that high character. He is to receive a degree at Harvard University. He is to have a reception there and all over the country. I imagine these will afford a great deal of pleasure to the people, and they will be glad that our nation and its President know how to receive a foreign gentleman of such high distinction and treat him as one gentleman ought to treat another.

The following is the letter of the President to the Queen, inviting the visit of the Prince:

To Her Majesty QUEEN VICTORIA:

I have learned from the public journals that the Prince of Wales is about to visit Your Majesty's North American dominions. Should it be the intention of His Royal Highness to extend his visit to the United States, I need not say how happy I should be to give him a cordial welcome to Washington.

You may be well assured that everywhere in this country he will be greeted by the American people in such a manner as can not fail to prove gratifying to Your Majesty. In this they will manifest their deep sense of your domestic virtues, as well as their convictions of your merits as a wise patriot and constitutional sovereign.

Your Majesty's most obedient servant,

JAMES BUCHANAN.

WASHINGTON, June 4, 1860.

The Queen's reply is as follows:

BUCKINGHAM PALACE, June 22, 1860.

MY GOOD FRIEND: I have been much gratified at the feeling which prompted you to write to me, inviting the Prince of Wales to come to Washington. He intends to return from Canada through the United States, and it will give him great pleasure to have an opportunity of testifying to you in person that these feelings are fully reciprocated by him. He will thus be able, at the same time, to mark the respect which he entertains for the Chief Magistrate of a great and friendly State and kindred nation.

The Prince of Wales will drop all royal state on leaving my dominions, and travel under the name of Lord Renfrew, as he has done when traveling on the Continent of Europe.

The Prince Consort wishes to be kindly remembered to you.

I remain, ever your good friend,

VICTORIA R.

The following is copied from a book entitled "Royalty in the New World; or, the Prince of Wales in America," by Kinahan Cornwallis. The writer accompanied the Prince of Wales and was an accredited correspondent of the New York Herald:

He was received at the threshold of the White House by President Buchanan, who looked as composed as usual. He shook him by the hand in the most fatherly manner imaginable, and like one who knew his guest well. It was just such a hearty welcome as a rich old bachelor uncle would give to the nephew he intended to make his heir. There was, consequently, no mistake about its sincerity.

Of course it was not long before he introduced his niece, Miss Lane, to his illustrious guest, and the blush of beauty stole across her features as she echoed the old man's greeting, more inwardly, however, than aloud.

In the course of an hour after this the grounds of the White House presented a gay scene. The President, with the Prince and suite, and nearly a hundred ladies and gentlemen, composed of the élite of Washington society, were out walking and enjoying the pleasures of fresh air, a fine view, and cheerful conversation. Meanwhile the boys and girls from the back streets were enjoying their part in the world's great show by grinning at them through the gate railings and other places in the distance, which latter, no doubt, lent enchantment to the view.

Dinner followed at the Presidential Mansion, the company, in addition to the royal party, consisting of Cabinet ministers and their wives, Lord Lyons and his first secretary of legation, and two or three others.

It was about 11 on the next morning when the Prince, accompanied by Lord Lyons, Secretary Floyd, and others, drove up to the eastern front of the Capitol, where he was received by the Architect and chief engineer of the public works, and by them conducted over the building. First they visited the Library, from which they passed by a private staircase to the Senate Chamber and the committee rooms, and thence to the Rotunda, where the beautiful paintings hung round its magnificent interior attracted their especial attention.

The history of Pocahontas was inquired into, and even the "Surrender of Lord Cornwallis" became a theme of pleasant conversation. From this they proceeded through the old Hall of the House of Representatives to the new Hall of the House, where the sides occupied by the Administration and opposition members were pointed out, and much general information afforded in answer to their queries. The Speaker's room was next entered, then the Agricultural and other rooms, the Naval and Military Committee apartments, and offices of the Senate. The party then viewed the Capitol grounds from the portico of the east front, and, descending the steps after half an hour's stay, drove back to the White House, where, at noon, the doors were thrown open for the President's reception in honor of the Prince of Wales.

I went in with the crowd of ladies and gentlemen, nearly all of whom were in their usual morning dress, a few military and naval uniforms excepted. Such a flutter of crinoline never was seen in the Presidential Mansion before; such a glistening of bright eyes, all having the one object in view; such a busy murmur of women's voices, all bearing upon the one theme, and that theme the Prince of Wales, who stood almost within hearing in the east room and on the right of the President.

I need not mention how Mr. Buchanan was dressed, for he was perhaps never seen either at breakfast, dinner, or supper in any other costume than a black dress suit and white necktie; but I may say that the Prince appeared in the same colored clothes that he wore during the morning.

It was evidently wonderfully new to His Royal Highness to see such familiarity between ruler and subject as he did on this occasion. It was contrary to his ideas of a levee for ladies to attend, especially when they all came up smiling in their bonnets and said, "How are you, Mr. Buchanan?" at the same time extending their hands for the old gentleman to shake, which he did with his usual warmth and frankness, so much so that if he had exclaimed to those he knew best, "Bless me, Betsey, how well you're looking," it would have created but little surprise on the part of Albert Edward.

The host of the White House stood on the eastern window side of the room, but not far from its center, and very soon the apartment, extensive as it is, became uncomfortably crowded, and the Prince showed signs of weariness of the reception before it had progressed half an hour. Many of the ladies and some of the gentlemen extended their hands to him after exchanging a cordial shake with the President, and this His Royal Highness evidently felt to be a great bore, although politeness compelled him to submit to it with a show of pleasure.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

[Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. SULLOWAY. Mr. Chairman, I insist on the regular order.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman from New Hampshire will permit me to have five minutes.

Mr. SULLOWAY. If the gentleman from Kentucky will pardon me, I want to say this: When the gentleman asked unanimous consent for a little time this morning, I supposed he was to talk on the subject of pensions. But he thrust something in here that has taken up half the afternoon, a matter that he could have spoken on when we have time to burn on appropriation bills. The result is that the little time we have assigned here to our committee is consumed, and we have got to stop, if I have the power to stop it, as a matter of justice to our business.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Will the gentleman allow me an inquiry?

Mr. SULLOWAY. Yes.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. The gentleman from Kentucky only occupied fifteen minutes this morning, and the gentleman from Ohio has occupied twenty minutes. Now, the gentleman from Kentucky wants five minutes to reply.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Will the gentleman from Kentucky be content with that?

Mr. WHEELER. Yes.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Very well, Mr. Chairman, I will yield, but I give notice that hereafter I shall insist on the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Chairman, had I known the history of the gentleman from Ohio I should never have ventured the remarks I indulged in in the early part of the day. I have been often at a loss to account for the peculiar manner of my friend from Ohio. I saw there was something different from most men; that there was an atmosphere that he moved in which I could not comprehend. The situation was never explained to my satisfaction, and I am sure it has never been satisfactorily explained to the House until a few moments ago. Had I dreamed that the gentleman had come in contact with royalty in his early life, and that his whole future was colored and his deportment changed by that incident, I should not have offended his sensibilities or his sensitive feelings on the subject. [Laughter.]

Now, at the risk of his displeasure and in the hope that I may be able to portray in a dignified way my conception of this controversy, I desire to say that I should be very much disturbed if it was supposed for an instant that the present occupant of the White House, or any other President of the United States, at all times and under all circumstances was anything but a gentleman. But there are gentlemen and gentlemen. I think that every honest man who pays his debts and obeys the law and fears God is a gentleman.

Mr. HILL. White or black.

Mr. WHEELER. Yes, white or black. I have seen many negroes whom I regarded as more princely gentlemen than many white men of my acquaintance. I always sought to treat them as gentlemen. But I do not believe that shoulder straps conferred by some foreign potentate, kid gloves, ease of manner, and perfumed person constitute a gentleman any more than a rough exterior, an honest heart, and a man who obeys the laws of his country. Nor do I think it is incumbent on the President of the United States, in extending a welcome to some visitor to our shore, that he shall forget that every principle of our republican institutions is hostile to everything that squints at monarchy, concentrated power, or the divine right of kings.

I oppose the suggestion that a man can be born great. I oppose the suggestion that because a man is born to a place under a foreign power that he should on that account be the recipient of flunkyism even by some worthy son of toil who has been elevated to the first place in the Republic, not as a creature of accident, but who by the force of his own genius and achievements has risen above the dead level of mediocrity. [Applause.]

And I protest in the name of democracy and republicanism, not against the reception of this German, if he be not a Dutchman—and it is certainly not a badge of dishonor to be a Dutchman, nor is it a badge of dishonor to be a German—I protest against the official reception of this German, if you please, leaving the world to suppose that the descendants of the people who established a republican form of government in this country desire now to shake hands with everything that stands for kings, for princes, and for potentates.

It is that against which we protest; and nothing that the gentleman has read in the proceedings connected with the reception given to the Prince of Wales by a Democratic President squints at the suggestion that Congress was asked to make an appropriation to entertain him officially, or that the Administration was too cowardly to demand judgment of its own people upon the question of making an appropriation for the purpose of entertaining him. He was received in his private capacity, as the gentleman from Ohio himself admits; and the President received him as "an uncle would his nephew upon whom he expected to bestow his heritage," so your report reads.

What would be the consequences if the present President of the United States should attempt to receive this German as a man would receive his nephew? I have no objection to extending to him every courtesy and all hospitality; but I object to the Republic of the United States undertaking to play the flunky at the feet of a little German prince; and I object to the United States sending emissaries abroad to whistle their fingers and dance attendance in the ante chamber of some Britisher because he is going to wear the crown, when less than one hundred years ago the predecessors of that man, acting through their military officers, sacked our Virginia towns, raped our women, and burned our men.

A MEMBER. And burned our Capitol.

Mr. WHEELER. And burned this Capitol. Do you tell me I am un-American when I oppose such a proposition? I tell you every American citizen, irrespective of party alignment, if judgment were demanded upon this thing, would say that our people should stay at home, and if we must be "gentleman" at the expense of being Democrats and Republicans, I would rather be an American, though I wore the brand of not being a "gentleman" from the standpoint of some European potentate.

[Here the hammer fell.]

CHARLES A. SHEAFE.

The Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union resumed consideration of the bill (H. R. 7432) granting a pension to Charles A. Sheafe.

The amendments reported by the committee were read. The first and second committee amendments were agreed to. The amendment of Mr. RICHARDSON to the third committee amendment was agreed to, and the bill as amended was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

WILLIAM R. UNDERWOOD.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3747) granting an increase of pension to William R. Underwood.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to increase the pension of William R. Underwood, late of Company L, Eighth Regiment Missouri State Militia Volunteer Cavalry, a pension certificate No. 685185, to $30 per month, he being unable to support himself by manual labor of any kind, the same being subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

The amendment reported by the committee was read, and agreed to, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of William R. Underwood, late of Company L, Eighth Regiment Missouri State Militia Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving."

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

WILLIAM H. PIERCE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3412) granting an increase of pension to William H. Pierce.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of William H. Pierce, late of Company G, Second Regiment Rhode Island Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment reported by the committee was read, and agreed to, as follows:

In line 8 strike out the word "forty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty-four."

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

THEOPHILUS GOODWIN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1622) granting a pension to Theophilus Goodwin.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Theophilus Goodwin, late of Company H, Fifth Regiment Delaware Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

ABBIE WEBSTER.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 5521) granting a pension to Abbe Webster.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place the name of Abbie Webster, widow of Byron G. Webster, of Barker's Illinois Dragoons, on the pension roll of the United States, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws now in force, and to pay to the said Abbie Webster a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The amendments reported by the committee were read, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Abbie E. Webster, widow of Byron G. Webster, late of Captain Barker's Dragoons, Illinois State Militia, and pay her a pension at the rate of $8 per month."

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill granting a pension to Abbie E. Webster."

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call attention to the nature of the report accompanying this bill. I said a few moments ago I was willing to stand by the reports of this committee, a great many of which I have looked over. But I want to read a portion of this report to show how liberal this committee are and how in some cases they are willing to depart from the rules of law or justice or right:

The soldier named in this bill, according to the records of the adjutant-general of the State of Illinois, was a member of Captain Barker's Dragoons, Illinois State Militia, from April 19, 1861, to August 18, 1861, when discharged.

The organization was not mustered into the service of the United States and was purely a State organization.

So here is a State organization to which this man belonged. He never was a soldier, never was mustered into the service of the United States—but did, according to report of the War Department, serve in West Virginia, under command of United States officers, from about June 22 to July 27, 1861.

A little over one month.

He should have been in the Army at least ninety days, according to the law, in order to entitle him to any pension; and yet they overleap the law and bring in a report here to pension this woman as his widow, notwithstanding the fact that he had never been mustered into the service, and was in the service only a little over one month. The report says:

The claim of the beneficiary named in the bill as widow of the soldier, and filed April 2, 1891, under the act of June 27, 1890, was rejected by the Pension Bureau September 25, 1893, upon the ground that, inasmuch as the soldier, or the organization in which he served, had not been mustered into the United States service, title to pension could not obtain under the act of June 27, 1890.

He had no standing at all, no claim under the law whatever, and yet they have recommended that his widow be given a pension.

It is shown that she possesses no property and has no income from any source save that of her daily labor.

I have no doubt that is a fact. A great many people have no property.

They say further:

Your committee are of the opinion that this beneficiary should be placed in the same position as those widows of soldiers whose husbands were mustered into the United States service, and it being shown that the beneficiary married the soldier prior to January 27, 1890, and that she is without other means of support than her daily labor, your committee recommend the passage of the bill.

Now, they take the position that this widow, whose husband was never a soldier, should have a pension. I doubt if he ever fired a gun or heard a cap pop, and yet this committee come forward and say that this widow should be placed in the same position as the widows of soldiers who fought during the war until the end and were honorably discharged. I just want to call the attention of the House to this report made by this committee here. I make no further comment. I am willing for the committee to pass it, if they desire to pass it. Yet upon the face of these facts men will rise on this side and that side and ask ten, fifteen, and twenty dollars more for the claimants whom they represent than the committee are willing to allow.

I do submit again that this House ought not in any instance to vote a single dollar more than this committee recommends, because the committee are investigating these claims; and, while I say that in some cases, under the pressure that is brought upon them and because of their liberality and their sympathy for the soldiers, they go further than they ought to go, I submit that when they come in here with their report, this House ought to stand by them and not allow them to be overridden by increasing pensions in this way.

Here is a case where the woman's husband never was a soldier. I doubt if he ever smelt gunpowder or ever popped a cap, or anything of that sort; and yet they say that she ought to be placed in the same position as widows of soldiers who fought throughout the war and were discharged at the end of the war. I can not understand why this committee should recommend any such thing as that, and yet they have done it. Now, I submit that the country ought to know the whys and wherefores of this pension legislation.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say just a word about this case. I know something about it personally. This woman who seeks for this pension was the wife of a man who served in Captain Barker's Illinois Dragoons. He left his home, his wife, and his small children, went into the service, chased over the mountains of West Virginia for some time, as the report shows, a little over a month, and incurred a disease there from which he died subsequently. This woman by her own exertions reared her family.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. The man died of consumption within about two years afterwards.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Yes; he incurred a fatal illness at that time, from which he died. This woman has done the best she could, has supported herself and reared her family, and now it is but right that the Government should do the best it can by paying her a small pension of $8 a month, and that is all this committee has granted. This man was a soldier and did soldier's work.

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

SELDEN E. WHITCHER.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 4488) granting an increase of pension to Selden E. Whitcher.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Selden E. Whitcher, late of Company H, First Battalion, Fourteenth United States Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The following amendments recommended by the committee were read:

In line 6 strike out the words "First Battalion."

In line 7, after the word "Fourteenth," insert the word "Regiment."

In line 8 strike out the word "thirty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty."

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Chairman, I also desire to call the attention of the House to some parts of the report in this case. Here is a soldier who has been pensioned at the Pension Department as far as the disability from which he suffers would allow, and has been given a pension of $6 a month. The committee come in with a report recommending an increase from $6 to $20 per month. As the bill was first introduced it was to make the increase to $30, but they have cut it down $10 and recommend that the amount to be given him be $20 a month. Now, it appears that this man was hurt in the toe. The report says:

The wound was inflicted upon the second toe at the junction of the first and second phalanges. The toe was nearly severed in twain at this articulation and at the subsequent healing anchylosis of the joint occurred.

In other respects the toe and foot is in a healthy condition, no disability resulting.

In other words, it was a little hurt on his toe. Now, they come in here, because they can not get any other excuse—because they have no pensionable status at the Bureau on which they can give him an increase—and he comes and shows this committee that he has a little scratch on his toe and works on the sympathy of the committee, and they recommend that his pension be increased from $6 to $20 a month. I submit that that ought not to be. I just want to call attention to that fact and see if someone will not have conscience enough to object to such proceedings.

Mr. RUMPLE. If the gentleman will look at the second page of the report he will find that not only has this man an injury to his toe, but he had a subsequent disease by which he is now totally disabled. He is a total wreck, and this is only to increase his pension to $20 a month.

Mr. CONNER. I would suggest to the gentleman from South Carolina that this soldier was shot while he was in the Army. The fact is, he was shot in the foot, and he has had ever since that time a great deal of trouble on account of his wound. Sometimes it has affected him to the extent it has caused him a good deal of pain in that limb, extending as far as the hip. I know this gentleman personally. I frequently meet him, and know he is suffering from the disease of rheumatism that is attributable to his service in the Army. I met him last fall and in the early winter, and he is practically disabled from moving about at times on account of rheumatism and injury to his foot. It is certainly a meritorious claim, and should be allowed.

Mr. TALBERT. I would just like to say to the gentleman that while the other disabilities may be attributable to army service, the origin of this little limp is that he hit his toe against something in running out of a fight somewhere. [Laughter.]

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. SULLOWAY. I move that the committee rise and report the bills to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. LACEY, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole, reported that that committee had had under consideration sundry private bills, and had directed him to report them back, some without and some with amendments, favorably.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. LOUD, from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, reported the bill (H. R. 11354) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I desire to reserve all points of order on the bill, Mr. Speaker.

PENSION BILLS PASSED.

The following House bills, reported from the Committee of the Whole without amendment, were severally considered, ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, read the third time, and passed:

H. R. 9161. A bill granting an increase of pension to John W. Taylor;

H. R. 9670. A bill granting an increase of pension to Aaron C. Badger;

H. R. 8954. A bill granting an increase of pension to Alfred N. Mosier;

H. R. 307. A bill granting an increase of pension to John L. Branson;

H. R. 1808. A bill granting an increase of pension to William M. Strope; and

H. R. 2175. A bill granting an increase of pension to Kephart Wallace.

The following House bills, with amendments, favorably reported from the Committee of the Whole House, were severally considered, the amendments agreed to, the bills as amended ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and they were accordingly read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT SELMA, ALA.

Mr. PETTUS. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 450) for the erection of a public building at Selma, Ala.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Calendar under Rule VIII is in order, and the Senator from Alabama asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill indicated by him.

Mr. QUARLES. I will not object to the consideration of this bill, but immediately after it is disposed of I shall ask the Senate to take up the census bill and proceed with it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill called up by the Senator from Alabama will be read.

The Secretary read the bill; and, by unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase or otherwise provide a site and cause to be erected thereon a substantial and commodious building, with fireproof vaults, for the use and accommodation of the post-office, and for other Government uses, at Selma, Ala. The building thereon, when completed upon plans and specifications to be previously made and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, shall not exceed in cost $100,000, including cost of site.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NOTICE OF EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, I wish to announce that on Monday, immediately after the routine morning business, I shall ask the Senate to go into executive session for the purpose of disposing of the Danish treaty.

PERMANENT CENSUS OFFICE.

Mr. QUARLES. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10308) to provide for a permanent Census Office, and I also ask that the limitation of debate under Rule VIII be dispensed with.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that the rule limiting debate may be suspended. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The pending question is on the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE].

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, when the special order was up yesterday I had the floor and was discussing an amendment which I had offered to section 5 of the bill. The object of my amendment was to confine the provisions of that section to persons retained in the employment of the permanent census. I stated the figures in a way that might be misunderstood, and I wish to restate them.

There are now 2,298 persons employed in the Census Office. There are 145 temporary employees, who ought to be deducted, and others, I suppose, who are being dropped from the rolls as the appropriation expires, but the result will be to carry over into the general classified service about a thousand persons. Assuming that 800 are to be retained in the permanent census, about a thousand to twelve hundred persons will be carried into the classified service, and applying become eligible for transfer to any and every department of the Government.

It is to that that I am opposed, because it seems to me that it constitutes a great injustice to the persons now at the head of the eligible lists, a position which they have earned by their own success in the competitive examinations. It would deprive all the persons at the head of the eligible lists of any opportunity of appointment in the departments during the present year, and that would force them over and compel them to take another examination.

The United States opens those examinations to all its citizens and requires that they shall pass the examinations before they can take a place in the classified service, and they are now confronted by a thousand or twelve hundred persons arbitrarily placed in the classified service, who will have a right of transfer, which will shut them out entirely from their right of appointment.

Among those on the eligible lists undoubtedly are many soldiers who under the law are entitled to precedence in appointment. They will be deprived of that preference because these transferred clerks will be in a superior position for acceptance by the departments.

It is on account of that injustice, Mr. President, to all these persons who have taken the regular examination that I desire to see the present transfer confined to those who are to be retained in the Census Office.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator permit a question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator from Massachusetts has always taken a great interest in this so-called civil-service reform. I should like to ask him if he has ever turned his attention to some plan of reducing the existing eligible list.

As an illustration, I called the attention of the Civil Service Commission the other day to the case of a young lady who had passed the civil-service requirements, and I was informed that there were almost 300 persons ahead of her. If she should live one hundred years she could not be certified under the existing condition. I called the attention of the Public Printer to a case where a young lady had passed an examination for that service, and if I mistake not there were some three hundred and eighty-odd ahead of her. Now, at the end of eight months more she will be dropped from the list and will have to take another examination and start over again, and the presumption is that she never will be certified.

And yet, notwithstanding that condition of things, Mr. President, all over this country, in my own city, regularly they are holding examinations. The money of the Government is being paid out and these boys and girls are getting on a list that amounts to nothing except to enervate them and make them good for nothing in ordinary service, because they are expecting a Government job when not one out of forty of them is ever certified or ever will be certified.

I wish the Senator would turn his attention in some way to a possible reform in that regard.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I do not think that there is any possible reform which can prevent American citizens from seeking Government service.

Mr. GALLINGER. No, Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me; but it strikes me when the eligible lists are of such a length further examinations are a travesty and nothing else.

Mr. LODGE. They are not made of length by the Commission, of course. The lists are made long by the number of persons who apply and who succeed in passing.

Mr. PETTUS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. PETTUS. I merely desire to ask the Senator a question. The bill admits all the clerks in the Census Office into the civil service. I ask the Senator if he does not think that eighteen months' or two years' hard service under a great organizer like the Census Director is a better qualification than a mere examination.

Mr. LODGE. I think it is an excellent qualification. I am glad the Senator asked that question, for it enables me to make a statement of one of the objections.

Mr. PETTUS. There is one other point I want to call your attention to. I wish to inquire of you whether the bill, if this clause is passed, without your amendment, would not merely admit those clerks into the civil-service qualification at this day. Would it put them ahead of anybody else?

Mr. LODGE. It would, of course, put them one stage ahead of all those who are on the eligible list.

Mr. PETTUS. Why so?

Mr. LODGE. Because they would all be in the service and the eligibles would not be there. The point the Senator makes about experienced clerks is one which I am very glad to have brought up, because it is for that reason I asked for the list of appointments.

Mr. PETTUS. Will the Senator allow me again?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. PETTUS. Is it not true also that all these employees have either been examined by the Civil Service Commission or by this harder organizer in charge of the Census Bureau? All of them, as I understand, were examined a year or two ago, or whenever they were employed.

Mr. LODGE. They have been examined, Mr. President.

Mr. CULLOM. Will the Senator allow me a moment?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. CULLOM. I simply wish to say that to my knowledge several persons who had passed the civil-service examination and made application for appointment in this Bureau failed to pass the examination that was required by the Bureau.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I return to the point raised by the Senator from Alabama in regard to all these being such experienced clerks. I think that is true of a great many of them, and I think it constitutes a good reason for their being transferred to the classified service and for employment under the permanent census. Undoubtedly all who go into the permanent census will be the best and most experienced clerks.

But where I think that rule does not work is in regard to some other appointments. For instance, there have been 19 appointed in the present month whom it is proposed to transfer, in the guise of experienced clerks, into the classified service. There have been 150 appointed within a year, most of them within six months, a large proportion of the 150 since October. Now, they have taken the places of experienced clerks and certainly can not be said to be experienced themselves. I think that is an injustice. I think it is unjust to those who have taken the examination in due course and who stand at the head of the eligible lists.

Those lists are large. The Government is bound, if it establishes a certain examination as a necessary requirement for admission to the public service, to open it to all persons. They can not shut up the list at any given time and wait until those lists are exhausted. They must give a fair opportunity to all to come in and take the examination, and those who pass best come to the head of the list and get appointments.

From six to seven hundred are appointed in this city in the Departments annually, and some forty-five hundred are appointed from the eligible lists throughout the country, so that there is a constant appointment from the eligible lists every year, and a large appointment from them. It is impossible to prevent persons coming in and trying to enter the service under that system. I do not know of any system by which we could get rid of the numbers.

I can refer to cases where there are no examinations. I remember that some years ago, when President Harrison was in office, the then Secretary of State, Mr. Blaine, told me that for 190 consulates he had over 6,000 applications, and it would seem that there must have been a number of disappointed persons when the appointments were made. I see no way of getting rid of the difficulty which the Senator from New Hampshire has suggested, and which undoubtedly does lead to a great deal of disappointment.

But the sole point I desired to make was in regard to what seemed to me an unfairness in this particular case, and that is the unfairness to those who stand in the classified service eligible for appointment, from six to seven hundred of whom will be appointed in the natural order of things during the current year as vacancies occur in the service. They will be all shut out, or may be all shut out, by this transfer, and they will be deprived of a fairly earned opportunity.

If all these thousand clerks were experienced and tested clerks, it would be another thing perhaps, although even then I think the injustice would exist; but many of the appointments have been made very recently, and cases arise like the one which was brought to my attention this morning. A lady came to see me who had been two years in the Census Bureau. She had the highest testimonials from the officers under whom she had been employed. She was dropped with the reduction of the appropriation, as many others have been dropped, and persons who have been appointed in the current month are retained. Now, that, Mr. President, is not retaining the experienced clerk. I ought to say that I had never seen the lady before and she does not come from my State. She simply brought me her papers because of what I had said yesterday on this point.

Therefore it is not the experienced clerks altogether who are going to get this transfer into the classified service, but a great many who have no claim to it at all on the ground of tested work.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for just a question?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. McCUMBER. I wish to have the Senator explain to me how all the persons who are already eligible are going to be crowded out in such a manner that the present incumbents of the Census Office may take their place. We will suppose that in a few months, or in the course of, perhaps, a year, all but about five hundred in the Census Office will be discharged. The Senator does not presume to say that all of these can be transferred in that time to other departments or that other than a very small percentage of them can be transferred?

Now, if they are once discharged because the work has been completed, will those persons who have been discharged displace the other eligibles? Can not any department when it calls for other help call for it from any of the eligibles? Could they be required to make the demand or fill their quota from those who had been discharged from the Census Office? I do not understand that to be the case, and therefore that is the reason why I have asked the Senator the question.

Mr. LODGE. I do not think the Senator, then, understands the law. The provision is that this transfers bodily to the classified service, we will say, some eighteen hundred or two thousand clerks.

Mr. McCUMBER. I understand that.

Mr. LODGE. Certainly; I did not say the Senator did not understand the present law, but the law in regard to transfers. We will say that 800 of those clerks are retained in the permanent census and the other 1,000 or 1,200 are discharged the day after the bill passes. They are all eligible for transfer; that is, not being separated from the service by any fault of their own, they are held to be in the service for the purposes of transfer, just as if they held the office and were actually performing its duties.

Mr. McCUMBER. For how long a time?

Mr. LODGE. They hold it for one year. Therefore, for one year, and that is the precise point, they are in the service for purposes of transfer, whereas the eligibles are of course not in the service at all, and can only come up on certification when a vacancy occurs. Then when a vacancy occurs instead of the eligibles being certified up to the appointing power, nothing is necessary except to transfer one of these clerks who is already in the service.

Mr. McCUMBER. Will the Senator inform me what proportion of those would in all probability be called for and transferred during the year?

Mr. LODGE. About 700, probably, during the year in Washington—that is, in the departments. The annual draft from the eligible lists amounts to between 600 and 700 persons. All those persons could be appointed by this transfer.

Mr. BERRY. Will the Senator permit me to ask him a question in this connection?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly; with pleasure.

Mr. BERRY. Who will determine the order of selection? Will the head of the Department select such persons as he desires out of the 700 or 800, as he chooses to obtain them?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. BERRY. How will it be determined as to who will be first selected by the head of the department?

Mr. LODGE. From the clerks to be transferred?

Mr. BERRY. Yes.

Mr. LODGE. He can take any one he wants.

Mr. BERRY. It rests entirely with the head of the department to take any one of the 800?

Mr. LODGE. To take any one of the thousand clerks eligible for transfer. He can take any one he is persuaded should be taken.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, there are two questions I should like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts for information.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. The first is in regard to the probability of old soldiers being shut out from the ordinary, regular, continuous civil service by the section to which the Senator refers.

Mr. LODGE. I said soldiers. I did not say old soldiers.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Well, soldiers.

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator refers to veterans of the civil war, in the necessity of things, owing to age, there will be very few of those; but the Senator must remember that there are a great many young men who served in the Spanish war, or who have served in the Philippines, who are eligible for appointment. I think there are quite a number of those who will come up.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. That is exactly what I want the Senator to explain. How is this bill going to make a hardship on those particular people?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly, as there is a percentage of them among the eligibles, it is fair to assume that that, as a matter of fact, will be the case. When they are certified for appointment, they have preference under the law. Of course, if no eligibles are certified, they never will have the benefit of that preference.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. That is true.

Mr. LODGE. If the transfer is made, the ex-soldiers on the eligible list have no preference.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. But if they are upon the list of the Civil Service Commission, do they not still retain that preference even after the passage of the present bill?

Mr. LODGE. Of course they retain a preference, but they never have an opportunity for its exercise.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. May I ask the Senator why?

Mr. LODGE. Because the thousand clerks who are eligible for transfer will more than take up the six or seven hundrend vacancies which may occur in a year.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I want to ask the Senator another question.

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Upon whose order or request are these transfers made? In other words, do the thousand men or women in the Census Bureau at once pass into the classified service or are they placed there at the request of the head of some department?

Mr. LODGE. They will be in the classified service under this law.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. They will be in the classified service exactly as everybody is in that service who has passed a civil-service examination?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly; they are in the classified service.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. They are in the classified service precisely the same as if they had already been put on the eligible list?

Mr. LODGE, No; they are not on the eligible list. The eligible list is composed of persons who have passed a civil-service examination and are eligible for appointment. These persons are already in; they have been appointed; they have passed that stage. They are eligible not for appointment, but for transfer.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. They have been appointed, but they are not on the eligible list?

Mr. LODGE. That makes no difference as to their eligibility for transfer.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. For the purpose of transfer, but not for the purpose of appointment.

Mr. LODGE. Yes. They do not have to be appointed.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. The head of the department must go to the Civil Service Commission and ask for a transfer of some man or some woman who has already been in the service for a year or eighteen months? I ask the Senator for information.

Mr. LODGE. I suppose, Mr. President, the heads of departments could disregard this provision. I suppose they could, but I am not sure about that.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I want to be right about this matter.

Mr. LODGE. I understand that.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. It occurs to me that the only effect of this provision is to put those who have served in the Census Bureau for six months, or a year, or two years, exactly upon the same footing as those who are in the highest classification, and have passed an examination for entrance into the service.

Mr. LODGE. There is where the Senator is wrong. It does not put them on that list. It does not make them eligible for appointment.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. But it makes them eligible for transfer.

Mr. LODGE. It retains them in the service, which is a very different thing; that is, they are one stage ahead. They are in the service; they are not separated from it for the purpose of transfer; and if a vacancy occurs and one of these census clerks gets a transfer, he is in; so he does not require an appointment.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. May I ask the Senator how a clerk can get this transfer?

Mr. LODGE. He gets a transfer by the request of the appointing officer, whoever he may be.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Then, as I understand the Senator, the appointing officer of the Treasury Department, for instance, can do one or two things under this law——

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, we can not hear the conversation which has been going on on the other side, and we should be glad to hear it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Senators will please preserve order in the Chamber.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. The appointing officer may do one of two things: He may ask for one of three of the highest on the civil-service list, or he may ask for a transfer from the Census Bureau of one of those clerks in the service there, under this provision. Is that true?

Mr. LODGE. I suppose that choice is left to him—that is, he can ask the Civil Service Commission for a certification of three names or he can transfer one of these clerks in the Census Office into his Department.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Then, in other words, there is nothing in this provision that compels the head of any department to take one of those men or women who have been employed in the Census Office to the exclusion of those who are upon the civil-service lists proper?

Mr. LODGE. That is a point that I am not perfectly clear about, as to whether this would compel the selection from those clerks or not. If it is to be left absolutely to the discretion of the appointing officers to do what they please, then, of course, they can take them or not.

Mr. ALLISON. Will the Senator from Massachusetts yield to me for a moment?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I understand the law and the regulations to be that the head of one department may call upon the head of another department for the transfer of a particular clerk by name; and with the consent of the Civil Service Commission and the department of which that demand is made that clerk can be transferred. I understand it requires the cooperation of the department desiring the clerk and the cooperation of the department dispensing with the clerk, and also, perhaps, the assent of the Civil Service Commission. But as to that I do not know.

Mr. LODGE. Yes; the Commission has to certify that the clerk was not separated from the service through any fault of his own.

Mr. CULLOM. I was about to make the suggestion which has just been made by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]. I undertook lately the work of getting a transfer for a clerk, and I found out that I had to call upon the Civil Service Commission for their certification.

Mr. LODGE. I think, if the interpretation of the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK] is correct, that the department officers have this choice, we shall all of us obtain a very minute knowledge of the possibilities of transfers before the year is out.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. The Senator will recognize that I have only asked for information.

Mr. LODGE. I understand that, of course, and I am very glad to give it so far as I am able.

I do not desire to detain the Senate any longer. My point simply is that it is important to retain the well-trained clerks of the Twelfth Census in the permanent bureau, but I do not think it is fair, and I do not think it is wise administration, to give this right for a year to a thousand or twelve hundred more clerks, some of whom have had no experience whatever, and some twenty of whom have been appointed this month. That, it seems to me, is unfair to others and would deprive a number of deserving persons who have taken the civil-service examination in good faith of the opportunity for appointment which they would otherwise receive.

This is all I desire to say on this subject, Mr. President, but I want to say a single word upon another matter before I sit down.

Mr. SCOTT. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. LODGE. With great pleasure.

Mr. SCOTT. I ask the Senator what experience those people on the eligible list have had? He complains of those who have been only a short time in the Census Bureau not having experience. Those on the eligible list can have had no experience at all.

Mr. LODGE. I do not complain of their having no experience. I was meeting the argument that they were to be preferred because they had experience. They have not had experience, and everyone who goes on the eligible list is also without experience, but he or she is obliged to be on probation for six months before a clerk like that can receive a full appointment; whereas these clerks, some of whom have been appointed during the present month, can be transferred, and they do not have the six months' probation, they never have had a test, and they never have had experience.

Mr. President, before I sit down I want to call the attention of the Senate to another point. I have prepared no amendment, but perhaps the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] has considered the matter also; and that is the provision in section 4, that as many clerks of class 1, copyists, etc., with salaries at the rate of not less than $600, are to be appointed "as may be necessary for the proper and prompt performance of the duties required by law."

I should like to have the Senator from Iowa, who has had an unequaled experience on all these questions relating to administration, state if such a provision as that is not wholly exceptional; if in all the departments of the Government there is not some limitation put upon the number of clerks that any bureau may employ?

Mr. ALDRICH. Will the Senator from Massachusetts allow me?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. ALDRICH. I call the attention of the Senator to section 7, on page 5, where there is another provision which allows the Director of the Census to appoint as many special agents as he may deem necessary.

Mr. LODGE. I had not noticed that. That is in the same line as the other.

Mr. ALDRICH. That is in addition to the powers given in the fourth section.

Mr. LODGE. I should like the Senator from Iowa to state whether or not that is exceptional.

Mr. TELLER. I want to ask the Senator from Massachusetts a question before he sits down.

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. TELLER. I want to know how under the fifth section—I ask for information, because I do not quite understand—how these clerks who are put within the civil-service rules will be certified to the different departments after they have been discharged from the Census Office?

Mr. LODGE. They do not have to be certified. A clerk who is or has been appointed to a Government office and separated from the service, as these are, without fault of his own, is eligible to transfer at any time within one year. All that has to be done is that the Secretary of War, we will say, writes to the Director of the Census and asks him to transfer to the War Department one of these clerks who had been discharged, and who, for the purpose of transfer, is still in the service.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to say that that will not be a very valuable provision for those clerks. There will be very few of them who will be brought within the civil-service rules who will get into office if they have to wait until the head of some department calls for them. If it is the desire of the supporters of this proposition to give these people an opportunity to get into the public service, they should go on to the civil-service list as if they had been examined under the civil-service rules, and then go through the same experience.

Mr. LODGE. This gives them something better than that.

Mr. TELLER. Oh, no.

Mr. LODGE. Yes; it puts them in the service.

Mr. TELLER. It gives them something better theoretically, but practically, so far as it goes, it does not give them any real standing.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator knows, of course, the practical thing will be that there will be 600 or 700 vacancies occur in the departments in the course of a year, and that we all on both sides, in the House of Representatives and in the Senate, have clerks in the Census Office who were appointed on our recommendation, who, after passing the examination required, were appointed to that office. Now, all those clerks who are not retained in the permanent census will come to us and go to the members of the other House to get transfers, and a large number of them will get transfers, I suppose. In that way they will shut out all the eligibles at the head of the eligible list, who, I think, deserve their chance during the current year.

Mr. TELLER. It seems to me that of course there might be influence enough brought to bear on the different heads of departments to get all these people in, but I should doubt very much whether they could. I am not certain now that they would have to get the approval of the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. LODGE. That will be entirely formal, because that is merely certifying they were separated from the service without fault of their own. That is obvious, because they would be separated simply by the failure of an appropriation. That will be merely formal.

If I may say one word further, the Senator of course knows that those 1,000 or 800 clerks are not going to be put into other departments in a body.

Mr. TELLER. No.

Mr. LODGE. They will go along one, two, and three at a time whenever there is a vacancy, and there will be a rush to get these transfers.

Mr. TELLER. It seems to me that if there was a desire to take care of these clerks they ought to be certified to the Civil Service Commission and then certified to the departments.

Mr. LODGE. But that would not put them as well off as this puts them now. This puts them in a much better position than if they were put on the eligible list——

Mr. TELLER. I hardly think so.

Mr. LODGE. Because it relieves them from all further examination. They are already appointed. This simply requires them to get a transfer.

Mr. TELLER. For a year, and then if they have the political strength to get some Senator or Representative to go to the head of a department and persuade him to call for them then they will get in; but if they do not have that influence they will not get in.

Mr. LODGE. I have been inclined to think, from the profound and general interest manifested toward this bill in both Houses, that those clerks have got a good deal of political strength on both sides.

Mr. LODGE subsequently said: Mr. President, I should like to ask leave to print with the remarks I made this morning a statement from the president of the Civil Service Association in my State without having it read. I ask leave to have it printed as part of my remarks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and that order will be made.

The statement referred to is as follows:

Some reasons respectfully suggested to the Committee of the Senate on the Census showing why the measure making the Census Bureau permanent should not contain provisions allowing the present employees to be put into other departments over the heads of candidates who have passed a competitive examination.

THE FACTS.

The facts, as we understand them, are these: Some years ago the Congress of the United States rejected the proposed amendment placing the Census Bureau under the Civil Service Commission, and passed the law in a form giving the Superintendent power to appoint nominees as he pleased and with such examination, if any, as he pleased. The members of Congress then, at the suggestion of the Superintendent of the Census, sent in certain names as nominees for appointment. These nominees far exceeded the number of places to be filled, and it was necessary to weed them out by some form of examination, and they were put through a pass examination and those less competent, amounting roughly to not far from one-half the total number, were rejected. But these examinations were not open and competitive, designed to secure the most competent that were to be had in the whole country, but merely pass examinations, designed to eliminate the poorest of the group nominated. Employment in the Census Bureau has never been open to the citizens of the United States generally, but only to that small fraction of those citizens who happened to enjoy or to be able to secure the favorable action of some member of Congress.

It is understood that the larger part of the present employees of the Census Bureau are shortly to be discharged because they are no longer required, and, if they are eligible to appointment in other departments at Washington, the same reasons which had caused them to be nominated for these positions will cause requests to be made for their transfer to these other departments. If so transferred, they will take precedence of candidates who have passed an open competitive examination, who stand, and who have for some time stood, at the head of the list, and who are equitably entitled under the law as it now stands to be certified for appointment on the first vacancy. It has been estimated by those familiar with the figures that if all the employees who are to be discharged from the Census Bureau by the gradual and necessary reduction of force be transferred to other departments, they will fill all vacancies that are likely to occur in these other departments, so far as Washington is concerned, for a period of between one and two years.

AMOUNTS TO SUSPENSION OF CIVIL-SERVICE LAW.

(1) Such a provision as this bill contains would amount to a practical suspension or temporary repeal of the civil-service laws for a period of between one and two years, so far as it touches the center of government. It is idle to have a law, with all the machinery for enforcing it, with a corps of examiners, a series of examinations, and a resulting list of candidates, carefully selected, when there are to be no vacancies to be filled. It is throwing out of gear and rendering useless an entire governmental department, so far as Washington is concerned.

IF THE LAW IS TO BE REPEALED, EVEN PARTIALLY, IT SHOULD BE DONE AVOWEDLY AND NOT BY INDIRECTION.

(2) If the civil-service laws are to be abrogated at Washington for a year or two, the issue should be clearly understood by the people at large, and it should be done openly and by a measure to that effect, which the people should fully comprehend, and not as an indirect result of an unnecessary provision in a bill to create a permanent census bureau—in itself an admirable object.

IS UNFAIR AND DOES NOT CARRY OUT PROMISES MADE BY GOVERNMENT.

(3) To promote those appointed by favor over the heads of those who have proved by competitive examinations their qualifications to stand at the head of the list is very unfair. Now, for many years the Government has been publicly announcing "Enter these examinations, pass them well, and you shall be certified for appointment to the first place that becomes vacant." It is now proposed that the same power which created this law shall say: "True, we promised that, but we now propose to put in, over your heads or in your places, a group of our personal friends, for a year or two; when these are appointed, you can have your chance." Apart from the disappointment of waiting so long, can these candidates, who have spent time, money, and hope in proving their qualifications for office, have any assurance whatever that, if this has been done once, it may not be done again, and that after this group has been transferred to other departments, some other legislation may not be passed providing for another group, and so on indefinitely?

BAD PRECEDENT.

(4) It is perfectly obvious that if this method of overriding the civil-service law be successful it will inevitably open a door to other like indirect attacks on the law every time a new group of employees become the subject of legislation. These groups are constantly arising under the various temporary-employment acts.

THE PRESENT EMPLOYEES NOT SPECIALLY SKILLED.

(5) The fact that the present employees are good employees and that under the admirable training of the present able Director they are doing good work proves very little, because most of the work done by them is very simple. It is understood that nearly three-quarters of the employees perform duties largely mechanical, such as counting, sorting, and feeding and tending machines.

IF SUPERIOR, THEY NEED NO HELP; IF INFERIOR, THEY OUGHT NOT TO HAVE IT.

(6) In reality, however, this question of their excellence and experience cuts both ways. If they are equally able, or more able than those whom they would meet from the country at large in open competitive examinations, then their present experience would certainly enable these experienced employees to obtain higher places on the competitive list, and consequent appointment, and they do not need this favoring legislation. If, on the other hand, these employees, in spite of their experience, could not come out ahead of their competitors in open competitive examinations, they ought not to have this favor, for they are obviously inferior to those open competitors, and should not take their places.

NO MATTER HOW GOOD THESE EMPLOYEES ARE, SPECIAL FAVORS TO THEM VIOLATE FUNDAMENTAL PRINCIPLES.

(7) Nobody contends that Congressmen may not select good persons to nominate to office. Our position is that the steady gain of the "merit system," or open competitive system, in public favor shows that the people of this country demand that office shall not be given on monarchical system of personal favor, but on the republican system of open competition free to all.

THE FEELING IN THIS STATE STRONGLY AGAINST IT.

(8) So far as the feeling of its own State is concerned, the association has made a decisive test. It sent out a number of circulars, a small part only to its own members, the greater part to leading citizens in all sections of the State, about whose views on the subject of civil service it knew nothing, selecting the larger part of the names from the lists of the Republican club and the smaller part from the lists of the Democratic club. Within forty-eight hours the association received over 500 replies, all but one of which opposed the attack on the civil-service system, and only one favored it. The number of the replies greatly exceeded the number of responses which can usually be got to any printed circular, and would indicate that the sentiment of this State is overwhelmingly opposed to anything which tends to injure the open competitive system. Moreover, the newspapers and several public bodies of the State have in general taken the same position, and so far as we have been able to observe from the newspapers in other part so fthe country this is the general sentiment shown by the press and the public in the country at large.

PEOPLE WANT FAIR PLAY AND NO FAVOR.

(9) Apart from any such test, it is obvious, from the nature of things, that the people at large do not want a system that goes by favor, but prefer a system which is open to all. The simple reason is that those who enjoy or can obtain the favorable consideration of members of Congress must necessarily be very small, probably not a thousandth part of the whole people, certainly not a hundredth part; and since the offices are so few in comparison with our great population, this one-hundredth will always more than fill them, leaving the other ninety-nine hundredths, whoever they may be from time to time, absolutely without any chance of Government employment at any time.

Very respectfully,

MASSACHUSETTS CIVIL SERVICE REFORM ASSOCIATION.
By W. W. VAUGHAN, President.

Mr. TELLER. I want to say that I sympathize with the people who have been in the Census Office. I know that is a good force. When the civil-service law took effect I was Secretary of the Interior. I received some criticism because I did not call on the Civil Service Commission immediately for employees of the Interior Department. I took those who were about to be discharged by the closing of the census work and put them into the different divisions of the Interior Department other than the census. I knew something about them. They were about as good a class of clerks as were ever put into a service of that kind in the city of Washington, I will venture to say, because they had been under the discipline and training of the Census Office under Gen. Francis A. Walker for three years or more. I believe now we could get a very much better force if we call on the thousand clerks who have been in the Census Office than we should get from a thousand clerks on the certified list of the Civil Service Commission. I want these clerks to have a fair show, which I do not believe they will get under this provision.

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. TILLMAN. I suggest to the Senator from Colorado that some of this census force that will be supernumerary, so to speak, will have a much better show than others. While we here agree to put them all on an equality by putting them within the pale of appointment without examination by the Civil Service Commission, it is very evident that the influence of individual clerks will secure to them a transfer, while many who have no such influence—they may have Senators behind them, and they may have Representatives behind them—will not have the same "pull," to use a phrase which is common here, with the appointing officers, and therefore we are providing for a system of favoritism in the making of these appointments which in itself is objectionable. If the Senator from Massachusetts is so solicitous for a purified and clarified and dignified and a decent civil service, I would direct his attention toward an amendment which would enable those people to be appointed on merit rather than on partisanship. Then I should be more in sympathy with his amendment.

Mr. LODGE. You mean these appointments?

Mr. TILLMAN. I mean the supernumeraries in the census whom we are now putting within the pale of appointment without further examination.

Mr. LODGE. Does the Senator mean to say that all these appointments in the Census Office have been made from Republicans?

Mr. TILLMAN. Not at all, and I do not mean to say that the transfers will all be made from Republicans; but I say here that some Senators and Representatives will get recognition from the appointing officers and others will not. Perhaps the Senator from Massachusetts and I will get our full share. I am sure he will. [Laughter].

Mr. LODGE. I trust we shall.

Mr. TILLMAN. I am very certain the Senator will.

Mr. LODGE. I trust, however, there are no two Senators more deserving. [Laughter.]

Mr. TILLMAN. I am glad to be found in such good company [laughter]; but I am afraid when the sharing comes it will not be shared even.

Mr. LODGE. I know very little about the political distribution of the appointments in the Census Office, but from what I have heard I think there is a very fair representation of minority appointments.

Mr. TILLMAN. I am satisfied that the minority—if the Senator will permit me—have got a more than liberal share; and I take some credit for that, because, in the framing of the Census bill, I assisted some of my friends on the other side of the Chamber in striking out a provision in the law, as it passed the Senate, which provided that not exceeding two-thirds of them should come from one political party, and substituting a provision in the law which provided that they should be appointed on merit and character and general worthiness rather than because they were Republicans, Democrats, or Populists.

But what I am speaking of now is that we have found ourselves in the position of having some very valuable material here to furnish some additional clerks without going through the civil-service barrier, so to speak, or climbing over or under it. I should like to see some provision in the bill which would enable these people to get into the Government service on merit rather than by reason of having certain influence behind them with the appointing officers. We know very well they will not all get places, and we know that some of them will not get any place, no matter how meritorious they may be or how valuable their services may have been, but that appointments will simply be made by the heads of the various departments upon the solicitation of this Senator or that Member of the House of Representatives, who may have the personal friendship or the political influence which will obtain the appointment, rather than the deserving qualities of the appointee. I hope the Senator from Massachusetts will turn his attention in that direction and see if he can not frame such an amendment, even if it gets voted down, as it is evidently going to be. You, perhaps, ought not to let them through, but if let through, they ought to be let through on merit rather than on a partisan basis.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, the provision in section 5 of this bill, as it now stands, seems to me to be very vague as to what will become of the employees now in the Census Office. According to its provisions all those employees at the time of the passage of the act will, if it shall pass to-day, be incorporated within the "provisions of the civil-service act approved January 16, 1883, and the amendments thereto, and the rules established thereunder."

I take it for granted that the intent and the purpose—and I shall be glad to have the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. QUARLES] who is in charge of this bill explain to me whether or not it is the intent and purpose of this provision—to incorporate those clerks into the classified service as the clerks in other departments are incorporated. I desire to know whether it is the intention to throw them in—if I may use that word—to the classified service by this single section, or whether it is intended that they shall be in the classified service as employees of the Census Office itself?

Mr. QUARLES. Mr. President, the theory of the committee was to put, immediately upon the passage of this bill, every member of this splendid force under the protection of the civil service. Immediately upon the passage of the bill every member of that force would thereby have all the protection of the civil-service act.

I think the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] is in error when he speaks of the slow process by which these clerks will be absorbed into the civil service. If I understand the provisions of this section as it is here presented, it contemplates the absorption of these clerks into all branches of the service—not departmental service alone, but the postal service, the Internal-Revenue Service, and all other branches of the service throughout the United States.

Now, there are appointed, as I am informed, every year in all these branches of the civil service between seven and eight thousand employees. My distinguished friend is somewhat inaccurate in the figures he has given to the Senate—unintentionally, no doubt. The number is less than a thousand who would not be permanently employed in the census and who would be open to a transfer under this act. Indeed, if this act should be delayed until the 1st day of March, there would be exactly 755 clerks or employees above the grade of skilled laborer who would enjoy the benefit of the right of transfer not only to the departments, but to the entire service throughout the United States. I will not, however, take more of the time of the Senator.

Mr. ALLISON. I am glad to hear the Senator.

Mr. QUARLES. I have gone far enough, probably, to answer the question, and I will wait until the Senator is through.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I believe as this section now stands it will hold out a delusive hope to the employees who are now in the Census Office, or else it will have the effect to greatly disturb the other departments of the Government. The object of the provision is to retain this splendid force—to use my friend's description of it—in the civil service, not only in the Census Office, but elsewhere. As I understand the general scope of the census, though, the 2,600 employees, or whatever the number is—we have it here in one of these documents——

Mr. MCCUMBER. Two thousand two hundred and ninety-eight.

Mr. ALLISON. The 2,298 people who are now employed in the Census Office are not to be retained there. As I understand—and I hope the Senator will correct me if I am mistaken—it is expected by the 1st of July, 1902, that a large number of these people will be discharged; how many I do not know.

Mr. QUARLES. The office will be reduced down to 800.

Mr. ALLISON. There will be within the civil-service rules and laws about 1,400 discharged from the Census Office by the 1st of July next who are now employed there and who are to be brought within the purview of the general civil-service law. Am I right in that?

Mr. QUARLES. I can give the Senator the very figures if he would like them.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not desire especially accurate figures, because I know they are liable to be changed between now and the 1st day of July or after that time. Therefore, I only wanted to know in a general way about the number that will be discharged. But it may be well to have the accurate figures, and if the Senator will give them to me I shall be obliged to him.

Mr. QUARLES. Two thousand two hundred and ninety-eight is the total at the present time of that establishment. There are 443 laborers and other employees who will not be within the purview of this act. That would make 1,855. On the 1st day of March there will be discharged 300. That will leave 1,555, and during March 500 more will be discharged.

Mr. ALLISON. Making about 800 before the 1st of April.

Mr. QUARLES. Yes; if this bill should pass at any time after the 1st day of March there would be 1,500, and out of that number 800 would be permanently retained. That would leave 700 who would be eligible to transfer from the Census Office.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, the 700 who are to be discharged between now and the 1st of July are indulging a vain hope if they think that any considerable number of them will be retained because of this section.

I submit to Senators that under existing law the clerical force in the departments is not subject to transfer to outside employment in the different States, either under the postal service or under the Internal-Revenue Service. There are exceptions to that rule, of course, but if they are so transferred they will take the places of other people who are already employed and who reside in the neighborhood where the service is rendered. That is especially true with the postal service. The idea of transferring a clerk in any one of the departments here and now within the range of the civil service to a position as postal clerk or to any service outside of this city in the Post-Office Department is new to me, if it can be done, and if the Senator knows that it can be done I shall be glad to have him give me the authority, because I want to have transferred a good many of such clerks, if I can find an opportunity to have them transferred into the service in other parts of the country, as many have applied to me in months past.

The 700 people will be discharged with a certificate of competency and merit between now and the 1st day of July. The 1st day of April the Senator from Wisconsin states as the date. I undertake to say that this provision will be of no material value to them (and so far as I am concerned, if I have any interest in it, I want that to be known to those who are seeking to have themselves placed within section 5) unless we go further before we finish the bill and provide that those people shall be transferred into this department or that department and take the place of the people who are now employed there.

When the war with Spain began it became necessary to employ a large number of temporary clerks in the War Department and in the Treasury Department, and there were employed there as temporary clerks 600 people. They were not employed under the civil service, so called. They were employed by the Secretary of War, upon examinations instituted in his Department, and were temporary. They were continued, I think, for one or perhaps two years as temporary clerks in the War Department, but they were gradually reduced in number, so that during the present fiscal year there are employed about 300 clerks in the War Department who have had the advantage of nearly four years of service in the Department, and who are still carried on the rolls as temporary clerks.

Now, for one I do not wish, by implication or in any other way, to say that those clerks, who have had four years' experience in the Quartermaster's Department, in the Commissary-General's Department, in the Adjutant-General's Office, and in all the ramifications of the War Department, who have thus become familiar with their duties and who have been sifted from 600 to 300, retaining, as I believe and am sure, the most competent persons in the force, and all of whom are competent people, shall have substituted for them persons in the classified service.

A year ago we were called upon in the Appropriations Committee to put these temporary clerks into the classified service by statute. It was not done, because it was hoped that the exigencies of the War Department would enable them sooner or later to discharge a number of those people, and we did not want to put them within the range of the civil service and hold out to them the vain hope that they might be appointed, when they would not be able to find other places.

The House of Representatives at the present session, in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, which is now pending in the Committee on Appropriations, have, so far as they could under their rules, required that the 300 people in the War Department shall be transferred into the classified service. This, I understand, has the approval of the Secretary of War and of those who are immediately employing those people. If that shall pass, and I am sure it will pass, because I believe if there is to be any transfers by statute those people who have served faithfully and have acquired the requisite knowledge during four years are entitled to enter into the classified service, and it is so with a similar force, though not so large, in the Treasury Department.

Hence I do not see where the 700 people who are to be presently discharged can find a lodging place under the civil service, unless it is proposed, in a larger way even than this bill now proposes, to substitute these clerks for clerks already in the classified service.

Mr. GALLINGER. That could not be done, could it?

Mr. ALLISON. I do not know. I will ask the Senator whether it can be done.

Mr. GALLINGER. I should think not.

Mr. ALLISON. For instance, there is a provision in this bill which requires statistics of mines and mining to be taken annually.

Mr. QUARLES. I wish to correct the Senator, because I know he desires to be correct.

Mr. ALLISON. Not annually?

Mr. QUARLES. Decennially.

Mr. ALLISON. Once in ten years. Therefore what I am about to say does not apply, perhaps, to that branch of the service. But it is proposed to take within the scope of this bill a considerable force now in the classified service as respects the annual statistics of agriculture, which work is now performed faithfully and well and thoroughly in the Agricultural Department. Now, if this is to pass, and we are to gather into the Census Office the statistical information which is now being conducted by other branches of the Government, it will necessitate the discharge of the skilled people who are employed there, because, I take it, it is not proposed, even here, that we shall go on and duplicate information of a statistical character.

Mr. ALDRICH. Will the Senator from Iowa allow me?

Mr. ALLISON. Yes, sir.

Mr. ALDRICH. The statistics in regard to mines and mining and these various other subjects are not to be collected decennially, according to this bill.

Mr. ALLISON. No, they are not.

Mr. ALDRICH. They can be collected at any time.

Mr. ALLISON. Yes, sir.

Mr. ALDRICH. Annually, or semiannually, or quarterly, or at any other time, within the discretion of the Director of the Census. There is no provision——

Mr. QUARLES. We can not hear what the Senator from Rhode Island says. We should be glad to hear his suggestion.

Mr. ALDRICH. I say these statistics in regard to mines and mining and all the other subjects contained in section 7 of the bill are not, by the terms of the bill, to be collected decennially, but at any time and all the time, whenever the Director of the Census sees fit to collect them.

Mr. QUARLES. The Senator has certainly fallen into an error.

Mr. ALLISON. I think the Senator from Rhode Island is mistaken about that. I will give my understanding of it.

Mr. ALDRICH. I wish to call the attention of the Senator to the reading of the provision. I shall be glad to be corrected if I am in error.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope the Senator will read it.

Mr. ALDRICH. It says:

That after the completion and return of the enumeration and of the work upon the schedules relating to the products of agriculture and to manufacturing and mechanical establishments provided for in section 7 of this act, the Director of the Census is hereby authorized to collect statistics relating to, etc.

Then he is to collect these statistics.

Mr. ALLISON. Yes.

Mr. ALDRICH. Yes; after certain things are done.

Mr. ALLISON. There is a singular provision here as respects mines and mining; and I may as well mention it now, as it has been commented on by the Senator from Rhode Island. This provision of section 7 provides that certain inquiries shall be made relating to—

Mines, mining, quarries and minerals, and the production and value thereof, including gold in divisions of placer and vein, and silver mines, and the number of men employed, the average daily wage, average working time, and aggregate earnings in the various branches and aforesaid divisions of the mining and quarrying industries until July 1, 1904.

I believe the committee have recommended the striking out of the words "quarries" and "and quarrying." I will ask the chairman whether I am correct. I have the first print of the bill. Is that retained in the bill?

Mr. TELLER. We ought to strike it out.

Mr. ALLISON. This provision authorizes the inquiries to be made as to mines and mining until July 1, 1904.

Mr. ALDRICH. Is the Senator certain that "until July 1, 1904," does not apply to the whole paragraph?

Mr. ALLISON. I am not certain, but I think it ought to be rendered certain. I have no doubt the Senator from Wisconsin will say that it applies only to mines and mining, because it is taken from section 8, which has been revived here and amended "so as to read as follows," etc. This provision gives the Census Office until 1904 to gather these statistics, and it fixes no time when the result of the examination shall be made.
